SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 14, 1932

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1932)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 826. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine claims of certain bands or tribes of Indians residing in the State of Oregon;

S. 1719. An act amending the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma to submit claims to the Court of Claims," approved June 4, 1924; and

S. 3655. An act to provide for the leasing of the segregated coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian Nations, in Oklahoma, and for an extension of time within which purchasers of such deposits may complete payments.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 2405. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims of the Eastern or Emmigrant and the Western or Old Settler Cherokee Indians against the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 3569. An act to amend the act of May 27, 1930, authorizing an appropriation for the reconstruction and improvement of a road on the Shoshone Indian Reservation, Wyo.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 208. An act to authorize transfer of the abandoned Indian-school site and building at Zeba, Mich., to the L'Anse Band of Lake Superior Indians;

H. R. 8637. An act to authorize the sale, on competitive bids, of unallotted lands on the Lac du Flambeau Indian Reservation, in Wisconsin, not needed for allotment, tribal, or administrative purposes;

H. R. 8898. An act authorizing the deferring of collection of construction costs against Indian lands within irrigation projects, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8918. An act to authorize the collection of penalties, damages, and costs for stock trespassing on Indian lands;

H. R. 10086. An act to amend the act of February 14, 1920, authorizing and directing the collection of fees for work done for the benefit of Indians;

H. R. 10161. An act amending the act of May 25, 1918, with reference to employing farmers in the Indian Service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10419. An act to permit relinquishments and reconveyances of privately owned and State school lands for the benefit of the Indians of the Acoma Pueblo, N. Mex.; and

H. R. 10884. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust reimbursable debts of Indians and tribes of Indians.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the approval of the Journal for the calendar days of Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, April 11, 12, and 13, respectively.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BINGHAM obtained the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to make the point of no quorum?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Connecticut yield for that purpose?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

PAN AMERICAN DAY

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, last year on the recommendation of the governing board of the Pan American Union, the chief executives of the 21 Republics of the American Continent by special proclamation designated April 14 as Pan American Day. Throughout the continent appropriate ceremonies are to-day being held. In a very real sense the celebration of this day is destined to become the outward symbol of the increasing unity of purpose and ideals of the nations of America. I deem it eminently fitting, Mr. President, that here in the Senate of the United States we take cognizance of this fact and especially that we visualize its deeper spiritual and moral significance.

As we review the period that has elapsed since the American Republics achieved their independence, we can not help but be impressed by one notable and outstanding fact. In spite of the temporary setbacks that have occurred from time to time, the century has brought a constantly broadening basis of inter-American good will and understanding.

I desire in the first place to call your attention to the notable record that has been made in the peaceful settlement of inter-American disputes. At this moment there is sitting at the Pan American Union an arbitral tribunal, presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States, to which has been intrusted the settlement of a long-standing and irritating boundary dispute between Guatemala and Honduras. The representatives of five countries of the American Continent are serving as intermediaries between Paraguay and Bolivia in the settlement of a boundary dispute between those two countries. Peru and Chile have settled their long-standing and difficult controversy relative to Tacna and Arica; Colombia and Peru have finally eliminated a long-standing and irritating boundary dispute. The citizens of all the republics of America may well be proud of the fact that the 21 Republics of America are rapidly approaching the point at which every pending international question will have been settled by the orderly procedure of mediation, conciliation, and arbitration.

As regards our own relations with the nations of Latin America, it is a source of real gratification to be able to say that the feeling of distruct which the Latin American Governments have from time to time manifested toward the Government of the United States has been in considerable measure allayed. But what is even more important is the fact that the people of our country are becoming better acquainted with the culture and ideals of the nations of Latin America, and, conversely, the Latin American peoples are moving toward a better appreciation of the purposes and ideals of the United States. Currents of intellectual understanding, to which the Pan American Union has contributed so much, have been established and the foundations thus laid for a continental system free from rivalries, jealousies, and antagonisms. By giving to the world the inspiring example of an international system resting on the idea of cooperation and mutual service the American Republics will best be able to fulfill the high mission which they are called upon to perform.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT CHANGING DATE OF INAUGURATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina ratifying the proposed amendment of the Constitution fixing the commencement of the terms of the President and Vice President and Members of Congress, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America fixing commencement of the terms of the President and Vice President and Members of Congress

I hereby certify that the within originated in the house of representatives.

J. WILSON GIBBES,
Clerk of the House.

Correctly enrolled.

CARTER TO CALLISON.

Delivered to the governor this 25th day of March, A. D. 1932.

JAS. H. FOWLES,
Clerk of the Senate.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

At a general assembly begun to be holden at Columbia, on the second Tuesday in January, A. D. 1932, and thence continued by divers adjournments to the ——— day of ———, A. D. 1932, a joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America fixing commencement of the terms of the President and Vice President and Members of Congress.

Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) propose the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, to become valid as part of said Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided in the Constitution in words as follows, to wit:

"SECTION 1. Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of said Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided in the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

"SEC. 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

"SEC. 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

"SEC. 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

"SEC. 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

"SEC. 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission." Therefore,

SECTION 1. Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this preamble and joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the Secretary of State, at Washington, to Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

In the senate house the 25th day of March, A. D. 1932.

JAMES O. SHEPPARD,
President of the Senate.
JOHN K. HAMBLIN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved the 26th day of March, 1932.

I. C. BLACKWOOD, Governor.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

This is to certify the foregoing and hereto attached typewritten copy of a joint resolution, entitled, "A joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the terms of the President and Vice President and Members of Congress," to be true and correct as taken from and compared with the original joint resolution so entitled now on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at Columbia, this 31st day of March, 1932.

[SEAL.] I. C. BLACKWOOD, Governor.

By the governor:

CHARLES H. GERALD, Private Secretary.

He also presented letters, in the nature of memorials, from 200 citizens of the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the proposed reduction in the compensation of postal and other Federal employees, which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented petitions of 350 citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 9891) to provide for the establishment of a system of pensions for railroad and transportation employees and for a railroad pensions board, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

TARIFF ON COPPER

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask leave to have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance an editorial appearing in the Deseret News, of Salt Lake City, Utah, entitled "Protect Copper with a Tariff."

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Deseret News, Salt Lake City, Utah, Tuesday, April 12, 1932]

PROTECT COPPER WITH A TARIFF

Interesting and sound was the appeal for a tariff on copper made yesterday to President Hoover by governors of 11 Western States and Tennessee, 5 of whom are Democrats. The petition was given the President in the presence of three Democratic and one Republican Senators. The tariff is becoming happily less and less a partisan issue. Both parties have always agreed on import duties for revenue, and practically every Democratic Member of Congress has exerted his influence to make that duty protective on commodities, raw or fabricated, in which his constituents are interested.

If the world desired to produce the goods it needs with the least amount of useless effort, the formula would be that every place should be protected in manufacturing what it is adapted to produce at less man hours' effort than are required not only to produce but to transport the same commodity from elsewhere to said place. But a great variety of reasons interfere with this, such as capital investment and the necessity of a nation's fostering certain basic industries. As a result this country and others have built up complicated tariff systems, the sudden removal of which would disorganize our economic life.

For many years this Nation protected copper ore and ingots with a tariff; but as our production grew into a competitive situation with the rest of the world, the tariff was withdrawn. It was always maintained, however, on fabricated copper to protect our manufacturers against the cheaper labor of Germany and other countries. At present this amounts to a 45 per cent import duty.

The justice of beginning again to protect the ingot copper is that in the last few years the world has developed vast bodies of copper ore in Mexico, Canada, South America, and Africa. This has changed the whole situation. We have in this country copper-ore reserves of 1,676,000,000 tons of 1.19 per cent grade. Of this, 640,000,000, or more than one-third, is held by the Utah Copper Co. The foreign copper reserves, which have increased since this tabulation was made, are 2,359,000,000 tons of 3.09 per cent grade. With limitless ore bodies and higher grade ore, besides cheap Indian peon and black labor the mines of Chile, Katanga, and Rhodesia have, of course, a great advantage over our own.

Copper tariff is not being urged by the larger copper producers of the United States. It would appear the reason is that they are owners of foreign copper to such an extent that their interests are more or less balanced. The Anaconda Copper Co. is heavily interested in the Chilean production as well as in the Greene Cananea mines of Mexico. The Kennecott Copper Co., besides controlling the Utah Copper, owns a considerable part of the Chile mines, and the capitalists who control both of these great corporations are associated in the ownership of the Rhodesian mines of Africa.

As Senator SMOOT remarked some time ago, automobile owners who formerly were strongly in favor of tariff said that they did not care whether tariff was put on automobiles or not. They are among those who sent $19,000,000,000 of American capital into foreign countries to operate factories. This same situation appears to apply to some of the larger copper producers.

If we are to live under a system of duties, then it would seem logical to protect a basic industry like copper, just as it is logical to protect sugar. Both of these in time of war must be available within the country that is at war. This applies, of course, particularly to copper, without which modern warfare could hardly be carried on. We now protect iron, lead, and zinc.

But from the standpoint of industrial prosperity this State and other Western States are actually dependent upon the copper industry for their economic life. This is not only because of the great copper mines but also because the red metal is an ingredient in many ores and its fair price would make their extraction profitable.

It is manifest that American copper mines must be protected in the future by tariff or by trade agreements between the owners of the world's copper production. Until we have developed further along the route of trade regulation it would seem safer to depend upon tariff.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask to include in the RECORD and have referred to the Committee on Appropriations letters and telegrams protesting against any reduction in the Budget estimate for Federal vocational education, under the Office of Education, from the following persons who are citizens and voters, all in the State of West Virginia:

J. H. Hickman, secretary West Virginia State Education Association, of Charleston; Leona Tracewell, secretary, and E. E. Church, president, Parkersburg Teachers Association, of Parkersburg; Fred Holbert, Upshur County High School, of Buckhannon; H. H. Summerville, of Lost Creek; R. R. Stout, of Lost Creek; A. F. Millander, of Weston; John I. Altman, superintendent of schools, of Janelew; J. V. Ankeney, State director of vocational education, of Morgantown; M. T. Morrison, president board of education, of Sutton; F. C. Waggoner, superintendent, and A. R. Parrish, president, board of education of Belington; J. D. May, president board of education of Sistersville; Mr. and Mrs. Dick Hayes, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Moore, and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Wilson, of South Charleston; J. B. McLaughlin, member of State board of education, of Charleston; M. C. Cook, superintendent of free schools, of Charleston; W. E. Hunt, president Elk district board of education, of Charleston; vocational teachers, Sistersville High School, of Sistersville; George O. Mullan, of Martinsburg; A. G. Snyder, president West Virginia vocational teachers association, of St. Marys; C. E. Lawall, of Morgantown; Pleasants Post, No. 79, the American Legion, of St. Marys; George T. Rowe, of Elkview; W. H. H. Douglas, of Elkview; Otto Cantley, president Elk Chapter Future Farmers of America, of Elkview; and Lena M. Charter, State supervisor of home economics, State department of education, vocational division, of Charleston.

I have a number of others, which I shall present at a later hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The papers, in the nature of memorials, presented by the Senator from West Virginia will be received and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3580) for the relief of Clara E. Wight, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 555) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 660. An act for the relief of Hamilton Grounds (Rept. No. 556);

H. R. 3909. An act for the relief of Helen Patricia Sullivan (Rept. No. 557); and

H. R. 5259. An act for the relief of Steve Fekete (Rept. No. 558).

Mr. BROOKHART, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4868) for the relief of George E. Casey, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 559) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3265) for the relief of W. J. Shirley, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 560) thereon.

Mr. COOLIDGE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1271) for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 561) thereon.

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5484) extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 377), and acts amendatory thereof, to ceded lands of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 562) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3638) to authorize the use of public lands for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes in connection with mineral permits and leases, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 565) thereon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8914) to accept the grant by the State of Montana of concurrent police jurisdiction over the rights of way of the Blackfeet Highway, and over the rights of way of its connections with the Glacier National Park road system on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 563) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2144) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant a patent to certain lands to Charles R. Thornton, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 566) thereon.

AMENDMENT OF RADIO ACT OF 1927

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 564) thereon.

Let me say that the bill as amended contains two provisions which are in accordance with the economy program that is being discussed at the White House. One is to combine the agencies relating to radio in the Commerce Department and the Radio Commission, and the other is to raise the fees to be paid for regulation of radio. The bill as drawn will, it is estimated, raise $670,000 per year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 13th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 1769. An act to authorize pay patients to be admitted to the contagious-disease ward of the Gallinger Municipal Hospital;

S. 2078. An act to amend an act approved February 20, 1896, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to punish false swearing before trial boards of the Metropolitan Police Force and Fire Departments of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved May 11, 1892";

S. 2496. An act to permit construction, maintenance, and use of certain pipe lines for petroleum and petroleum products in the District of Columbia;

S. 3222. An act to amend an act approved March 3, 1917, known as the District of Columbia appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1918;

S. 3634. An act to amend section 600 of the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1284; D. C. Code, title 5, sec. 122); and

S. J. Res. 4. Joint resolution to provide for the naming of Montgomery Blair Portal.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 4390) authorizing the exchange of certain patented lands;

A bill (S. 4391) to authorize appropriations for the completion of the public high school at Frazer, Mont.; and

A bill (S. 4392) authorizing an appropriation for reimbursement of Cascade and Hill Counties, Mont., for care of certain Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 4393) granting an increase of pension to Mary Coleman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NYE:

A bill (S. 4394) to aid in the reduction of taxes on farm lands and to promote elementary education in rural areas of the United States, and to cooperate with the States in the promotion of these objectives; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. TYDINGS (by request):

A bill (S. 4395) to provide medical services after retirement on annuity to former employees of the United States disabled by injuries sustained in the performance of their duties; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4396) to provide for readjustment of street lines and the transfer of land for school, park, and highway purposes in the northeast section of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 4397) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the rights of the Otoe and Missouria Tribes of Indians to compensation on a basis of guardian and ward; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A bill (S. 4398) granting an increase of pension to William Blades; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4399) granting a pension to Abram S. Workman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) providing for financing sales of wheat and cotton in foreign markets; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REVENUE AND TAXATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"SEC. —. That hereafter deputy collectors of internal revenue shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with the provisions of the civil service act of January 16, 1883, and the rules promulgated thereunder, and they shall hold office without term."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

H. R. 208. An act to authorize transfer of the abandoned Indian-school site and building at Zeba, Mich., to the L'Anse Band of Lake Superior Indians;

H. R. 8637. An act to authorize the sale, on competitive bids, of unallotted lands on the Lac du Flambeau Indian Reservation, in Wisconsin, not needed for allotment, tribal, or administrative purposes;

H. R. 8898. An act authorizing the deferring of collection of construction costs against Indian lands within irrigation projects, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8918. An act to authorize the collection of penalties, damages, and costs for stock trespassing on Indian lands;

H. R. 10086. An act to amend the act of February 14, 1920, authorizing and directing the collection of fees for work done for the benefit of Indians;

H. R. 10161. An act amending the act of May 25, 1918, with reference to employing farmers in the Indian Service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10419. An act to permit relinquishments and reconveyances of privately owned and State school lands for the benefit of the Indians of the Acoma Pueblo, N. Mex.; and

H. R. 10884. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust reimbursable debts of Indians and tribes of Indians.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message from the President of the United States submitting a nomination was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CLAIMS OF CERTAIN CHEROKEE INDIANS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair may lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 2405.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2405) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims of the Eastern or Emigrant and the Western or Old Settler Cherokee Indians against the United States, and for other purposes, which was, on page 2, line 23, to strike out "two years" and insert "six months."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate agree to the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ROAD ON SHOSHONE INDIAN RESERVATION, WYO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3569) to amend the act of May 27, 1930, authorizing an appropriation for the reconstruction and improvement of a road on the Shoshone Indian Reservation, Wyo., which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the act entitled "An act authorizing reconstruction and improvement of a public road in Wind River Indian Reservation, Wyo.," approved May 27, 1930 (46 Stat. 430), is hereby amended by adding the following sections:

"SEC. 2. In connection with the construction of such road, payment may be made for rights of way across Indian lands and also of the total irrigation construction costs and accrued operation and maintenance charges on affected lands.

"SEC. 3. Any funds provided by the State of Wyoming shall not be subject to the requirement in section 1 hereof for the employment of Indian labor."

Mr. KENDRICK. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS—AMENDMENT OF THE RULES

Mr. BROOKHART entered a motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 26) changing the name of the Committee on Pensions to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and defining its jurisdiction (submitted by Mr. BROOKHART on December 9, 1931).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be received.

PRECONVENTION ACTIVITIES—CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, yesterday I had occasion to make some observations with reference to press reports regarding what appeared to be excessive expenditures of money in connection with certain presidential campaigns. To-day I find quoted in the press additional matter on this subject, which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate at this time. I ask particularly for the attention, if I may have it, of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], who is the author of the proposed resolution to investigate campaign expenditures.

There appears this morning an Associated Press dispatch reported in the Baltimore Sun, which I read as follows:

MURRAY REPEATS CHARGE OF VOTES BEING BOUGHT

DENVER, April 13.—Gov. W. H. Murray, of Oklahoma, charged here to-day that money was being spent to "buy" Democratic convention votes for Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York, and spiked reports he was abandoning his own campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"I have made statements about the buying of votes," Murray told newspaper men. "I made them in private conversations. I did not intend for them to be made public at the moment.

"However, I did say that money was being spent in North Dakota to buy the State's delegation for Roosevelt, and I said, also in private conversations, that some money was spent for this purpose in Iowa."

REFUSES TO GIVE DETAILS

Murray said he did not wish to go into detail about these charges at the present.

"I'll take them up later, you may be sure," he added. "As for myself, I would rather go down to defeat in a righteous cause than ride the band wagon into Wall Street."

Murray was quoted last Friday as saying in a speech at Norfolk, Nebr., that $50,000 in eastern money had been sent into Nebraska to win delegates for Roosevelt. He explained the next day he had not intended to convey that idea, but realized later the audience had misunderstood him.

"I intended to convey," he said, "that Arthur Mullen, of Omaha, Democratic national committeeman, had $50,000 for the Al Smith campaign four years ago, and I was wondering if he had the same amount for Roosevelt."

Mullen stated at the time that less than $200 had been spent in Nebraska for Roosevelt and that he had paid it personally.

Mr. President, I respectfully invite the attention of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] to these additional reasons for hastening the adoption of this resolution in order that these charges may be gone into thoroughly by the proper Senate committee.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I solicit the cooperation of the Senator from Indiana in assisting me to get the committee to act upon the resolution at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should be glad to cooperate with the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have just listened with interest to the colloquy between the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] respecting their pledge to support each other to obtain a report on the resolution introduced by the Senator from Iowa providing for an investigation of expenditures during the campaign that will be conducted in 1932. I want to say to both of them very frankly that that committee is composed of a majority of Republicans, that the committee is controlled by this side of the Senate. The chairman of the committee is a Republican. The resolution has been brought up in the committee. So far as I am concerned, I have been anxious and ready and willing to have the resolution reported out. If I may indulge some advice to the two Senators who have pledged each other their mutual cooperation, it is that they persuade the chairman of the committee to call the committee together for the purpose of reporting out the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am not a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but I shall be very glad to do all I agreed to do and that is everything within my power to hasten the adoption of the proposed resolution.

WOMEN'S ORGANIZATION FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION REFORM

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Mrs. Charles H. Sabin, New York City, chairman of the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform, April 14, before the Senate Judiciary Committee, setting forth very briefly the principles for which that organization stands.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman and members of the Judiciary Committee, I am here to represent the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform, of which I have the honor to be chairman.

This organization is composed of 631,537 women, coming from every walk of life, representing every field of endeavor and activity in every State of the Union.

We are both nonpartisan and nonsectarian.

May I call your attention to the fact that the members of our organization have each personally signed a card pledging themselves to work for a change in the national prohibition law? In other words, gentlemen, I am not here delivering the sentiments of over 600,000 women, as many organizations do, merely because of the action of a small executive committee. I am authorized to represent each and every member of this organization.

Our organization was started on the 28th day of May, 1929, as a result of the realization that the prohibition law was a curse to the social and governmental structure, to the family, and to the home. For, after all, women know the conditions of the family and the home perhaps better than anyone, as they are affected by the atmosphere in which their children are growing up.

The following declaration of principle submitted by the committee on platform and resolutions was unanimously adopted at our first national conference in Cleveland, Ohio, on April 24, 1930—just two years ago:

"1. We are convinced that national prohibition is fundamentally wrong—

"(a) Because it conflicts with the basic American principle of local home rule and destroys the balance, established by the framers of our Government, between powers delegated to the Federal authority and those reserved to the sovereign States or to the people themselves.

"(b) And because its attempt to impose total abstinence by national governmental fiat ignores the truth that no law will be respected or can be enforced unless supported by the moral sense and the common conscience of the communities affected by it.

"2. We are convinced that national prohibition, wrong in principle, has been equally disastrous in consequences in the hypocrisy, the corruption, the tragic loss of life, and the appalling increase of crime which have attended the abortive attempt to enforce it; in the checking of the steady growth of temperance which had preceded it; in the shocking effect it has had upon the youth of the Nation; in the impairment of constitutional guaranties of individual rights; in the weakening of the sense of solidarity between the citizens and the Government, which is the only sure basis of a country's strength.

"The Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform records these convictions and declares: That 11 years' experience of national prohibition has demonstrated its adoption to have been a grievous mistake, persistence in which will constitute a continuing threat to our country's well-being.

"That in the removal from the Federal Constitution of a provision which should never have been put into it lies the only reasonable hope of relief from conditions which have become intolerable.

"That the Federal Government, exercising its power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, should protect each State in the enforcement of its State laws according to its true function.

"That the people of the United States who have never had the opportunity to pass judgment upon this question should be given such an opportunity and that therefore, that this may be accomplished in an orderly way and in accord with constitutional procedure, we urge the Congress to submit to conventions of the people in the several States, rather than to the legislatures thereof, a resolution for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment."

Mr. Chairman and members of the Judiciary Committee, this is a time for plain speaking. The prohibition amendment, however noble in purpose, has failed. It has made our Government authorities, Federal, State, and local, powerless to control the liquor traffic by license and regulation. It has deprived the Federal Government of hundreds of millions of dollars of needed revenue, and diverted these funds into illegal channels, through which crime of all kinds has been enabled to organize and finance itself on a scale hitherto unknown in the history of the world. These criminal organizations live and thrive in defiance of governmental authority, and their activities threaten, in constantly growing measure, our most sacred institutions and our homes.

Prohibition has not created crime; it has financed crime.

No one can pretend any longer that the prohibition amendment is effective to promote temperance or to stop the sale or consumption of intoxicating beverages. It has had 13 years of trial and the Government has spent millions of dollars in a sincere but fruitless effort to enforce it. It has utterly failed of the purposes for which it was originally intended and it is gradually destroying the authority of Government and undermining our institutions.

It has become the great resource of the criminal class and it provides the capital of the outlaw and the bootlegger. Those churches and the dry organizations which still support it have become, all unconsciously, the chief allies and friends of the outlaw classes, and the time has come to end this unholy alliance.

The question is not one of drink. This is a national emergency, in which the security of our institutions is at stake, and the choice is between law and order and organized crime.

These are the facts, and we must face them. The prohibition amendment is poisoning our national life, and it must be repealed.

Gentlemen of the committee, our organization is very, very earnest about this matter. We intend to strive unceasingly to bring about this great reform.

We all know that in every great movement of history the apparent cause has never been the real one.

If this were a question of more or less liquor, I, for one, would not lift a finger to change the situation. But we, of our organization, know that when history is written it will be recorded that this was a fight for good government.

My purpose, gentlemen, is to appeal to you to make it possible, through your great influence, to end a situation which is making of us a nation of hypocrites and demoralizing our moral fiber.

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9349) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, which had been recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations and reported back with amendments.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be considered first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senate has heretofore directed a 10 per cent reduction in the appropriations carried by two of the appropriation bills. In the discussion of the motion directing that such a reduction be made with reference to the bill affecting the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments, I announced at that time that if the motion was adopted I would consider that to be a declaration of the policy of the Senate to be followed thereafter with reference to all other appropriation bills.

The Post Office and Treasury Department appropriation bill has been considered by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. That bill involves over a billion dollars. On the basis of 10 per cent the cut would amount to $105,000,000.

The full committee met yesterday morning, and in view of the fact that the Treasury bill involves at least $108,000,000 for public buildings, a question was raised as to whether the Senate desires a 10 per cent cut to be made in that item. Also the Post Office Department appropriations involve a number of contracts for carrying the mails involving over $100,000,000. The items referred to involve altogether about $230,000,000.

The committee thought it wise to submit this question again to the Senate, in order that it might be disposed of. The subcommittee has held its hearings, and is ready to begin the writing of the bill. The Senator from Tennessee is ready to submit a motion that the 10 per cent cut shall apply to the Post Office and Treasury Department appropriation bill. So, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing, if it be agreeable to the Senate, to have the pending business laid aside temporarily in order to allow the Senator from Tennessee to make his motion, and to have it considered and disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to laying aside temporarily the pending appropriation bill for the purpose stated by the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

POLICY OF SENATE IN REDUCTION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will explain to the Senate that on yesterday, when the Appropriations Committee had its meeting as stated by the chairman of the committee, this question arose. It seemed to me that it was unnecessary to adopt a resolution directing a 10 per cent reduction in the Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill; but the committee, by a large vote, decided it wise that such a resolution should be submitted, and directed me to submit the following resolution (S. Res. 197):

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations, in its consideration of the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, should observe the policy adopted by the Senate in the cases of the Interior Department and the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriations bills, and report the said bill back to the Senate with amendments providing an aggregate reduction of 10 per cent in the amount of the appropriations contained in the bill as received from the House of Representatives.

Accordingly, in carrying out the wishes of the committee, I have offered that resolution and I want to make——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to say a word about the action of the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask the Senator to let me say just a word about it; then I shall be very happy to yield to him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee declines to yield at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I said before, when the Commerce, Labor, State, and Justice Departments bill came up on March 22, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, made the situation very clear. He stated that if the motion to cut down appropriations for those departments 10 per cent should be adopted by the Senate he would consider, and the committee would probably consider, it a mandate to proceed in exactly the same way as to the other appropriation bills before the committee. I thought that settled it, and I was perfectly content with that; but the committee feels that a resolution specifically adopting the same course in reference to the Post Office and Treasury Department appropriation bill should come before the Senate, and I am perfectly content that that course should be pursued. So I hope that the Senate will approve the resolution which is now offered, declaring it to be the sense of the Senate that a 10 per cent reduction should likewise be made in the appropriations carried by the Treasury and Post Office bill, just as was ordered in the case of the other two bills on March 22.

Why should there be objection to that being done? The situation in reference to the Post Office and Treasury bill was exactly the same as in the case of the others. The chairman of the committee has written to the heads of the departments involved; he wrote to the Postmaster General and to the Secretary of the Treasury asking them to outline how the 10 per cent cut could best be made. That information has been furnished; we have the views of the Postmaster General as to how the reduction may be made, and his views are before the committee. We have the views of the Secretary of the Treasury, and they are before the committee. The committee has taken testimony on all these questions; that testimony is now before the committee; and I think the subcommittee is ready to act, because the hearings have been printed.

It seems to have been suggested that we ought not to cut appropriations for public buildings. In my opinion, we ought to cut the appropriations for public buildings if it is found that that is the best way to make the reductions; in other words, the committee ought to take, it seems to me, exactly the same course with reference to the Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill that it has taken with reference to the other two bills. Let the subcommittee first go over the items and then submit its conclusions to the full committee, making an aggregate cut of 10 per cent; and then, when the committee reports to the Senate, let the Senate pass upon the measure in that form. I see no reason in the world why these two departments should not be put upon the same basis as the other five departments.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the claimed difference——

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield or would he prefer to proceed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment. I will have to yield first to the Senator from New York, who asked me to yield a few moments ago. It seems to me that, if anything, it would be easier to cut the appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments than it was to cut the appropriations for the five departments which have already been cut by the committee and one of them by the Senate.

There are in the Treasury bill some tremendous items, some very extravagant expenditures. I have gone over that bill and I do not think there will be a particle of trouble in readjusting it so as to take care of the 10 per cent reduction and provide just as efficient an administration for the department as we have now. I think there are extravagances in that department that could easily be cut out.

When it comes to the Post Office Department I think that we can proceed in the same way. There ought not to be any difference. It may be that the public-building items will have to be cut a little, and I am not sure but that they ought to be cut a little. I am not inclined to the view that we must go on with the construction of all the public buildings. There are several public buildings in Washington for which appropriations have been asked that ought not to be remodeled at this time; there is no necessity for it; and I have no doubt but that first the subcommittee and then the full committee can, by equitable and fair adjustments, bring about the 10 per cent reduction.

As to the Post Office Department appropriations it is said that a very large proportion of them go for salaries, and that is true, but there are many extravagant appropriations. Senators, that department is paying out enormous sums in subsidies. Many of our people are in distress and some of them it is said are hungry and starving; and yet this Government is paying out to some of the richest of our corporations vast sums in the way of subsidies. I will call to the attention of the Senate one of these concerns, which for carrying inconsequential quantities of mail on three routes receives therefor a subsidy of about $1,200,000. The vice president of this corporation which is receiving this enormous gratuity from the Government stated that his corporation was worth $250,000,000; that it did not have a bond resting on it in any way; that it was amply able financially to carry on its own transactions, and yet, under this bill, it is proposed to continue, under a void contract, in my judgment, a subsidy of $1,200,000 a year to a corporation that says on the stand under oath that it is worth $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 and owes no debts. It seems to me it is a matter that this committee ought to look into and ought to pass upon, and ought to pass upon in the same just, fair way that the committee has passed and is going to pass upon these other matters.

So I ask the Senate to vote this resolution through and make it certain that exactly the same course will be pursued as to the Post Office Department and as to the Treasury Department that has been pursued in these other departments.

I now yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator, but I will speak in my own time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. Now I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the thought that was agitating my mind during the progress of what the Senator from Tennessee was saying—and I am not speaking now in controversy with him as to his resolution—is this:

I labored under the delusion that the present administration had a perfectly definite idea in one single direction respecting unemployment, and that it had suggested that we embark upon a building program in order to relieve unemployment. I may be in error in that; but, at any rate, I have heard it stated again and again and again and again that we should give employment upon public buildings, and thus do what lay in our power to alleviate in some degree the great amount of unemployment that existed in this country—a curse to the country, as we all know.

Now it is sought by this resolution, as I follow it, to affect that building program, and at least eliminate 10 per cent of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no, Mr. President! The intention of this resolution is to submit that question to the Committee on Appropriations, and let it examine into all the facts, and determine what, if any, cuts shall be made on this matter as well as any other matter. There is no direction to the committee to cut a certain per cent or any per cent off the building program if the committee is of the opinion that it ought not to be done. The resolution merely refers it to the committee for action; that is all.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; but may I be permitted to suggest that the necessary result of what is attempted to be accomplished by the resolution will be the affecting of the building program?

Mr. McKELLAR. It may affect it to some extent. I do not know. I can not say in advance what the committee will do.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the point.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it will be submitted to the committee, just as the appropriations for the other departments have been submitted to the committee, and I believe a fair and just and equitable report will be made in reference to all of them.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does it not demonstrate, then, the mode of action that we are adopting to-day? Here all of us, or practically all—perhaps not myself, because I have not been vocal very often during this session of Congress—but all who have been descanting upon the horrible conditions that exist to-day in this country, and particularly unemployment, have been crying aloud for a building program which will take care of our unemployed; and that is one of the solutions suggested by the administration for this terrible distress of unemployment. Now we are going to work to eliminate some of that building program and increase the unemployment; so that while we talk one day about curing unemployment, the next day, by the elimination of a building program that will cure it in part, we increase unemployment. Are we not, therefore, in something of a paradoxical position and one that we ought not to occupy?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think so, Mr. President. I want to call the Senator's attention to two instances that fell under my own observation in reference to employment and unemployment in my own State.

A building was erected in a certain part of my State last year. It was let to a contractor who did not live in the State. I went out there with another gentleman one day to see what progress was being made, and my recollection is that of the 114 or 115 men at work on the job there were only 6 Tennesseans in all. I recall that in another part of my State a contract is about to be let. The lowest bidder happened to be a Tennessean. He would employ Tennessee labor and all that, but apparently the powers that be do not thing he ought to have the contract. He does not come up to some technical requirement that has been made; so the contract will be let to somebody else, and labor in my own State will not be employed.

I merely call the Senator's attention to the fact that if we have to make the employment feature the main feature I do not know where we are going; for, with the enormous deficit that now exists in the Treasury, where in the world are we going to continue to get the money to pay for these extravagant projects?

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not questioning, of course, what the Senator says about Tennessee, nor do I assert that the entire cure of unemployment is a great building program.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. We tried it out, but I do not think it has been very effective.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON. But the fact of the matter is, that is the position which the majority of the Congress and the administration maintained for a considerable period—that a building program would relieve unemployment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I think that was the case for quite a while.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON. Pardon me just one sentence. Now, after we have reached that conclusion, we take another course, wholly at variance. There is not anything wrong in that, so far as that is concerned; but instead of aiding employment we are sending more men into the ranks of the unemployed. Let us not, then, talk about the relief of unemployment by any building program if we are going to pursue the policy that has been adopted and is here suggested.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, Mr. President; I do not think the Senator states it exactly as I understand it, at all events. He may be entirely right, and I may be entirely wrong. There is not any purpose of overturning that program. The only purpose here is to cut down slightly the expenditures of our Government.

I now yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I would not rise at this time except for the fact that the able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has said we do not know where we are going.

I am able to say where the Nation is going unless some statesmanship is disclosed in Congress. We are going toward, and we will soon occupy, the narrow strip of land that lies between the devil and the deep blue sea. [Laughter.]

December is gone; January is gone; February is gone; March is gone; half of April is gone, and not one single bit of legislation has been passed looking toward relieving unemployment.

Mr. President, the Government of the United States owes no man a living, but it owes every citizen of the United States a fair chance to earn a decent living; and a government that does not afford that chance will soon disintegrate and fall, and ought to fall and decay.

Not a single constructive measure has been passed looking toward putting men to work. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] frequently rises to great heights of statesmanship; but he has risen to no greater height than the one he rose to this morning when he pointed out that it would be a reactionary, backward, foolish step to weaken our building program. The greatest economists of to-day say that a bond issue of two or three billion dollars would be easily absorbed. In fact, men by the thousands are looking for tax-exempt securities; and with the avails derived from the bond sales our road-building program could be speeded. Aye, sirs, we are six or seven years behind with the building program.

In my own State—I mention it because I am more familiar with that State than with others—public buildings are needed. Last summer I visited New York City to investigate the necessity for public buildings. I found there clerks crowded together in a small building. Valuable records, involving millions of dollars of Government money, I found boarded up and stored in places highly inflammable. This Government needs a building program. Instead of taking a backward, reactionary step and cutting off 10 per cent of the building program, we ought to add 100 per cent to it and set artisans to work everywhere in speeding up the program.

The Government in many places is paying extortionately high rentals for quarters now. Nothing is needed so much as public buildings. Now is the time to build them. The road program ought to be speeded up; and all of the silly, of all the reactionary things I ever heard of, it is now proposed to cripple the parcel post! About the only thing we have done for the farmer in 30 years was to give him the parcel post; and now it is proposed, in the interest of penny-pinching economy, to cripple the parcel post!

Mr. President, if this Congress keeps on with the course it has been pursuing, it will become not only the most unpopular Congress that ever assembled but an object of ridicule and contempt in the eyes of every American citizen.

I repeat, what did we do in December? Nothing. What did we do in January? Talk. What did we do in February? Spin words and weave language. What did we do in March? Talk some more. What have we done up to date? Talk some more; and now we are asked to make a 10 per cent cut in the salaries of our faithful employees, and a 10 per cent reduction in our building program. At a time when courage ought to infuse the souls of men, when they ought to say that America is sound, and the American working man has a right to earn his daily bread, and the right to demand the chance to earn it, here are men penny pinching and cheeseparing around to cut 10 per cent off somebody's salary, to cut the building program, to cut the parcel post! To say the least, it is ridiculous.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am just wondering where my good friend from Arizona would get the money.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator let me answer that?

Mr. McKELLAR. In one moment. We are $2,000,000,000 in the hole already—the greatest deficit that any government in all the history of time ever had in its running expenses. We are facing an empty treasury. I am just wondering where the Senator from Arizona is going to get the money.

I now yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is so easy to tell the Senator where to get the money that it seems like folly for me to say it.

First, stop this insane desire to retire the public debt at such a heavy pace. Do not retire the public debt in 20 years or 30 years, but in 70 years. That will please all the nations, and the bondholders besides. I have never been one of the men who have always brought an anvil chorus against Mr. Mellon. The greatest criticism I had of him was that he insisted on paying off the public debt too rapidly. There is $600,000,000 a year of saving.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator leaves that, does he understand that under the present arrangement as passed by the House it is proposed to quit paying on the public debt?

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. That is one evidence of statesmanship that I am tickled to death to see.

Secondly, Mr. President, the national income of our people is $60,000,000,000 a year. What is a deficit of two billions? I repeat that I can number and name the men by the thousands and the tens of thousands whose vaults are filled with gold who are anxious to buy bonds if the Government will only issue them. They are anxious to find some place for their excess and surplus moneys. If the Government would issue, say, four or five billion dollars of bonds they would be absorbed at par within a period of 12 days, and then the public-building program of our country could be speeded. Then we could give hope and assurance and courage to the people who are now plunged all too deeply into the slough of despondency and despair.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me a backward step, an extremely reactionary step to take, to begin to talk about whittling away and penny pinching and cheeseparing with respect to saving 10 per cent, and throwing some more men out of employment. I have heard enough of the philosophy of despair, gloom, and defeat. Let us have a note now of victory, progress, and success.

Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. VANDENBERG, and Mr. SHIPSTEAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield first to the Senator from California, then I will yield to the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I compliment the Senator from Arizona? He said some things here this morning which I think ought well to be said in this body, and I am delighted that he has said them.

We speak of the building program. If the Senator from Tennessee will permit me, I want to query him on another part of this.

Mr. McKELLAR. As to anything the Senator asks, if I have the information, I will be glad to give it to him.

Mr. JOHNSON. I realize that. First, we are going to recant, at least in part, the avowed purpose we had of curing, at least in part, unemployment by a building program.

Next, let me speak to the Senator, because he is much more familiar than I am with the Post Office Department, of the fact that 70 per cent of the men in the Post Office Department are upon salaries which can not be touched, are they not?

Mr. McKELLAR. There is quite a large number. I think it is in that neighborhood—65 or 70 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON. What you are going to do, then, is to make your 10 per cent cut upon 30 per cent of the expenditure; that is, I mean if a cut is made.

Mr. McKELLAR. I just want to explain my position very fully to the Senator. I am wholly opposed to cutting off the salaries of the lower-paid employees. Instead of doing it we might easily make this cut by reducing the enormous subsidies which are paid by that department, and for one I am in favor of making the reduction by cutting off subsidies rather than cutting off salaries of employees. That suggestion will go to the committee, of course.

Mr. JOHNSON. If that be so, may I suggest to the Senator that there is no necessity for passing a 10 per cent resolution?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. If there are specific items which are excessive, they can be taken care of, and upon the floor the reductions can be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. As to making them on the floor, the Senator will remember the fate of the bureau for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly and the microscopic insects and the birds of paradise and other bureaus which have been established. It is a hard thing to do, I will say to the Senator. If he does not think so, let him try it. He will find out how hard it is.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator is right; it is a difficult thing to do.

Returning to the Post Office Department now, about 30 per cent of the expenditures will have to stand the 10 per cent reduction that is made. In that 30 per cent of the expenditures, as I understand it, are salaries of certain employees and the building program of the Post Office Department. Is that true?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not remember the exact percentage, but I want to say to the Senator that if we cut off the subsidies alone, if we do not change another item but cut off the unjust, the illegal, and improper subsidies which are now being granted by that department to people who do not need them, people who are not entitled to them, we will account for every dollar of the 10 per cent reduction.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator does not say anything but about cutting off the subsidies. Name the men to whom these unlawful and improper moneys are going. We are anxious to vote with him, but these large, vapid mouthings about cutting off the subsidies do not get us anywhere. Tell us who they are, and I will vote with the Senator. But stop this mouthing about cutting off subsidies. Name them.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is difficult for anybody to do that while the Senator from Arizona is on his feet, because he makes so much noise.

Mr. ASHURST. When I talk I not only get on my own feet but I get on some other people's feet which ought to be trodden on.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is a very unfair and improper way of legislating. It is wholly unnecessary. I think we ought to keep our tempers.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the man who, in the peril of his country, keeps his temper, is a moral coward.

Mr. McKELLAR. I decline to yield to the Senator longer.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me now?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in just a moment. I promised to yield to the Senator from Michigan, but I will ask him to permit me to make just one statement about those who are getting subsidies.

I found that 44 shipping lines are getting subsidies amounting to $37,000,000. If the Senator from Arizona wants the names, I will give him some of them. There is the United Fruit Co., a corporation which has no debts, with two hundred and fifty millions of assets. There is the Munson Line. There is the International Mercantile Marine. Many of these lines fly foreign flags, some of them flying more foreign flags than American flags, not needing the money, getting their subsidies by way of loans from the Government. I am delighted to give the names, and if the Senator from Arizona is interested in it, I refer him to Senate Document No. 69. He will find in that the report of the Postmaster General setting out the 44 companies, the amount given to each, and the contract.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator move in the Senate to strike off those subsidies?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not only going to move in the Senate, but I am going to move in the committee. I have already moved in the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. I will take pleasure in supporting the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Now I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I would like to submit a thought to the Senator for his view. Yesterday I presented a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations suggesting a study of the possibility, if it might be advisable for 1 or 2 or 3 years to take all of the permanent improvements for which we are now proposing to pay by current taxes out of the Budget entirely and finance them on a long-time basis. I am not speaking at the moment of the large program the Senator from Arizona has in mind; I am speaking solely of the items which are within the existing, authorized Budget.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, the capital items.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am thinking of the entire $120,000,000 for the public-building program. I am thinking of the entire $40,000,000 for permanent development of rivers and harbors. I am thinking of the $10,000,000 contribution for this year to the construction of Boulder Dam. I am thinking of items of that character. Would it be unsound economy to take those capital items entirely out of the contemporary Budget and entirely out of the contemporary tax burden, except a share of the amortization of the prospective debt, and place them entirely upon a credit basis for the time being? Will the Senator make an observation upon that?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan has made a very valuable suggestion. I am glad he has made it to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I hope the chairman of the committee will invite him before the committee when the bill is returned to the committee for action, and that he be allowed to elaborate his plan.

The Senator from Michigan is a very thoughtful man, and I think there is much in the contention, and believe that when this matter is referred to the committee, under the direction of this resolution, the committee will give the most careful and painstaking consideration to a really constructive view.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest that in order to carry out what the Senator from Tennessee suggests would take legislation. That is out of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. We are dealing with appropriations as we have to deal with them now.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true, and I call it to the attention of the Senator from Michigan, so that he can act accordingly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. May I offer another suggestion in addition to what the Senator from Michigan has said?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be very happy if the Senator will do so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Let me call the Senate's attention to this fact, that we are trying to save the taxpayer now.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are trying to save the taxpayer now.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. His income in going, and is there any reason why the burden of these permanent improvements, for instance, the building program of $105,000,000, to erect buildings which we expect to stand for 150 or 200 and 300 years, should be placed upon the taxpayers this year, when the future generations will have the benefit of these capital investments in permanent improvements? It seems to be an indefensible proposition to saddle these taxes upon the taxpayer at the present time. I believe the running expenses of the Government come properly within the purview of the present tax program, but certainly the program of making permanent improvements in the vast amount the Congress has authorized, and paying for them out of appropriations now, when the taxpayer has such a hard time to pay the taxes at all, seems to me to be indefensible.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there is much in what the Senator from Minnesota has said. I think that when the program was begun, the income of the Government was so great that it was thought that these unusual expenditures could be absorbed out of the revenues of the Government. But in the last two years especially the income of the Government has dropped so considerably, from something like $5,000,000,000 to probably half that sum, that these unusual expenditures prove a very great hardship on the Treasury at this time.

However, it will take legislation, as the Senator from Washington pointed out a few moments ago, which can not be enacted upon an appropriation bill, but would have to be enacted as a result of bills coming from other committees, before a plan of that kind could be adopted.

I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that he and the Senator from Michigan get together on a plan which both of them seem to have thought about and see how it can be worked out.

I agree with the Senator that as to permanent improvements, such as many of those we are making, it might be very wise to bring about a different method of financing them, rather than appropriating for them out of a Treasury which has no money in it. We just have not the money. There is a $2,000,000,000 deficit, and it seems to me that as sensible men, as reasonable men, we must look facts in the face. There is nothing mysterious about it. The United States Government has spent all of its money and $2,000,000,000 more, and we can only raise money by taxation. In my judgment the best way to balance the Budget is by cutting down taxation to the last cent possible, without interfering with the proper functions of the Government.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, may I offer the Senator another suggestion?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator speaks of extraordinary expenditures. We have appropriated $500,000,000 to take care of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and we have authorized bonds in the amount of $1,500,000,000. I am not sure that even those which have been authorized can be floated at par; I do not know whether they are salable or will be salable. That is hard to tell. But we have appropriated $500,000,000 from the Treasury for that purpose.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The moratorium will cost us another $250,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is $250,000,000.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That makes $750,000,000 of extraordinary expenditures this year.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is a great deal more than that. There is $125,000,000 of aid to farmers. In this bill there is an appropriation of $108,000,000 for public buildings. In addition to that there are subsidies amounting to some $60,000,000.

In addition to that my recollection is that for air mail routes there is an expenditure of something like $35,000,000, which is purely an investment, if it can be so called. It is not an ordinary appropriation. Under these circumstances the Senator can see what a large field he and the Senator from Michigan have before them in which to reduce Government expenditures and help relieve the financial situation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator will yield further, I would like to invite his attention to the fact that the $500,000,000 appropriated for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is to be loaned to corporations giving security.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. We expect or hope to get that money back in five years.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not vote for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I did not, either.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am afraid we have not a very good chance for getting it back, but we live in hopes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If that $500,000,000 comes back after five years, as we hope it will, it can be used at that time to apply on the retirement of bonds which may be issued now to take care of permanent capital investment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that would be the theory of the Senator who offered the suggestion.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Generations to come, who will have the benefit of the permanent investments, should pay their share for the benefits received and the tax burden in these amounts would be lifted during the depression.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is much in what the Senator has said.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to say in the time of the Senator from Tennessee——

Mr. McKELLAR. I have concluded and will yield the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I hope the Senator will not do so. I prefer to say it in the time of the Senator from Tennessee, and I desire to invite the attention of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] to what I am about to say.

We are proceeding upon the theory of postponement of the debts due from Europe, which they should have paid us during the past year. We are in effect being compelled to raise money by taxation to make up that loss. That in effect is an unjust tax to put upon our people at this particular time, if it could be avoided.

The second thing is that we made an appropriation of $125,000,000 to be given to the land-bank system for a capital investment also. That sum must be raised by taxation. That is likewise an unjust burden to be placed upon the taxpayers at this particular time.

The third thing that we did was to appropriate $500,000,000 to place in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation treasury. That money is to be loaned. That is likewise capital investment. I hold it is unjust and unfair to tax the people at this particular time to raise that fund. I only use this for an illustration.

On the 9th of December last I introduced a Senate concurrent resolution covering this identical point. If I may have the further attention of the Senator from Tennessee in his time, I desire to read the concurrent resolution. It may offer even yet the basis for some constructive legislation. The concurrent resolution offered on the 9th of December reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in the preparation of the several appropriation bills the respective Committees and Subcommittees on Appropriations be, and they are hereby, authorized and requested to follow the procedure herein outlined:

1. Each regular appropriation bill shall be prepared to embrace and carry only essential and nonavoidable items.

2. All items for equipment, repairs, extensions, and new construction shall be placed in a separate and special bill to be known as an emergency relief bill.

At that time I could not foresee any of these items, but now it occurs to me that the items I have mentioned should be placed or could have been placed in this kind of a measure.

3. Funds for the purpose of meeting the cost of such equipment, repairs, extensions, and new construction, as estimated for and as appropriated, shall be raised by a special issue and sale of bonds to be known as emergency relief bonds.

If I may, I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan whether or not this is in line with the thought he expressed on the floor a short time ago?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think it is precisely in line so long as the Senator is discussing authorized projects.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I had nothing else in mind when I introduced the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that he probably realized then and, of course, realizes now that whatever is done along that line will have to be done through legislation somewhat on the order of that which he has proposed. The Committee on Appropriations have the duty imposed upon them to appropriate under the law, and so any action would not affect the present situation unless it became the law before the committee acts.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Frankness causes me to state that the concurrent resolution was referred to what is known on our side of the aisle as the policy committee. For some reason it did not meet with action at the hands of that committee. It not having appealed to those on my side of the aisle, I did not see fit to call it to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will confer with the Senator from Michigan and propose some plan that might be very helpful in the emergency.

I hope the Senate will vote, as it has done on two former occasions, to pass the resolution recommitting the Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Johnson	Reed
Austin	Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Bankhead	Dale	Kendrick	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	Keyes	Shipstead
Barkley	Dill	La Follette	Smoot
Bingham	Fess	Lewis	Steiwer
Black	Fletcher	Logan	Thomas, Idaho
Blaine	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	George	McKellar	Townsend
Bratton	Glass	McNary	Trammell
Brookhart	Glenn	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Morrison	Vandenberg
Bulow	Hale	Moses	Wagner
Byrnes	Harrison	Neely	Walcott
Capper	Hastings	Norbeck	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Hatfield	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Carey	Hayden	Nye	Waterman
Connally	Hebert	Oddie	Watson
Coolidge	Howell	Patterson	Wheeler
Copeland	Hull	Pittman	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I intend to discuss the resolution introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] providing for a cut of 10 per cent below the House figures in the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill. I would like to go into the discussion in more detail than will be possible at this time.

The Subcommittee on Appropriations having this bill in hand, of which I am chairman, has been holding hearings upon it for several weeks. I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that the hearings are very thorough and extensive. I wish the Senators would examine them. There are about 1,200 pages containing a great deal of valuable data on the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department in relation to the appropriation measure.

The subcommittee having this matter in charge has not yet met to write up the bill. We have recently completed the hearings. In the meantime the full committee was called yesterday to consider the question of the effect of a 10 per cent cut on this bill. A request was made by a majority of the committee that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] introduce the resolution which is now before us. It is necessary that the situation be clarified.

Mr. President, I oppose the resolution very strongly. I have many reasons for opposing it. In the first place, I am convinced that it will result in increasing the army of the unemployed to a large extent. It will result in much suffering and distress. It will result in prolonging the period of depression that is upon us now and in delaying the time of recovery.

The bill is the largest of the major appropriation bills, carrying nearly $1,100,000,000. A 10 per cent cut in this bill will mean considerably over $100,000,000. Before we take the step committing us to that policy we should study the situation more in detail, reason it out, and study the effects pro and con.

I am, as strongly as anybody in the Senate, in favor of reduction of Government expenditures where such reductions can be made without doing serious harm. I am for economy in governmental expenditures as much as any Senator on this floor can be, but I am not for false economy, and I contend that to make this 10 per cent cut would be not only false economy but in many ways hurtful to the Government. It would take us years to get over the effect of such a cut.

The House has studied this bill carefully. It spent weeks on the hearings, and I refer Senators to those hearings, which are very complete and voluminous. The House cut the appropriations to the bone. After working weeks and weeks, it cut these appropriations as far as it dared to cut them—way below the Budget figures, and further below the figures which the departments themselves originally requested.

I feel that the House will not look with favor on this cut. We are an independent body, it is true; but we must give consideration to the coordinate body at the other end of the Capitol, particularly after its serious study of this problem and after it has decided that further cuts can not be made without injuring the public service to a serious extent.

Mr. President, I am going to give a few reasons——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that it is proposed to cut 10 per cent the appropriations for the carrying and delivery of the mails, especially for the parcels post and the rural free delivery, which are carried in this bill?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and has performed his duties well. I will ask him if it is not a fact that the parcels post and the rural free delivery come into more intimate touch with the people of this country than does any other agency of government?

Mr. ODDIE. There is no question about that, Mr. President. The department has notified me that if this cut is made, about 17,000 rural routes will be either consolidated or abolished. This will be of such damage to the farmers of the country that we will not hear the end of it for many a year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I presume that the Postmaster General is still willing to obey the law of Congress; and unless the Congress, acting on the recommendations of the committee, cuts out those rural carriers they will not be cut out, and the Postmaster General will not have to cut them out and will not be permitted to cut them out.

Mr. ODDIE. But, Mr. President, if we reduce the appropriations for the Post Office Department as much as it is proposed to do in this resolution, the department will not have the money with which to continue them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment. The Senator was on the committee and, of course, read the letters which were received from the heads of the departments. I remember when the committee had under consideration the bill making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor the other day, the Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, wrote to the committee and, as I recall, said that if that bill should pass in the form suggested, there would have to be cut out six or seven legations and embassies. Well, the committee——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, he hardly stated that. He suggested that if the cut had to be made, it would be necessary to eliminate some of them.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was the diplomatic statement he made to the committee, but the newspapers carried the story that that was the way in which it was proposed to be done. The committee, however, cut the appropriations 10 per cent, and not an embassy or legation is interfered with in any way.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I would not at this juncture have the Senator from Tennessee or any other Senator feel that I had derided his efforts in behalf of economy. So, far from casting any opprobrium upon the efforts of the Senator from Tennessee, I admire his efforts, but they are in the wrong direction. He asks us, forsooth, to consider a 10 per cent reduction willy-nilly, whether the items should be reduced or not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, oh, no. I know the Senator from Arizona does not wish to do me an injustice. I never made any such statement as that. All that is proposed by the resolution or that has been proposed by any previous resolution submitted by me is that the entire appropriations be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the duty of which is to pass upon them, but to pass upon them with the limitation expressed. They can cut out one item, they can leave in another, they can increase one, and they can reduce another. They have exactly the same freedom of action which they now possess under the law, with the single exception that they are asked to reduce the aggregate 10 per cent.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield further to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. But my observation is that if that duty is cast upon the committee, items which, in my judgment, ought not to be cut will be cut. The Senator from Tennessee mentioned subsidies to certain shipping companies. I have never been in favor of subsidies; I shall vote with the Senator in that regard; and I do not want to remit that question to the committee. I think, however, if the Senator would direct his effort to individual items he would get somewhere. Criticisms of Congress never improve Congress, but criticisms of Mr. A improve Mr. A; criticisms of Mr. B improve Mr. B. We will never get anywhere and never make any advance by criticising Congress as a body. Such criticisms must be made with the gun aimed at a particular person. We will never achieve any economy simply by talking about excessive expenditures; it is necessary to name the items. Ita lex scripta est—"To such effect is the law written." Let the Senator direct his remarks to particular items.

If the Senator from Nevada will yield further to me——

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not want to interrupt the thread of his speech.

Mr. ODDIE. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. But I am really concerned about this question, and I hope this bill will not be remitted to the committee. I fear, if it shall be, that the parcels post and the rural free delivery will be the items that will bear the brunt of the reductions, and especially the appropriation for the rural free delivery is the one item that ought not to be reduced at this time.

I repeat, if the Senator will permit me—and he is doing a great service in the stand he is taking—whatever we may have done for the farmer or tried to do for the farmer is past history. I contend that we have done but very little for the farmer except possibly to lend him money, and I doubt very much if a man was ever helped by lending him money. With the exception of good roads, the one thing in 25 years that has brought the farmer into communication with the outside world, that has made his life freer, easier, and better, if such could be, is the rural free delivery; and it would be a most reactionary step at this time or at any time to reduce the appropriations necessary for carrying on the rural free delivery, the one thing that brings the farmer into touch with his Government.

The ordinary citizen, Mr. President, the farmer, asks and expects but little from his Government. He may go to the post office and may serve on juries, but those are about the only real contacts he has with his Government. The rural free delivery brings him, isolated on his farm or on his ranch as he is, into direct communication with his Government or its agencies. I think the Senator from Nevada is doing a splendid work in resisting any attempt looking toward a further reduction of the facilities of the Post Office Department.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, in line with the suggestion of the Senator from Arizona, the department has stated that a reduction of 10 per cent will mean not only the elimination and consolidation of many thousands of rural free delivery routes but the cutting of the service from daily to possibly two or three times a week. The farmers will be heard from if such a thing as that shall be done.

Mr. President, I address myself first to the Treasury Department appropriation bill:

The amount of permanent annual appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1933, as stated in the Budget, is $1,161,522,917. The corresponding amount for the fiscal year 1932 is stated at $1,042,821,384. The estimated increase for 1933 over 1932 is $118,701,533. Aside from minor items, this increase occurs in four principal amounts. The interest on the public debt is estimated to increase from $605,000,000 to $640,000,000, or by $35,000,000; the automatic increase in the sinking fund is $14,- 718,300, raising it from the estimated figure of $411,771,300 to $426,489,600; the sum of $69,138,878, estimated as a new item in 1933, represents the retirements of principal of debt from cash repayments of principal by foreign governments; and $1,000,000 estimated in 1933, with no corresponding figure in 1932, for the retirement of debt from Federal reserve bank franchise tax receipts. A comparison of the permanent appropriations for 1932 and 1933 will be found at the end of the tabulation in this report.

The Budget estimates for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1933 for regular annual appropriations called for an increase of $7,313,305 over the appropriations for similar purposes for 1932, including for the latter year the amount carried in the first deficiency act. Eliminating from the totals for both years the appropriations for public buildings and the Supervising Architect's department, in which there is necessarily a net increase due to the construction program—and further eliminating the item of $26,000,000 for tax refunds from the 1932 appropriations for which there is no corresponding direct appropriation for 1933—the remainder of Treasury Department activities supported from regular annual appropriations showed a net decrease of approximately $5,000,000. Of this latter sum approximately $3,000,000 represented items of construction and other purposes which do not recur for 1933, so that the total net reduction in Budget estimates for all other items as presented to Congress was about $2,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senator leaves the question of the sinking fund, do I understand that the bill now contains a $500,000,000 item for the 1933 contribution to the sinking fund?

Mr. ODDIE. The present bill does not contain that item.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, it is not contemplated providing the annual contribution to the sinking fund as required by law under the Budget as it is now pending?

Mr. ODDIE. No; the estimates do not contain that $500,000,000 item.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that that item is provided for by permanent legislation; it is permanently provided for, and Congress does not have to provide for it each year.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. JONES] wrote the Secretary of the Treasury asking for a statement as to the effect of this proposed 10 per cent cut. In his answer the Secretary made several very important statements that the Senate should hear before deciding in this matter finally. He states where the cuts can possibly be made and where they positively can not be made. He says:

For the purposes covered by Treasury appropriations in the pending bill, heads of bureaus and offices submitted estimates aggregating $320,411,077. After examination by the Budget and Improvement Committee and the Budget officer, items aggregating $22,196,218 were deducted before the estimates were submitted to the Bureau of the Budget.

That in itself is a very substantial reduction made by the department before the figures were submitted to the Bureau of the Budget.

That bureau made further reductions before submitting the estimates to the Congress, and the bill as passed by the House is in the aggregate amount of $254,311,988, or $66,099,089 less than the original estimates submitted by heads of bureaus and offices.

That shows a very earnest and effective attempt on the part of the bureau heads of the Treasury Department to effect every saving that could possibly be made without doing great injury and harm to the Government finances and the operation of the Government itself.

In my letter of March 8, 1932, in response to your letter of February 27, 1932, with respect to the Treasury appropriation bill, I requested a few increases in appropriations as passed by the House of Representatives.

Those are minor matters that have been taken up and discussed before the committee. I will not go into them here.

If a further arbitrary reduction of over $25,000,000 is to be made, I am at a loss to point out where (except for one appropriation, hereinafter mentioned) such a reduction, or any substantial part of it, can be made without curtailing and seriously hampering essential activities of the Government. The appropriations for the Customs and Internal Revenue Services have already been reduced to the point where any further reduction will imperil the collection of the revenues. The appropriations for the various fiscal offices are principally for personal services, and any further reduction therein must result in dismissing necessary employees and very seriously hampering the prompt and efficient performance of their duties by those offices.

A further curtailment of expenses of the Coast Guard—

And so on. He mentions the Public Health Service and Coast Guard, which are not under discussion now, so I will not discuss them at this time. The committee will consider them at the proper time.

With the public-buildings program in full operation a large number of new buildings have been completed, many of them in advance of the scheduled time, but these buildings can not be occupied until provided with furniture and other equipment and the necessary personnel and supplies to operate them.

If in the circumstances an arbitrary reduction of over $25,000,000 in the amount of Treasury appropriations is to be made, there remains for consideration only the appropriation for sites and construction of public buildings. The pending bill provides $108,000,000 for this purpose. In this connection, however, I must invite the attention of your committee to the fact that the House of Representatives reduced this appropriation item $12,000,000, or 10 per cent under the amount included in the Budget for the fiscal year 1933, and also point out that the effect of the further reduction of $25,000,000 will mean the deferment of at least 250 authorized public-building projects, all of which could be placed under contract during the fiscal years 1932 and 1933.

There is the crux of this whole situation, Mr. President. These buildings in 250 cities of the United States have been planned. The people in those cities have looked forward with pride to the erection of those buildings. The workingmen who expect employment have been looking forward to substantial employment on them, so that they could feed their families and help out in this period of distress and unemployment. The patriotic pride of these various cities has had much to do with securing the appropriations for these buildings. The plans have been made for practically all of them, and the department is ready to go ahead with the contracts for construction.

If this cut is made, construction of those 250 buildings, or nearly all of them, will have to stop indefinitely, as the Secretary of the Treasury has announced. He has given careful and thorough study to this matter, and his figures can not be controverted.

Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has recently stated very emphatically the importance of continuing this employment program. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has made a very strong and effective statement regarding it. These men and others in the Senate see the dangers at hand if we stop this building program. We do not want the dole and hope it will not be necessary. We hope that our depression is near the end. It will not be near the end if we pass this resolution and other similar legislation. What we need is more constructive optimism.

I made a statement on this very question on the floor of the Senate on April 6. I went into the problem of the Treasury Department construction program and of the Post Office Department program and the serious effects the proposed 10 per cent cut would have on them. I am hearing from that statement from cities throughout the United States that want this building program to continue. The Government has given its word, if word can be given, that these buildings will be constructed. The architects have finished their drawings, and the contracts are about to be let. These men who expect the work are eagerly looking for it. They have had plenty of troubles in the last year or more because of the unemployment problem, and this program promises them some relief. Many of them are in want. They are looking forward eagerly to this building program. We can not afford to stop it at this point.

What we need is to resume. This question is largely psychological. This period of depression has frightened many people in this country. I know it will not frighten the Senate when it really studies the question and understands it as it should. I know the Senate will have the courage to go through with this building program and resist this cut.

Mr. President, it is not alone the men who will be employed on these 250 buildings who must be considered.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I think I am creating an anticlimax in interrupting the Senator, but I crave his permission to say that I heartily agree with what he says.

Mr. President, a situation as grave as the situation that existed during the war confronts us. Suppose, forsooth, during the war Senators, like birds of ill omen, had risen and said, "We must reduce Government expenses 10 per cent. There must be no public buildings. We must cheese pare. We must penny pinch." That would have disheartened and discouraged many good men.

The people are depending upon us for leadership, light, hope, and courage. If we sound a note of pessimism, it will reflect itself into the uttermost ends of our country. We should convince the country that we are not afraid, we are not frightened, we know the heart of the country is sound, its resources vast and illimitable, its piled-up wealth greater than the piled-up wealth of all the nations of Europe; and yet we sound a note of pessimism!

The Senator from Nevada is correct in his statement that nothing would be of more practical utility at this time than to say, "Yes, indeed; so far from being frightened, we are going to build public buildings for the benefit of the public in every city and town where they are justified, and carry out our program. We will not reverse our forward step."

I believe that when the country learns that Congress is frightened, that Congress has refused to proceed with its own program, and has begun to negative good roads and negative public buildings, it will bring a note of pessimism, I repeat, where there should be one of optimism.

Mr. President, I consider that we have reached more or less of a crisis in the affairs of the country in this way: If Congress and the Executive refuse to be leaders, who will be? We are the chosen, paid, and sworn servants of the people. We are supposed to be upon the watchtowers informing them. If we tell them that the situation is fraught with so much peril that we can not build public buildings, that we can not go ahead with our road program, I can foresee that the reaction will not be at all pleasant.

So I again commend the Senator from Nevada in his effort to sound a note of optimism and of hope and illumination, rather than to adopt the attitude of a croaking bird of ill omen sitting on the fence, predicting national disaster.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ODDIE. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to make just a short statement.

The other day I gave an interview to the New York Times. As a result of the interview I received a letter from one of the companies of the United States, in which the writer says:

> I note with much interest the report in Sunday's New York Times of what that paper termed your address to the public. What you had to say about pessimism appealed to me especially, and particularly the example which you set out of a stock selling on the Stock Exchange for $4 a share that has many times that amount on hand over every obligation.

Then this company called my attention to the fact that they have in cash and receivable assets at inventory cost or market value, whichever is the lower, $13,044,879.52, and current liabilities of only $603,457. They have only 317,875 shares of stock, which is now selling on the New York Stock Exchange for $4.50, though the market value of the stock, as shown by their report, is $40. In actual cash and in goods the stock is worth $40, but yesterday it was selling for $4.50.

I call this matter to the attention of the Senate to show just where pessimism is leading the American people. They ought to know it; and this is only one of hundreds of stocks just exactly like it.

I desire to say to the American people now, if there is any earthly way in which you can hold your stock, hold it, because there is more intrinsic value back of all stocks than is shown upon the stock market to-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah if that is the result of any bear raid or organized short selling forcing these stocks down.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think it is.

Mr. FLETCHER. It could hardly be called liquidation.

Mr. SMOOT. As far as the company are concerned, I want to say that there is no idea on their part to withhold from the public just exactly what their statements are, because they publish them. Anyone can see them; and yet we have gotten in such a mood in the United States, in the Government as well as anywhere else, that the stock of a company that has cash, available assets, and goods to the amount of $40 a share is selling for $4.50.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the statement just made by the Senator from Utah is very apropos at this time. There is too much pessimism everywhere, and we are being thrown into a panic. I hope by the time the Senate studies the problem that is before us to-day pessimism will end.

As has been said repeatedly, the way to resume is to resume. If we take a note of optimism, follow a path of optimism, and defeat this measure, which will stop the construction of 250 public buildings, we will be furnishing employment and keeping in employment tens of thousands of American workingmen. They and their families will benefit.

If we pass this resolution, what will happen? Where can those who will be thrown out go to find work? They have been planning on this campaign of work on these public buildings. They have been looking forward to this work, expecting it, feeling sure that the Government would go through with the plan it has outlined and not go back on the encouragement it has given them.

The Senate has led many movements of importance in national affairs. It has taken the lead time and again. Let us take the lead to-day and stop this attack on American employment, American building, and start the wheels turning once more. The working people of our country need help. We can help them by maintaining the building program already authorized. It may be a comparatively small start, but it will be a beginning.

If we defeat this resolution it will mean that the building trades will be assured of millions of dollars worth of customers. Sixty million dollars' worth of buildings will be affected at least, and I think much more than that.

Think of the different basic products which will have to be furnished for the construction of these buildings. Many of the Senators here represent States where cement, for instance, is manufactured. Brick and building tile will be used in large quantities. I know of numbers of the buildings which are contemplated in this program where the contracts have practically been let for the various building materials. Think of the thousands of men who will be given work in these building-material industries if this work is allowed to go through, as we hope it will be.

Think of the gravel which will be used. Think of the employment that will be given in furnishing gravel for the buildings.

Then there is lime and numerous other basic products. I have a list of the States where various of these materials are produced, which I will place in the RECORD. I ask permission that it be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MATERIALS ENTERING INTO THE CONSTRUCTION OF FEDERAL BUILDINGS, WITH THE NAMES OF STATES WHERE THEY ARE PRODUCED

BASIC PRODUCTS AND WHERE PRODUCED

Cement: Alabama, California, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Maryland, Michigan, Nebraska, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

Brick and building tile: Practically every State in the Union.

Gravel and aggregate: Practically every State in the Union.

Lumber: Produced in the majority of the States, including practically all Southern States and California, Oregon, Washington, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont.

Lime: Alabama, California, Connecticut, Kansas, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Missouri, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, New Jersey, Texas, Virginia, and Wyoming.

Limestone: Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, Montana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, South Dakota, Virginia, Wyoming, and New Jersey, Sandstone: Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and West Virginia.

Marble: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Georgia, Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri, Nevada, New York, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, and Vermont.

Granite: California, Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia, Maine, Massachusetts, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, New Hampshire, North Carolina, New York, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin.

Terra cotta (ornamental): California, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Missouri, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Washington.

Iron, steel, and metal products: Principally from mills in Alabama, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Arkansas, Illinois, Missouri, New York, and Pennsylvania. (Affects operation of mines and furnaces in a large number of other States.)

Slate: New York, Pennsylvania, Maine, Vermont, and Virginia.

Glass: California, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and West Virginia.

Paints and painting materials: California, Colorado, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Georgia, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin. (Affects lead mines in Missouri, Oklahoma, Wyoming, Illinois, and Idaho.)

Roofing (composition) and waterproofing materials: Alabama, California, Connecticut, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Minnesota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia.

Mr. ODDIE. I referred to lime. That, for instance, is produced in the States of Alabama, California, Connecticut, Kansas, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Missouri, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Nevada, Texas, Virginia, and Wyoming.

This list shows the States where limestone is produced, and the same as to sandstone. Marble is produced in a number of States of the Union. Then there are granite, terra cotta, iron and steel, and other metal products. Think of the amount of these materials which will go into these buildings. Every line of industry will benefit. The coal and oil industry, the iron-mining industry, the steel-producing industry, the steel-fabricating industry, will benefit, and so on down the line. Think of the States where slate is produced, which is used in these buildings. Then there are glass, paints and painting materials, roofing, and the metals. Think of the thousands of men employed in these various industries.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate very much what the Senator is saying, and I know that what I am about to say is not in conflict with what he has already said.

It strikes me that at a time when there is a tax bill pending before Congress to tax the American people further $1,250,000,000 annually, when we could raise at least half of that amount by a simple tax on bottled beer at the rate of 3 cents a pint, and put 300,000 men to work, use 200,000 freight cars and several hundred locomotives annually, furnish a market for 3,000,000 tons of coal, furnish a market for 64,000,000 pounds of sugar, and for 38,000,000 bushels of grain; and we sit here and appropriate money to enforce prohibition when, with this simple expedient, we could do away with this huge burden of taxation and furnish employment for so many, and markets for so much of our commodities which are now stagnate, it does seem to me that we deserve the criticism of many people who look upon us as a body which can not rise to the occasion. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries must abide by the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the applause came from a couple of wets up in the galleries. Let them make a little noise. Another bubble has burst.

The Director of Prohibition has just reported that the receipts from the operation of the Prohibition Department are greater than the expenses. That is about the only department of our Government, I suppose, that is profitable in these times.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, this question of the revenues of our Government, of course, is paramount. The receipts have dropped to an enormous extent; we want to stop that right here. We want to put an end to this depression if we can. We may contribute in a small way by this action of ours to-day one way or the other.

What will bring back the receipts of our Government? Start the wheels of industry by giving employment to men who are out of work, so that they can buy goods in the stores. This will result in increasing the purchasing power of our people again. This will help the farmer; will put money in the farmer's pocket. The farmer will then turn right around and buy goods in the stores, and industry generally will start to gain. In this way revenues will start again to flow into our Treasury.

Mr. President, we can not do it by one heroic effort; we can not end this depression all at once, but we have an obligation to do our best, and by exempting the building program from this 10 per cent cut we will be going a long way toward starting the wheels of industry and bringing back normal times.

I would like to discuss the building program further. The statement I received from the Secretary of the Treasury, who has studied this matter carefully, says that 250 Federal buildings will have to be indefinitely postponed if this 10 per cent cut is made. He can not put the cut anywhere else in the Treasury Department without seriously crippling the department itself and crippling our Government. It will deprive us of the means of collecting the necessary revenues. We have only one course open to us to-day, to stop the building program or defeat this resolution, which provides for a 10 per cent cut in the Treasury Department appropriations.

Mr. President, I have stated numbers of times, and I want to state again, that the way to stop this depression is to stop it, to start the wheels going again, and end this cursed pessimism and fear that have crept all over the country.

We must do what we can to put men to work here, there, and everywhere. The 250 cities in this list which will be benefited are seriously affected. The wheels of industry will start once more if this resolution is defeated.

I would like to read the list of these cities which will be affected, but have not time now. I have the list here. I included in the list a statement that I made on the floor of the Senate on April 6, showing the list of completed buildings and a list of those which are under construction to-day. This list of 250 buildings, which are to be found in cities in practically every State of the Union, is well worthy of consideration.

Do we, as representatives from our States, want to cripple industry in our various States? I think that when the Members of the Senate study this list they will see that it can not be done if they are to do their duty here.

Wise economy is necessary, cutting expenses is necessary where it does not work injury, but starting the money flowing back into the channels of trade again is more necessary.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will have that list inserted in his speech at this point, so that we may be able to read it.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask permission to place this list in the RECORD.

Mr. JONES. I understood it had been placed in the RECORD.

Mr. ODDIE. It was printed in the RECORD on the 6th of April.

Mr. JONES. That is what I thought.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 6, 1932.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ODDIE: Attached please find statement requested by you, showing, by States, the different projects under the public-building program which were completed or under contract, in whole or in part, as of March 24, 1932.

The date of March 24, 1932, is used to conform to a previous statement submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, wherein was listed all the projects under the public-building program which were on the market, in the specification stage, or in the drawing stage, as of that date.

The amounts set opposite the projects on both the statement submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury and the inclosed statement represent the total authorized limits of cost for the projects and include expenditures for land.

I trust this information is what you desire.

Very truly yours,

FERRY K. HEATH,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ODDIE. To show the seriousness of this thing, the following is a list of the cities in New York which would be affected:

New York:
Albany	$3,325,000
Binghamton	625,000
Catskill	110,000
Chateagay, border station	59,100
Dansville	143,000

Flushing	700,000
Fort Covington, border station	56,000
Freeport	215,000
Glen Cove	160,000
Hempstead	315,000
Herkimer	120,000
Jamaica	875,000
Lockport	80,000
Malone	175,000
Mooers, border station	59,300
New York City—
Courthouses	10,700,000
Marine hospital	2,500,000
Post-office annex	9,500,000

I think that some of the large contracts in New York City should not be included in this list—

Niagara Falls	$200,000
Norwich	130,000
Nyack	150,000
Patchogue	200,000
Port Chester	320,000
Rochester	1,700,000
Rouses Point, border station	153,000
Schenectady	370,000
Seneca Falls	115,000
Total	33,247,400

I could go through the list and give the statistics as to every State, and I know that when the Members of the Senate look over this list carefully they will hesitate about voting for this 10 per cent reduction.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. As I understand it, the Senator has just read a list of $33,000,000 worth of projects in New York State alone.

Mr. ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Which would be abandoned?

Mr. ODDIE. I stated that some of the larger projects in the city of New York would be excluded from this list.

Mr. VANDENBERG. For instance, how much of the building in that list does the Senator think would be abandoned in toto?

Mr. ODDIE. I should say about ten to twenty million. I would have to figure these items up.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Suppose it is twenty million; that is practically the entire 10 per cent, is it not?

Mr. ODDIE. Twenty-five million dollars would be practically 10 per cent.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator mean they are going to take it all out of the State of New York?

Mr. ODDIE. Oh, no; it can not all come out of the State of New York. That is a very large State. These other items are smaller in proportion.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I am trying to find out is this: How is it possible that all those items are going to be called off if they total twenty million, and twenty-five million is all that is to be saved?

Mr. ODDIE. The Secretary of the Treasury has said that the twenty-five million cut will make it necessary for him to indefinitely postpone at least $60,000,000 worth of building; that he will have to indefinitely postpone that program for 250 buildings.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Can the Senator inform us why there are States which have such large appropriations for public buildings, while others have practically none?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, there are two lists, which I have in my hand, which were put into the RECORD on April 6. One of them shows the program of completed projects and others under construction. I am reading now from a list of the uncompleted ones, the projects for which plans are completed and that are not quite ready for contract. The others have been authorized and are ready to be submitted to contract.

Mr. BLACK. I was interested to know whether the list to which the Senator is referring now contains the entire proposal for buildings in the various States for the next year.

Mr. ODDIE. Not altogether, but the buildings which are ready for contract; in the contract stage, we might say.

Mr. BLACK. I have found that some States with very small populations have several million dollars for buildings, and others, with probably twenty-five or thirty times as many people, do not have as much as $200,000 worth of buildings. I am interested to know whether I am correct in the deduction that this program is sent to the committee by the Treasury Department.

Mr. ODDIE. Yes; it has been worked out by the Supervising Architect's Office in the Treasury Department. It has been under consideration for a long time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I state to the Senator that, as I understand it, Congress itself has already authorized these buildings? That program is largely the result of congressional action, if not entirely.

Mr. BLACK. I am very much interested, because of the fact that I have found several times that it is impossible to get an authorization through Congress unless there is some kind of a recommendation from the Secretary of the Treasury. So that as I understand it—and I am really asking for information—it is not congressional action, for we can not get congressional action unless a project has been recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES. Of course Congress is pretty powerful. Congress usually follows, however, the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury. It could overturn his recommendations if it desired to do so. But the Senator will remember that from time to time we have passed bills approving certain buildings and providing for their construction. The Secretary can not proceed to the construction of buildings which are not authorized by law, and in order to have them authorized by law he must come to Congress.

Mr. BLACK. Is it true or not that it is out of order to offer an amendment to the bill, with reference to any particular building of that character, unless it has been recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. JONES. If it is out of order it has been made so by the Senate itself.

Mr. BLACK. But I was inquiring if that is not correct?

Mr. JONES. I think so. I do not know just what proposition the Senator has in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on the original public buildings bill it will be in order to offer such an amendment as I believe the Senator from Alabama has in mind.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will look at the list he will find the projects which have already been completed in his State and those which are under construction now.

Mr. BLACK. I was not only looking at the list with reference to the State which I have the honor to represent in part, but I had reference to a number of others. It does so happen that in the bill there is provision for a total building program in Alabama for the next year of $180,000, while at the same time it provides in the Senator's State of Nevada, for which I congratulate the Senator, a building program of $1,120,000. As I understand it, the other list refers merely to those buildings which have heretofore been completed. This list refers to those which are hereafter to be built, probably in the next year as I understand it. Is that correct?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes; but if the Senator will look further, he will see that my own State has had practically nothing up to the present time. Certain buildings have been under contemplation for a long time. In the State of Alabama the completed projects amount to $570,000 and those under contract amount to $1,785,000 in addition to the list to which I previously referred.

Mr. President, once more, before I leave the subject of unemployment, let me say that we have millions of men out of employment to-day. Distress is abroad in our country. We want to find a way to end unemployment and here is a way to start. I hope that when the matter is voted on in the Senate, it will be after Senators have given it most careful consideration.

Mr. President, I should like to say something about the Post Office Department feature of the bill, but I understand the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] must leave the city very shortly and desires to say something before he leaves, so I will defer what I have to say with reference to the post-office portion of the bill until a later time.

I should like to add, however, that I have just received a letter from W. C. Roberts, chairman of the legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor, inclosing a statement issued by President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor. The statement reads as follows:

APRIL 14, 1932.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, issued the following statement to-day regarding the campaign in the United States Senate to arbitrarily reduce the appropriation measures 10 per cent:

"Labor is greatly aroused over the attempt which is being made in the United States Senate to arbitrarily reduce appropriation measures 10 per cent. This cut in appropriations will be in addition to reductions made by the Bureau of the Budget and the reductions imposed by the House of Representatives.

"If the proposal to reduce appropriations 10 per cent is favorably acted upon, many building and construction projects authorized by Congress will fail. This in turn will mean that thousands of building-trades workers will be added to the army of unemployed. In addition, it will mean that thousands of Government employees will be discharged from the service. To stop building construction authorized by the Government and to add thousands of Government workers to the number already unemployed would serve to aggravate an already serious condition.

"Instead of taking action that would tend to increase unemployment, Congress ought to, in the opinion of labor, support and encourage an economic program providing for the creation of work opportunities so that employment may be increased. The country needs the constructive help of Congress. Instead of curtailing public employment and the construction of Government buildings, it ought to take action which would stimulate public works and enlarge its building program and in this way help relieve the distressing unemployment situation which prevails throughout the Nation.

"Congress ought to know that the unemployment situation is becoming desperate. Men and women are begging for work. At the present time community relief funds are becoming exhausted. Work must be provided for the unemployed if hunger and distress resulting from long-continued unemployment are to be overcome.

"The arbitrary reduction of appropriations 10 per cent, with the resulting industrial and social consequences, represents an unwise policy of economy which Congress at this serious point in the unemployment situation should not approve. Besides, it represents a most unsound and unscientific method of dealing with appropriations. It is arbitrary in character and should be defeated.

"Labor protests most vigorously against this policy of false economy, this proposal to arbitrarily reduce the appropriation measures 10 per cent. We earnestly hope this attempt will fail and the proposal will be defeated."

I strongly indorse every word of the statement.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to enable me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. COPELAND. I feel this way about calling a quorum at this time. I have no desire for an audience, so far as I am personally concerned, and yet it seems to me that the subject before us is one of the most important matters that can be considered by the Senate. Whether we could keep any kind of an audience after we got it I do not know, but let us see, anyway.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator will yield for that purpose, I will make the point of no quorum.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is necessarily detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is there an amendment now pending to the resolution offered by the Senator from Tennessee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would like to offer an amendment to his resolution, and I would like to have the amendment considered as pending. My amendment is in line 10 of the resolution, after the words "per centum," to insert a comma and the words "exclusive of provisions for building and construction," so it would read, beginning in line 9:

With amendments providing an aggregate reduction of 10 per cent, exclusive of provisions for building and construction, in the amount of the appropriation contained in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

I ask that the amendment be considered as pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I realize that there are now in session a great many committees and that Senators who are absent are engaged on public business. Nevertheless it is discouraging when a question so important as the policy involving the whole future of our country is under discussion in the Senate that there will remain in the Chamber only 24 Members of this body—one-quarter of the Senators. I speak of this because I think that there is resting upon us a responsibility to the country. I know when I visit my constituents how anxious they are about the situation and about the future.

Frankly, I am out of patience with what we have attempted to accomplish at this session. We shall be very seriously blamed by the country if we do not finish our deliberations and adjourn early in June. If there is any thought in the mind of any Senator that we are going to be here all summer and all fall discussing matters while the Nation is in distress, he should get that out of his mind, because, if I know anything about the feeling of the people of America, I know they want early action upon all pending measures.

The resolution of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] embodies a proposal to commit the Senate to a policy of radical and arbitrary reduction in the appropriations contained in the pending bill as it came from the House of Representatives. I want it clearly understood by the Senate that when the Senator from Tennessee was invited to submit this resolution it was not because the committee indorsed it, but it was merely that the question might be presented to the Senate in order that the Senate might determine the policy and share the responsibility.

The President of the United States, time and time again, has called upon the business men of America to go forward in their activities, particularly in the line of construction. That was his demand. He called together in Washington a large group of industrial leaders and urged upon them the importance of construction in order that there might be employment.

I was amazed beyond words when the report of the Budget Bureau was submitted that it revealed such a material reduction in the program which had been presented only a year ago. Here we have before us this very much abbreviated program, still further abbreviated by the action of the House which cut $12,000,000 from the Budget estimate of $120,000,000. That was a 10 per cent cut. Now, on top of that, it is proposed, although it may not necessarily affect the item to which I am now referring, that we make a further cut of 10 per cent.

If I am correctly advised, there are certain mandatory provisions of the law which would make it impossible to reduce the salary item. So the major reductions which may be made will be made in relation to items having to do with the construction of public buildings and possibly those having to do with mail contracts. As regards the mail contracts, if the Senator from Tennessee had his way, he would put the shipping industry of America into bankruptcy; he would throw out of employment thousands of sailors and would turn over to our rivals in international trade the carriage of commerce upon the ocean. If the Senate desires to do that, that is the privilege of the Senate; but, so far as I am concerned, if that proposal shall come before us, I will resist to the very last any such action on the part of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DICKINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. The Senator is familiar, no doubt, with the fact that our Government has made positive mail contracts for terms of years?

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. I am familiar with that fact. I was one of the enthusiastic supporters of the Jones-White law when the measure was before us and took pride as an American in seeing the American flag put upon the seven seas. I know that from the happy operation of the Jones-White law we have an American merchant marine. But if the plans of the Senator from Tennessee shall end in success the American flag abroad will be swept off the ocean; and we shall be at the mercy of the competing steamship lines of England, Germany, Italy, Holland, and other foreign nations which operate ocean carrying vessels.

Just now, however, I do not care to discuss that particular subject. I want to direct my remarks to the question of the construction of public buildings. I am in harmony with every project which has any hope of economy, provided it is not a foolish economy and provided it does not impair the welfare of the American people. But in the case of our public-building program we have provided the sites; the plans have been drawn and, in many instances, the contracts have been put out for bids. What would it mean to carry out this program? It would mean that we would increase our capital investment and build structures which would be used to carry on the Government and which at the same time would lessen the rentals which we now pay in many instances to private owners of property.

No Member of the Senate need fear facing the financiers of America provided we present projects which are self-liquidating. I have listened to the presentation of many plans for the issuance of bonds to provide for the spending of large sums of money. I could not vote for one of those projects unless it had in it a definite means of retirement when the bonds should come due. There must be some means of liquidation in all such legislation.

So far as public buildings are concerned, as I have said, in many instances we are renting space, and by erecting new buildings we would be saving money to the Government. I have no estimate as to how much of a saving would be made, but I know it would be a very material sum. However, outside of all that, how are we going to put plasterers to work, how are we going to put bricklayers, stonemasons, painters, carpenters, and metal craftsmen to work unless we construct buildings?

I talked the other night for two or three hours with Mr. William Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, than whom there is not a more intelligent man in our country. Certainly nobody in America has greater knowledge than has he of what is going on in labor circles. It was distressing to me to learn that it is his conviction that next winter will be infinitely worse than the past winter so far as employment is concerned. Think of it, Mr. President! There are now, to our knowledge, 8,300,000 men out of employment, and what will it mean if that number be increased 50 or 100 per cent?

I was humiliated beyond words the other day, Mr. President, to read that within a few weeks in the hospitals of New York 20 persons had died of starvation. Hundreds of them were brought into hospitals in a starving condition and 20 of them died, and that, too, in the richest city in America. Mr. President, I realize that 20 persons are not a great army; but if 20 persons were discovered in a starving condition and taken to hospitals, how many others in this country may have died while we may not have known the cause of death? That is not a handsome tribute to our country. I know that in my city private individuals have contributed generously.

During the last drive they contributed $18,000,000, and the city itself gave as much as the banks would let them give, but yet how are we going to take care of people in distress after next month when the money will be gone? We do not want people in America to be fed by charity; we do not want them to have to come with tin pans and get food at the back doors of our homes. We want the people in America to be employed so that they may earn money, so that they may preserve their self-respect, and so that the country may be prosperous because its people are employed.

Here we have a building program involving, as it came from the House, $108,000,000. Are we going to reduce that sum ten or twelve or fifteen million dollars or some other amount? The Senator from Nevada in his very interesting and instructive address a few moments ago said that such a reduction would mean that buildings in 250 cities of America will not be constructed. That means that in 250 communities in America craftsmen, stone masons, bricklayers, painters, carpenters, and many others who might be employed upon projects, which represent an addition to the national wealth, will be deprived of such employment. It is an amazing situation.

Oh, Mr. President, why do we not take a more sensible stand in these matters? We seem to think that every time a Budget estimate comes to us it must be paid in cash during the current year. I have taken pains to investigate the Budget statements relating to the appropriation bills now before the Congress. I wanted to find out how many of the proposed appropriations related to capital investment, to permanent improvements. You will be amazed, Mr. President, to find how many of these appropriations are for projects which will be in use by the American people for a generation, at least, and, in some instances, perhaps for a hundred years. Yet under the policy imposed upon us it is the purpose to pay for these projects out of current funds.

Listen, Mr. President. There was a time when, by reason of war and for other reasons, we had a public debt of twenty-six and a half billion dollars. I will ask the Senator from Florida if that is not correct?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is my recollection of the amount.

Mr. COPELAND. We had a public debt of twenty-six and a half billion dollars. We have reduced that debt to sixteen and one-half billion dollars. We have paid on the national debt since the war $10,000,000,000.

So, since the war, we have reduced the national debt $10,000,000,000—$10,000,000,000! Would it hurt us any to increase the national debt just a little bit over its present minimum of sixteen and a half billions? Would it? It would if we were doing it for some wasteful purpose; if we were proposing to throw the money into the ocean; yes.

But if we are going to increase the debt a little bit in order that the national wealth may be increased by the capital investment which we have acquired by this increase in the debt, that is good business, as I see it.

In the present Budget estimate—I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in this matter—we find, in the legislative appropriation bill, the site and construction of the House Office Building. There is a sum there which is to be added this year. We have made the authorization, but we have not appropriated all the money. That is a permanent improvement. No one can question that Members of the House—not alone of this House, but of the next House, and of Houses for the next 50 or 100 years—will be taken care of in that building.

Then there is the completion of the Senate Office Building, which involves $3,000,000. I am not quite so sure that that was a wise appropriation of money. However, we have made it.

Then we come to the Executive Office and other offices, which I will not go into in detail, although I should like to have this table—not in detail, but simply the appropriations of 1932 for these items—included in my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, how much does that amount to? In the appropriation bills as prepared, it amounts to $410,683,194—$410,000,000 for what? Permanent improvements; capital investments; additions to the national wealth—$410,000,000. Will you tell me why, in the name of common sense, the taxpayers, already overloaded this year, should not be relieved to the extent of $410,000,000 which might be taken care of when we have another period of prosperity? Why should we not do that?

When we had prosperity and collected a lot more money than the Government needed, we used it to reduce the public debt; and from the sinking-fund operation we reduced the public debt. In these 10 years we have reduced it $10,000,000,000. A billion dollars a year is the amount by which this debt has been reduced in the past 10 years, because we had prosperity, and we could afford to do it. Now, when we have adversity and economic depression, why do we not reverse the process?

Suppose we were to add $500,000,000 to the public debt by a bond issue, and take care of these permanent improvements, many of them self-liquidating, but which add to our national wealth. Why not issue this $500,000,000 of bonds and take care of those capital improvements?

I spoke of that immediately after Christmas. I have spoken of it two or three times in the Senate; but all the time we think that in this time of depression we must find new means of taxation, even to taxing the poor through a sales tax. We must find taxes not only to carry on the current expenses of government but also to make these permanent investments.

There is not a prudent business man in the world who would conduct his business in that way—not one. So the practical suggestion I make to the Senate is this: The matter probably would have to originate in the House; would it not? May I ask some parliamentarian whether a plan like this could originate in the Senate?

Mr. FLETCHER. We could amend the appropriation bill.

Mr. COPELAND. The appropriation bill could be amended? That is fine. If it is possible, then, to amend an appropriation bill so as to authorize the issuance of Government bonds for the payment of these permanent improvements in the appropriation bill before us, amounting to $410,000,000, certainly no wiser thing could be done, in my judgment.

It is not right to put a tremendous burden of taxation upon the people at a time when they can not bear it. Let no one fancy that if his name is not on the tax roll, if he is not directly assessed, he is not paying taxes. When a rich man is taxed he does not go out in the orchard, under the third tree in the fourth row, dig down and get a tin box, and take out the money to pay his taxes. He adds to the rents and to the price of the products or commodities that he sells enough to pay his tax. It is a tax upon the whole people, no matter what sort of a tax it is. Everybody pays the tax; and this is not the time, when we have economic depression and discouragement in every home in America, to talk about imposing heavier taxes. This is a time when we should have retrenchment, as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has wisely suggested; but in making that retrenchment we must find a way to preserve the structure and fabric of government and not to sacrifice those things which have to do with our welfare.

I was much chagrined to find that in the Commerce Department appropriation bill it was found necessary to decrease the appropriation for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The Senator from Iowa, now in the chair [Mr. DICKINSON], was much concerned about that—an item which has to do with building up the commerce of our country with foreign nations—and yet, in the interest of economy, we found it necessary to cut off many of those activities which have to do with our industrial and commercial and agricultural welfare.

My friends, I think we ought to use some common sense in this matter. That is the growing conviction of the business world.

I desire to read a telegram which was given me by a very prominent citizen of my city the other day, signed by a man whose name, because it is a private telegram, I can not reveal. I want Senators to get the spirit of it, however, because it shows what the industrial world, the business world, the financial world are thinking. It shows the new thought that has come to those great groups that have not been entirely sympathetic to the downtrodden farmer and to those who are out of employment, but they see now what is coming to the country, and I want you to hear this telegram. I quote in part:

> The gap between bankers and industry is widening, due to a lack of market for industry. Congress has taken very much-needed steps through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to correct and help the banking situation. Nothing of a similar nature has thus far been done for industry and the unemployed.
> Supreme Court Justice Brandeis recently declared the present economic situation worse than war. It must be evident to leaders in Government that only emergency measures on the part of the Government will meet the situation. This power is no longer within the scope of business. Emergency measures are expensive and sometimes wasteful; but, notwithstanding, if unemployment can be relieved and industry revived the Government should lend its credit, regardless of the expense.
> Our Government has loaned $15,000,000,000 to foreign nations to assist their economic needs. It would seem that it could very properly embark on a great emergency public-works program in its own interest at home and give industry an opportunity to put its house in order and relieve unemployment.
> People on all sides lament the lack of governmental leadership. Six months or a year ago business men and business interests generally would have been unwilling to give their support to any measure that would have affected the Government's credit. It was their belief that the general situation would gradually right itself, as in the case of previous depressions. We did not reckon the fact that this country in 20 years has practically developed from an agricultural to an industrial Nation. The enormous development of industrial enterprises as a result of the war, and the consequent pyramiding and unnatural expansion of same in its aftermath, never permitted industrialists to reckon the effect of sudden cessation of their production.
> We are, therefore, dealing with an entirely new experience, which is confusing and becoming daily more difficult of solution. Industry and business interests generally are so concerned about their immediate desperate situations that they are unable to collectively think, much less act. The added fact that the gap between business and banking is measurably widening causes further confusion and helplessness. No bank or group of banking interests will dare risk freezing their assets in an emergency relief program to any community. Fortunately, the Government and its credit are still intact; and it is felt by business men and business interests generally that in the circumstances the Government is the one and only agency that can now act effectively.
> Every business man and banker with whom I have discussed this subject agrees with the expressions herein and would support a great emergency public-works program by the Government 100 per cent.
> We must realize that if this Nation were engaged in a war of bloodshed, our people and Government would again concentrate on one effort to stamp it out quickly. The people and industry generally are baffled by lack of concentration and leadership on the part of our Government to lead it out of the despondency resulting from what is the greatest industrial experiment ever undertaken in history. We need a breathing spell for readjustment; and a great emergency public-works program, wasteful as it may seem, is the only thing that will prevent the dole and, ultimately, the full payment of the veterans' adjusted-service certificates. The choice is apparent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the program which is outlined in that telegram is a program of voting bonds with which to construct public buildings, and so forth?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. I may say to the Senator that this man is willing and anxious to go further than I would wish to go, but he thinks that we ought to engage extensively in a public-works program. To-day, if the Senator heard me, I have been pleading that we might take from the pending bill these projects which are permanent in their nature. They amount to a little less than half a billion dollars; but this man is willing to go further than that, because he says the banks are failing to make use of their funds; and unquestionably that is the fact. When a bank boasts that it is 85 per cent liquid, it is like a business man boasting that he has no goods on his shelves. The banks are not loaning any money for industry. There is no opportunity for private industry to develop in a normal way; so this man's plea is that there should be a large building project on the part of the Government, in order that there may be a resumption of employment and industrial activity until, as he says, they can have a breathing spell and find themselves.

Mr. BORAH. I believe the Senator did not make known the name of the sender of the telegram.

Mr. COPELAND. I did not. I hesitated to do it, may I say, because it is a telegram which was loaned me by a friend in New York, a prominent man.

Mr. BORAH. I thought I recognized the same sentiment that I heard last night over the radio. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. It seems to me I heard the speech, but I have forgotten the name. [Laughter.]

But I may say to the Senator seriously that it does not come from that source. This comes from a man actually engaged in industry and very much worried because of the situation.

Mr. BORAH. Not in politics?

Mr. COPELAND. Not in politics. My plea is that in dealing with these appropriation bills before us we take from them those items which are permanent in their nature, the use of which will continue over years to come, and limit our appropriations to items which are current, which have to do with the operation of government to-day.

It would be better if we were to take $500,000,000 from these appropriation bills in that way, and let posterity pay some of the bills, or let the rich pay them when they have money again, as they had in 1928 and 1929 but have not now. If we have to take 10 per cent ruthlessly from every single item of every single bill, the practice is bound to result in harm to the Government.

When it comes to the matter of salary cuts and we think of taking large sums from those who are given the smaller payments—I have not anything to say about those in the upper brackets—does it not seem a crime to think that these people, who never had the opportunity other people had who were in business and industry, should have money taken away from them because we are so afraid to meet facts as they are and take these permanent improvements from the Budget and let another generation pay for them?

I do not want to see these cuts made; but if we are going to balance the Budget, we have to follow the Senator from Tennessee, and we have to follow those who wish to slice all the salaries. We have to do it. We can not balance the Budget unless we do something different from our ordinary practice in making up our tax bills and our appropriation bills.

Ah, Senators, what are we afraid of? We are afraid that some reactionary newspaper will run an editorial and say that we have set the printing presses at work, or that we have done some other absurd economic thing. We are afraid our bankers will criticize us. I am willing to be criticized by any banker in the United States, because if there is any one class on the face of the earth that has failed in its job it is the superbankers of America.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that comment, I hope he will make it very plain that there is no remote or possible connection, direct or indirect, between so-called printing-press money and a funding of these permanent public improvements.

Mr. COPELAND. No; I agree with the Senator, and I will say a word about that. I had in mind what was suggested by the Senator from Idaho about these very large appropriations. I am sure the Senator from Michigan will say that if we do that we will have to go a little farther than we have ever gone before, in view of the gold reserve. But there is no printing-press proposition about this bond proposal or any flat money suggestion in it. There is nothing that any prudent business man in America would not say was good sense if we issued $500,000,000 or $400,000,000 worth of bonds to pay for permanent improvements which were going to add to the worth of the country, and not going to be thrown into the ocean.

Mr. President, I have spoken too long, much longer than I had intended to. I did want to say that after the Civil War in the city of New York one of the things they did to give employment was to develop Central Park, a place where goats roamed and tin cans were common. It was an activity which, compared with our present necessity, was miniature and infinitesimal in its significance. But if we could spend this money and go ahead with our building programs throughout this country we would put thousands upon thousands of men to work, and when we put them to work they would have a chicken in the pot. We want the people of our country to be fed, and we want them to be able to earn money to feed themselves.

We do not want to have to resort to a dole; to engage in any extraordinary financial scheme of doubtful propriety. But what is there wrong about taking $400,000,000 from these appropriation bills, putting out a bond issue, to be paid for in 10 or 15 years, or at some time in the future? Then more calmly and more decently we may proceed with the balancing of the Budget along perhaps less severe lines than suggested by the Senator from Tennessee, and yet in the direction of real economy.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as I take it, the Senator would be in favor of reserving these permanent improvements from the bill and making the application of the 10 per cent reduction. I do not remember what the attitude of the Senator was with reference to the 10 per cent proposition; but if we take out these public-building propositions, these permanent propositions, there will still be seven or eight hundred million dollars in the bill. That would mean that if we applied the 10 per cent cut we would have to cut off fifty or sixty or seventy million dollars from the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let me say, preliminary to my answer, that I have never known a man who worked harder than has the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] in connection with these appropriation bills. He has had no easy time, and he deserves great credit and the thanks of the Senate for what he has done.

This is what I would do, in answer specifically to the Senator's question: I think that before we proceed with our arbitrary cut of 10 per cent we ought to establish the attitude of the Senate regarding the permanent improvements. If we could get the Senate to agree to a bond issue of $400,000,000, or whatever is needed, the Committee on Appropriations would have to pass its eagle eye over the list to see what really is permanent.

Mr. JONES. Some other committee would probably have to deal with the bond proposition first.

Mr. COPELAND. Undoubtedly that is true. If we decided to take out these permanent improvements, I would then have the Senate abandon the 10 per cent cut and have the committee proceed in the normal and usual way in dealing with the bill.

Mr. JONES. I am glad to hear the Senator say that, because to take any other course would disrupt our rural delivery service; in fact, our whole mail service, and all things like that, and would probably put as many people out of employment as would be employed by the public-building program.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; and let me say, Mr. President, that if these mail contracts were to be dealt with in the ruthless fashion proposed, it would kill the American merchant marine and put thousands of sailors on their uppers, to walk about the port cities of the world. We can not do it. It is unthinkable that we should do these things.

Mr. JONES. It would be a repudiation of contracts deliberately made.

Mr. COPELAND. It would be a violation of the moral law and a violation of contract law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I am not interested in whether the Government can do it or not. I realize that often the Government can do things. It was one of the Louises who said that the same moral obligation that rests on individuals does not rest on sovereigns. We can say, perhaps, that the Government can do this, it can violate contracts, it can wipe out contracts. I recognize that. Nevertheless, there is a moral obligation resting upon the American people. We entered upon the plan of mail subventions and loans to shipping, and the shipping interests of this country poured millions in to assist in the enterprise, and if we propose, on top of that, to say, "Oh, those contracts we made with you do not mean anything, we are going to wipe them out," and do it, then the shipping will be in bankruptcy and we will have some great disaster, and after a while we will not have any country at all. That is the way I look at it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I just want to make this observation to my friend, the Senator from New York. I called his attention to a letter the Postmaster General wrote me just a day or two ago. I have not the letter before me, but I recall the statement.

A portion of the men who are laboring under these subvention contracts, as the Senator calls them, to the extent of a little over 5,000, are foreigners, not American citizens at all. They have a plan which, in my judgment, is a fraudulent plan, under the law, by which a foreigner would ask for his first papers, and be employed, contrary to the provisions of the act.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, there is no people on earth perhaps so fond of expression as Americans. There are catchwords and watchwords that take us again and again and sometimes have a very decided influence upon our activities. We love those expressions. We love them so much that we thrust ourselves oftentimes in gatherings, political and otherwise, into repetition of them in order to win, of course, an applause which would be ours under any circumstances, but which becomes more enthusiastic when we use the expressions that are so common among us.

Only a brief period ago all that was necessary for any one to do to win the title of "statesman" was to stand before an audience and weep great salty tears over peace, and tell how we were going to cease forever warfare in the future, and how we stood, stood as never before had a people stood, for peace for all the world. Then without amplifying the statement and indulging merely in generalities the applause would be unanimous and particularly women would leave the audience saying, "What a marvelous statesman! What a wonderful man the individual who addressed us, because he is for peace"—just as if there were any person on the face of the earth who wanted war or who would advocate war under any circumstances.

To-day we have another shibboleth, and in the use of that shibboleth administration and Congress have become hysterical. To-day it is "Economy!" We are all for economy. I take it there is not a man on the floor of the Senate but would go any length in economy in an endeavor to curtail expenditures of government, and in an endeavor to eliminate expenditures that might be deemed in the slightest degree extravagant. To-day, sir, we have added to that other shibboleth which enabled us to become great statesmen, "Peace," by standing before audiences now and with two expressions win the enthusiastic approval of all those who sit in front of us, "For peace we are, and for economy, everyone of us." That is all we need do—just stand before an audience of our fellows and say, "For peace am I, and for economy am I," and the audience rises upon its hind feet and cheers to the echo every utterance of generalities of that kind.

Where we differ, of course, is in the application of either the one or the other. I repeat, that in talking of economy we have become a bit intoxicated with our own voices in the last month or two. We have become so intoxicated that we imagine an incense burns in front of us that rather benumbs our mental faculties. Economy! Economy! Economy!

"Where are we going to get the money?" asks my very dear friend from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] when the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] asks for $20,000 for some men, women, and children who are on a reclamation project in Montana and require a little relief under a bill. Twenty-odd thousand dollars; that is all. But the Senator from Tennessee inquires, "Where are we going to get the money? We must make our economies." He is right, of course. I am not questioning him in that regard. I admire the pertinacity and perseverance and sincerity with which he has made his fight upon this floor. But I submit, sir, there are some kinds of economy that are dearer than the dearest extravagance. When we deny to a little band of people upon a reclamation project like the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] had in mind $27,000 that is absolutely essential for their well-being and their welfare and their very life, then we practice an economy that no government can practice and that no government ought to practice.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, it is a very small matter that is involved in the particular case to which the Senator refers, but I invite his attention to the fact that the undisputed evidence in the record shows that there were no people waiting for water out there.

Mr. JOHNSON. Upon that matter there was a sharp dispute between the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Tennessee. I concede anything the Senator may desire in that regard, but that it was necessary for the well-being of those people is what I said, and being necessary there should not have been any question in relation to its being granted.

But economy, sir, takes different forms. Economy, sir, in many different phases is stalking through this Chamber and stalking through the other parts of the Government of the United States, the executive departments. Economy was not thought of at the beginning of this year when a moratorium was granted, but it is all-important now when, with $27,000 items and putting men upon the streets without work, we are to pay in this bill and in tax bills the amount we gave to Europe then. Economy then was in a different guise; and economy, sir, I venture the prediction, will be in a different guise in this Hall and in a different guise in the administration when June next comes and the period has arrived for another moratorium to be granted, for the granting of one means the granting of more, and it is the beginning of the end for the debts that were due to the United States. We gave $250,000,000 at the beginning of the year; we will give $270,000,000 in the middle of the year—$520,000,000 in all, that our people were entitled to and that was their due.

Throw it away, will we, and have naught to do with it? We will make it up by taking a few men off of public buildings and having them walk the streets and pound the pavements without work and without food. We will make it up by taking $27,000 from a wee bit of a reclamation project when men and women and children require it. We will make it up, sir, for what? For what? For our people? Not a bit of it, sir, not a bit of it. For our people? No, sir. We will make it up for others beyond the seas, and we make it up for those who ultimately receive the money that thus we give to Europe.

I spoke with some degree of feeling concerning the moratorium in the beginning of this year and concerning the question of cancellation of debts to this country. The subject apparently seems now to be a very live subject. Some would cancel outright. Some would revise. Some would grant another moratorium. Some would grant a moratorium during the lifetime of all the rest of us or for a period of a great number of years. All, however, who are for a moratorium, all, however, who talk of revision, in reality mean, whether they desire to mean it or not, cancellation of the indebtedness that is due to this country from European countries.

My words will be of little effect, of course, upon the debt situation. But I was very much interested in reading the remarks of a distinguished financier of this country in a statement that he made not very long ago, and his words may carry more weight. Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, in expressing himself concerning the war debts due to us, said:

> I am opposed to cancellation on our part. In the first place, our Government should only cancel its assets—that is, what the Allies owe us—but could not or would not cancel its liabilities which are owned by its own Liberty bondholders.

What we forget in talking of debts that are due us from foreign countries, when we talk of postponing them for one period or another period, revising them or canceling them, is that every penny that is lost in the process has to be made up by Americans and American taxpayers, has to be made up in exactly the way that with such care the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is endeavoring to make up various sums from the different appropriation bills. Every dollar of it, remember that! Talk of the terrible fix in which this country finds itself! Tell us we can not balance the Budget! Say to us we stand upon the brink of financial ruin! And then in the very beginning of the year, where that sort of thing is obvious and is known, give $250,000,000 to Europe that is paid to international bankers upon short-term credits and get ready, as I believe those who are in control of us are getting ready, to give another moratorium on $270,000,000 in the middle of this year—$520,000,000 in all!

Into what insignificance fade the various cuts that are made in appropriation bills when we prepare to do this sort of thing unto the American taxpayer, for, I repeat—and I can not say it too often—for every dollar whose payment we have thus postponed, for every penny that we fail to collect, we have got to go down into the pockets of American people and pick those pockets to make it up—every single solitary penny of it.

To resume with Mr. Baruch's statement:

> To cancel, in order indirectly to relieve Germany of further costs of the war, would be to take $300,000,000 a year from the backs of their industries and put it on ours, thus saddling us with a handicap of $600,000,000 a year on our industries, as compared with German industries in the international struggle for trade.

Some of the debtor nations say they can only pay in goods and services. Well, that is not an insuperable obstacle. Our Government might accept cash or partly commodities or partly foreign exchange.

Mr. Baruch concludes his statement by saying:

Foreign debts have a real value, one that we should not pass up too lightly. The $270,000,000 which the associated powers owe the United States for the next fiscal year is a small item compared with the whole of international payments, and it has been grossly exaggerated for propaganda purposes.

We could have collected, sir, our $250,000,000 at the end of last year or the beginning of this year if we had desired. We can collect the $270,000,000 which is due us in the middle of this year if we desire. The only problem is whether or not those who are striving now for revision or cancellation shall prevent that collection.

I read on April 5 in the press of this country how the Britons—and I honor them for the fashion in which they have faced their financial difficulties and practically solved them—repaid before it was due; and I hold in my hand the dispatch respecting that item—the $200,000,000 debt represented by the big credit received from American banks. It was repaid by them before it became due.

Repaid to whom? Why, repaid, of course, to our masters—Morgan & Co. They repaid the debt that they owed to Morgan & Co., and Britain would have paid the debt she owed to us on the 1st day of January last or in the latter part of December if we had chosen to insist upon the payment of that debt; and Britain and other countries will, in the middle of this year, pay the debts they owe us if we desire to insist upon the payment of their debts.

It is one thing to forgive a debtor the payment of his debt; it is another thing, though, by pretense to go to your people and assert that you are forgiving that debt by a moratorium or by revision, and that it is being applied to other purposes, when it could just as well be put to purposes for which it was contracted and be paid to those to whom it was due.

There is the vice of the present situation and of the propaganda that is in vogue for cancellation, for revision. Most of our friends said, "Oh, I oppose cancellation"; but they are careful always to leave open room for revision; and revision means in reality, first, reduction, then cancellation, just as the first moratorium meant other moratoria, and just as they will be followed by other moratoria in the days to come. There are $520,000,000 that we, in our hysteria of to-day, have forgotten all about, and about which we do not like to talk at all; but, sir, remember that $520,000,000 of the last year and of the middle of this year must, if its payment be postponed, come out of the pockets of American taxpayers, for whom we have heard pleas made in the Senate so often and in such lachrymose style; remember that every dollar and every penny of it must come out of these taxpayers of ours and must be paid by the American people.

I will stand for economy—economy that I can justify as a legitimate, logical reduction of what should be provided in any appropriation bill; I will stand for reduction in any salaries Congress wants to reduce except the reduction of the salary of those who receive $1,500, $2,000, $2,500, $3,000, and the like. I think, sir, reductions in salaries of people who have little to live upon to-day is the cruelest, the wickedest, and the meanest thing that could be done by the Congress of the United States. If we want to reduce salaries, let us do it on a wholesale scale; if we are going to reduce salaries, let us make no gesture to the American people. Let us say to the American people that no man with a salary of $10,000 or upward henceforth shall receive more than a dollar a year; then let us prove our economy, and let us go forward with an economy that will be of some value to the people of the United States.

I will not vote for 10 per cent reductions that will keep men out of employment and put them in the street; I do not believe in it. I will not vote for a 10 per cent reduction that will stop the building program which we ourselves induced and, inducing it ourselves, put men to work upon and now would snatch them from the work which we gave them under our promise and send them out in the streets to starve and, it may be, to die. For that sort of economy program I will not vote; for any real economy program I will be very glad to stand.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am not going to address myself now to the question of the 10 per cent reduction in appropriations further than to say that I think it is a very unscientific method of procedure. There is a method which is scientific and which I think Congress could agree upon, and if it should agree to give the President the necessary authority I am certain we could achieve satisfactory results.

I have had it in mind for some time to take an opportunity to say something about the situation which produced the moratorium. I have never taken any time to discuss that subject, but following the address of the Senator from California is a good opportunity to do it.

In 1924, after Germany had run the course of issuing fiat money until the German mark was absolutely worthless, she undertook to pay her domestic debts by repudiating them. By one stroke all the internal debts of Germany were canceled, and that cancellation by the process of depreciation of her measuring unit was the cause of the drying up of all the financial resources of a domestic character in Germany. It not only destroyed the savings of the entire middle class of people who had lived upon their incomes and had invested their capital in German-mark securities, but it also destroyed all domestic capital which otherwise would have been used for the rehabilitation of Germany.

It was an easy way for her to get rid of her enormous obligations to her own people, but, in getting rid of those obligations, the Government also reduced to nothing the securities of domestic industries which had been issued and held by her own people, and which were payable in marks. But, despite the cancellation of all her domestic obligations, Germany still had an obligation owing by her to foreign countries, because her obligations to those countries were in gold. She had reached a point of such distress as to call forth the best thought in the world, and finally, through what we know as the Dawes Commission, in 1924 there was constituted a set-up by which it was thought Germany could again be refinanced and put on her feet and not only rebuild her own industries but enter into the export business and pay the reparations to be fixed by the commission.

The Dawes Commission recommended that in order to enable Germany to be put in such position that she could pay her obligations she would have to be refinanced by foreign countries. All the industrial plants of Germany were intact; the soil of Germany had not been overrun by armies; Germany's population had not been affected except for those who had been killed or permanently disabled in the war; and she had the basis of a comeback if she could only secure the capital.

The conditions thus briefly set forth appealed to capital in every country in the world. Other nations believed that Germany had the background of a recovery, and they began to invest their capital in order to refinance Germany. In four years the enormous amount of $4,500,000,000 of foreign capital was invested in Germany for the rehabilitation of her railways, for the installation of new machinery, and equipment in her factories, for the rebuilding of her merchant marine, for the development of social-service work, and for manufactures for export business. In a brief period Germany's export business increased 45 per cent, while our export business increased but 17 per cent, and Great Britain's less than 6 per cent. Germany was in the heyday of production and also of distribution of goods with which she was paying her reparations. This brings us up to 1928. Germany had reached the high-water mark of her business in that year. Then the slump came in Germany 18 months before it began in the United States. In one year's time she dropped from that high mark to such an extent that she lost 44 per cent in her exports, 30 per cent in her imports, and had an unemployment of 4,866,000 men. That was in 1928, at least 18 months before we felt anything like an economic breakdown.

With this there naturally came a great fright; for as soon as the breakdown came in Germany, with this large proportion of unemployment, foreign capital that had been flowing to Germany ceased to flow there. Then the repercussion came where the outflow took place; and instead of the capital remaining in Germany it was withdrawn, and in a short time Germany lost $250,000,000 in withdrawals of gold, and the reserves went $111,000,000 below the safety mark.

This naturally produced fright in all Europe, and not only affected Germany but affected France and Great Britain. With that fright there naturally was a withdrawal or a refusal on the part of the short-term credit creditors to renew the obligations of Germany, and she faced what seemed to be a financial cataclysm.

That was not all. About this time a situation occurred in Austria that was equally serious.

Prior to the war Austria was a country of 55,000,000 people. After the war she was a country of only 7,000,000 people. Austria had three great banks which were the reliance of the business transactions of the dual monarchy; but when a country of 55,000,000 was reduced to a country of 7,000,000, of which Vienna was once the capital, the continued progress of this particular people and her financial institutions became an impossibility.

It was noted along in 1927 that the famous bank known as the Kreditanstalt, the famous Rothschild bank, was being embarrassed. That bank was established in 1855. It was not only the reliance of the financial needs of the dual monarchy, but it served all the surrounding countries; and when this pressure came upon Germany and Austria, as you will recall, there was an effort to establish a customs union. There was an effort to bring Germany and Austria under a financial agreement whereby Austria would have the support of the trade and finances of Germany.

That proposal was offered by the Foreign Minister of Austria, who stated that they could not afford to wait for the union of the united states of Europe, which Briand had already recommended, and therefore, as a sectional or regional plan, this was the first step to the Briand union, and was not to be regarded as antagonistic to the plan. However, the subject was very much overstimulated with excitement when the German Foreign Minister, speaking in the capital of Austria, referred to being again on the soil of the fatherland. That announcement was not whispered, but was quoted all over Europe, and the feeling that had existed between Germany and the Allies during the war was rapidly revived.

The result of this was that there was an effort on the part of both Germany and Austria to allay the bitterness in France, which claimed that the proposed customs union was a violation of four of the articles of the treaty of St. Germain. The Austrian people and the German people denied that it was a violation, but the feeling was so strong that the matter was taken up by England, and as a result of a visit to Paris it was recommended by the Foreign Minister of Great Britain that the matter be referred to the Council of the League of Nations to determine whether the proposed customs union was in violation of the treaty.

The subject was taken up by the council, and after some consideration it was unanimously agreed to refer it to the World Court. The World Court took up the matter, but feeling was running so high that even before a verdict was to be rendered by the World Court both Germany and Austria renounced the effort to establish the customs union. It had gone so far, however, that a fright came, and every Senator knows the result that came to the Kreditanstalt, the famous Rothschild bank.

That bank, in its effort to revive itself, had taken over the Anglo-Austrian Bank, which had affiliations in Great Britain, and on the directorate of this affiliated bank there were two British statesmen. Later on this bank also took over the famous Boden Anstalt, which was the rival of the original bank. In the process of time the whole institution suffered severe embarrassment, if not bankruptcy, although through these affiliations with the Boden bank and the Anglo-Austrian Bank it had been the banking center not only of Austria but of Czechoslovakia, Poland, Yugoslavia, and Switzerland, and did business in Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, having its ramifications in all of those countries.

When that bank became embarrassed, our country was notified by the press. As I recall, it was on the 6th of May, 1931, that this notice came here. On the 11th of May it was verified by our ambassador at Berlin. Before the middle of the month Germany, having superimposed upon her not only the breakdown of this bank but also the burden of paying reparations, faced dire calamity. Reparations had absorbed almost her entire current resources. I have here figures which indicate that to cover her adverse balances in commerce when she started on the downward road 6.3 per cent of all her revenues was required to cover adverse balance of trade; interest on credits from foreign countries, 2.5 per cent; to cover reparations, 10.3 per cent; and to increase the gold reserve, 2.1 per cent—meaning that of the entire income of the German Government, 21.2 per cent was going out of the country to satisfy charges which had been fixed upon her by the war.

It was these withdrawals of the credits that had been established that made it impossible for Germany to proceed further. She did not have the capital herself. She could not borrow it from foreign countries. The short-term credits as well as the long-term credits already established were withdrawn, and Germany was facing a situation where it was impossible for her to meet the demands upon her. She paid reparations under the Young plan for three years, and in 1931 she made these payments for three months, and was approaching the payment due in July, which was the fourth payment, when she finally made the announcement that it was simply impossible for her to pay.

Gilbert, who was the financial agent under these commissions, in his report on reparations made the startling announcement of the financial situation of Germany. Her long-term debts to private creditors were $2,272,000,000. Her debts to citizens of the United States were 55.2 per cent of this amount; to Great Britain, 12.3 per cent; to Holland, 8.3 per cent; to Switzerland, 5.4 per cent; to France, 5 per cent. These were the obligations that Germany owed outside of reparations. These obligations were not to governments. They were to private citizens. They totaled almost two and a half billion dollars.

The long-term debt in the way of government reparations under the Young plan was to be paid in annuities from 1929 to 1988. That was rather a dark picture, stretching out to 1988. During the first seven months of 1929 Germany paid $776,800,000 in reparations. In the second year she paid $406,600,000. In the third year she made monthly payments amounting to $401,000,000. The payments due in April, May, and June were also made; but when it came to the fourth payment, that of July, Germany took the position that it was not possible for her to make it, which meant that she was ready to default.

The total payments that were due, that Germany said she could not make, were as follows: To France, $199,706,880; to Great Britain, $86,228,400; to Italy, $45,448,560; to others, $54,190,500; making a sum total of $385,574,240 that was due to be paid in July.

She owed something to us, not very much. All Senators will recall that we never asked for any reparations. In fact, President Wilson made it distinct in the discussion of the treaty that the United States wanted no indemnity, asked for no reparations. For that reason we are justified in taking a firm stand, as we always have done, that those loans which were made to these countries were made in good faith, that they are solemn obligations and can not be canceled. If those countries want to default, that is a different thing, but as to our voluntarily saying "We forgive the debt," I do not think the American people will ever agree to such a position as that.

The German short-term debts to private citizens, to say nothing about reparations or the debts to the governments, in December, 1930, amounted to $2,450,000,000. In July the amount had been reduced to $1,900,000,000.

I have here the Wiggin report of the allotment of these private debts in percentages. I will not read them, but ask that they be inserted in the RECORD. Of the amount due at this particular time, two billion four hundred and fifty millions—37.1 per cent—is due to the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Can the Senator state what amount of short-term credits were paid by Germany between July, 1931, and January, 1932?

Mr. FESS. I do not have the figures as late as that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Doctor Melchoir made the statement, as it was published in the press dispatches, that she paid $250,000,000 of short-term credits during that period. Does the Senator know whether that be accurate or not?

Mr. FESS. I should think that is rather an enormous sum for that period.

Mr. JOHNSON. I simply quote what he stated.

Mr. FESS. I would state to the Senate and to my friend from California that my data are largely, so far as the British situation is concerned, the McMillan report, and as to the German situation, the Wiggin report, and then the publication of facts as I get them from the press, especially the New York Times.

I ask unanimous consent that some figures I have which I have not read may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. FESS. The financial situation which I have detailed here by these figures would indicate the very serious situation in Germany the first half of last year. The loss to the Reichsbank caused when the announcement was made that Germany could not meet its obligations, the first week of June, was $21,000,000 of gold. By the end of the second week of June it lost $126,000,000, and by the end of the third week it had lost $227,000,000. In other words, in three weeks the German bank which is the basis of German finance lost 40 per cent of all its holdings. By another week it would have been totally gone.

Between April and July, 1928, banks paid in short-term credits $310,000,000. Americans called home $160,000,000. The British withdrew $25,000,000. The Dutch withdrew $50,000,000. The Swiss withdrew about the same sum, and the French withdrew $18,000,000.

I do not want the Senate to overlook these figures; the private investments in Germany by 1930 were $6,000,000,000 plus. That is the amount of money that investors in America and elsewhere having confidence in German industry poured into Germany, and the obligations were held by the purchaser with no security except the German good name and the financial stability of her industries.

The Young Commission divided the German payments into two classes, as the Senate will recall, the unconditional payments and the conditional payments. If in June, 1931, Germany had sought relief through postponement of the payment due, it could not have been done under the Young plan short of 90 days, because that was the condition on which a withdrawal of the payment should be made.

That made it impossible for Germany to meet the payments, if, in the first place, she was not permitted to withdraw the unconditional at any rate; and if she could not withdraw the conditional except in 90 days' time, within another week's time after the announcement that she could not pay she would collapse.

The Government desired to save the American investor, who in good faith had purchased German securities, whereupon his money went to Germany, for which he received German paper, and then with this German paper in hand he borrowed from American banks with the German paper as security. If Germany collapsed, it would have meant a loss of not only the $4,000,000,000 invested in Germany, but it would have meant a loss in addition to the borrower, to the banker, who loaned to the investor upon the collateral of the German industrial securities.

What would be the result in the United States of a sudden announcement that in a week's time six billions of securities had become worthless? What would be the result to the banks which had loaned to the holders that amount of money, or whatever they could borrow with such security? If anyone could conceive of the fatal results of such a collapse to all America he would readily appreciate the necessity of quick action.

It involved not only the loss to the American purchaser of that enormous amount of money, but it meant the derangement of the banker who held that worthless paper as security behind the borrowings which had been made by the people who had purchased the German securities. How many banks would have been crippled and how seriously would be difficult to say. The matter was first the subject of interviews in Germany with our Ambassador Sackett. It was also a matter of conference with other statesmen in France and Britain. It just so happened that at that particular time Mr. Mellon was in Europe. On the 5th of June, 1931, the situation facing Germany, and especially American investors in German securities, was presented to the officials of the Government in the capital here in Washington. About the 8th of June a Cabinet meeting was held, and the matter was laid before the Cabinet. In direct, constant communication not only with the American ambassador at Berlin but also with the President of Germany, the situation was reported here, and in communication with two Americans in Europe, Secretary Stimson and Secretary Mellon, the matter was reported in outline.

On the 16th of June, while the President was at Marion, Ohio, on the occasion of the dedication of the Harding memorial, the word came from Germany privately that Germany might collapse by Monday, the 20th. The matter was discussed that day between the President, General Dawes, and others, and the President suggested that if Congress would agree he would recommend without delay that we postpone the payments of the allied obligations for one year, provided they would postpone the demands on Germany for one year, giving Germany that time to adjust her situation. The President was so impressed by what had been represented to him officially from Europe that he decided that as soon as he returned to Washington, which would be on the 18th of June, as he was to be in Springfield, Ill., the 17th, the matter should be taken up with the leaders of all political parties for consultation and approval if they agreed with him on the gravity of the situation.

It was on the 18th day of June that conferences were held here in the Capital; the matter was laid before the Republican and Democratic leaders of the Congress, together with others, with the result that a proposal was made in an effort to prevent the collapse of Germany, not primarily for the benefit of Germany, although that was in mind, but primarily to protect those Americans who, believing in German stability, invested in German securities through representations made, some of which, I think, were indefensible. Those securities were sold to people in every part of the United States, who purchased them because the purchasers believed in the stability of Germany. If they were rendered worthless by one announcement, that the Government backing them had gone into bankruptcy, no one could tell the far-reaching effect it would have, not only on the holders of the securities, but on the institutions which held the worthless securities as collateral for the loans they had made. No one could have predicted what would have been the financial fatality if that thing had been permitted. So far as I know, without a single exception among those who were consulted—and the President undertook to consult everybody who was here and many who were at their homes—there was universal approval that this was the thing to do. When it was done and made public it struck a note of enthusiasm throughout the world which I in my lifetime have never been duplicated. It was pronounced the world over as a master stroke, a very wise course for America to pursue.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FESS. I would prefer not to yield until I get through with my statement.

I am considerably disturbed over the statement that this is cancellation of the debt.

Mr. HOWELL. I just want to ask the Senator if there were not seven nations which were indebted to the United States, which were to receive nothing from Germany, and yet a moratorium was granted to them also.

Mr. FESS. That perhaps is true.

Mr. HOWELL. Why should it have been done?

Mr. JOHNSON (in his seat). For good measure.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from California says "for good measure."

Mr. HOWELL. Was it not for good-fellowship?

Mr. FESS. I will permit the statement of the Senator from California to stand, because I am talking about what we have done.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will please permit me to finish what I have to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am disturbed because sincere and honest men throughout the United States, and some in this body, jump to the conclusion that because of the postponement for a year cancellation is meant. The President knew that statement would be made. That matter had been talked over with him, and he understood there would be charges that this was the first step to cancellation.

It might be possible that there will be a default in Europe on the payment of these loans. No one can tell. I can not imagine how any nation with any self-respect for its future could under any circumstances willingly default a solemn obligation, for what would its credit be in the future if such a thing were done? I know they have tried to argue that they do not owe us the debt. They have tried to put it upon the ground that they are not defaulting. But I resent the insinuation that this was a gift and that it is not a debt. This is as solemn a debt as ever was contracted by one nation to another. If Europe decides to default it, we can not collect it, of course. She must pay the penalty that goes with a bankrupt credit, but it certainly can not be charged that we are doing it. It might result in that, but it will not be the result of this debt.

Then, of course, everybody knew that when we said, "If you will defer your exactions on Germany for a year, we will postpone the collection of your debt to us for a year," people would say that mixes German reparations with our loans. In a way it does, because the two are mentioned together, but it should not. The President on his proposal categorically stated the contrary. We never under any circumstances had considered for one second the allegation of Europe that they should pay provided Germany pays them; that their payment to us depends upon whether Germany pays them or not. Great Britain has never taken that view, but other countries have taken it. In season and out of season, first announced by President Wilson, and reannounced by Harding and Coolidge and the present President, we have refused to make our collections upon these loans dependent upon whether Germany pays them reparations or not.

The two are entirely different, for, as I have stated, we did not claim any indemnity, we asked for no territory, we demanded no reparations. The only thing we did demand from Germany was that when, at her request, we kept our Army over there in occupation for a time, we said it could be done provided they would pay the expense of keeping the Army there for a specified length of time. Repayment of that expense is the only thing this Government took from Germany, and that was not in the form of reparations or indemnity. Therefore for those countries to claim that they owe us and will pay on the condition that reparations are paid is all a one-sided matter. It is not our position at all. It never was and is not now.

What I had in mind was that when knowledge of this serious situation reached us and it was announced that Germany could not pay, the very announcement of Chancellor Bruening that Germany was not able to pay frightened every nation and all citizens holding German obligations.

Then we must not overlook the fact that the Nationalist Socialist Party, led by Mr. Hitler, had one year received less than 1,000,000 and in two years' time the vote jumped to 6,000,000. What did he represent? He called upon Germany to repudiate every financial obligation of the treaty and to announce to all Europe that they were through for all time with the payment of reparations. With such an appealing plea of a brilliant leader there was a tremendous growth of support. Then the communist party grew pretty rapidly. Business Germany, stable Germany, the people who believed in the integrity of their Government, became frightened at what might be the outcome of a contest of that kind. Consequently there was a great flight of gold from Germany and it looked as if there was going to be a total collapse. When the President, with the approval of the leaders of Congress—not of the Congress itself but the leaders of Congress—made a proposal, as I said before, it was pretty widely accepted, except in France.

It is sometimes a little difficult for me to see this problem with relation to France as I ought to see it. I know she is a wonderful country. Her conduct and ability demand the praise and commendation of all the world, and our sympathies were with her in her difficulties. But it has been difficult all along to deal with her. It might be that her sensitiveness is due to her suspicion that we have not been as cordial with her as we ought to be. I do not think that suspicion is well founded, but I know it is there. Consequently, when the proposal of a postponement for a year came up, it immediately produced almost universal approval except in France. There it was not favorably received, but, on the other hand, it provoked considerable criticism.

Finally there was an agreement, after considerable contention, in which two Cabinet members of the United States, who happened to be sojourning in Europe at the time, took part. There was finally an agreement in which differences were partially ironed out. France, as it appeared, at first did not want to agree to a moratorium at all, but ultimately was willing to agree to it provided that the postponed payments were to be made in the next two years. The United States asked that Germany be given 25 years to pay the postponed amount. France contended for two years. They finally agreed upon a compromise of 10 years. That was the first point of dispute upon which they finally agreed.

Then the United States wanted the moratorium to be complete and to include all that was owing from Germany to France, but France insisted that under no circumstances would she include the unconditional payments. Finally it was agreed that the payments should be made to the Bank for International Settlement which had been created under the Young plan and that when the money was paid by Germany to this bank it should be reloaned to Germany, and we agreed to that. That was the second point of difference between us and France upon which agreement was finally reached.

Then France insisted that if there be payment back to Germany, $25,000,000 of it should be paid to the Balkan States in the little Entente. The United States refused to agree to that and finally France yielded that point of contention. Also it was decided that there should be a conference later to determine what more could be done for Germany, for the simple reason that her short-term credits, which had been refused renewal and which were coming due and could not be paid, must of necessity be renewed so that the payment could be excused for the time being. It will be recalled that the Bank of International Settlement had agreed to recommend a renewal for a certain period of time, three months, on the short-term credits. When they could not agree as to what should be done with reference to the long-term credits they finally came to the recommendation that a committee of 10 representing the great banking institutions of 10 countries be created to study the problem and make recommendations to the respective governments. Up to that time all differences had been ironed out except as to the long-term credits; and the famous committee, known to-day as the Wiggin committee, was authorized to make a study of conditions and report as to what should be done with respect to long-term credits.

I have read that committee's report, which is exceedingly comprehensive, though I admit that it makes some recommendations which very much disturb me. It makes the statement very frankly that, beyond what has already been done, something additional must be done for the relief of Germany. However, the committee's work and the conclusions reached by it were to be reported to the various governments for future consideration.

Mr. President, that was the situation which faced our Government when the German collapse was announced, the announcement being made by the highest authority in the German Republic. Just as soon as the report of the Wiggin committee was made public, which indicated that Germany was still in danger, it frightened not only the financial organizations of Germany but the fright extended to France and also to Great Britain. Then followed what none of us believed would ever happen. I wish to take a little time to indicate the effect of this fright on Great Britain.

This marked the end of the international phase of the German crisis, which had hung like a pall over the world since June. German collapse was avoided; the gold standard was preserved, and the United States was looked upon as the hope of Europe.

The economic shock was not over in Germany when the storm broke upon England. The President's moratorium proposal deferred for one year the payment by Germany of more than $400,000,000, representing the payments she would have to have made for reparations according to the Young plan. Nevertheless the short-term credit situation required additional relief, as the standstill agreement imposed by the Government upon private creditors had sounded the note of alarm to investors the world over. The movement of securities and holdings into safety channels was an immediate result. Suspension by German banks of the payment of foreign obligations created a suspicion of all banks in all countries, including England, which was first evidenced by the flight of gold from Britain.

In early June, 1931, German gold had sought safety in England where the pound held steadily at $4.86. When it was known that Germany could not pay, fright encompassed the great banking houses in the world's financial stronghold. In a week's time $156,000,000 escaped from the Bank of England. The panic became so rampant that by the 1st of August Great Britain's gold reserve had fallen below the requirement of the law.

We are familiar with the titanic struggle Britain has waged against the forces of depression. The report of the Macmillan committee called attention to the peculiar situation of Great Britain in the world-wide depression. Being a small island country, with a crowded population, four-fifths of whom live in towns, she is dependent upon the outside for 60 per cent of what her people consume in the way of food products and other necessities. Her exports were gradually falling off; trade balances were becoming smaller, to be cared for by drawing upon past savings. Exports since 1913 had fallen off 32 per cent, and imports had increased 18 per cent. This trend toward an unfavorable balance of trade resulted in a falling off of commercial strength and a gradual diminution of position, due to constant drain upon past savings. The increase of production costs, together with an alarming growth of tax burdens in the face of constant changes in industrial position due to the employment of substitutes and the new competition abroad, offered a supreme test to Britain. So long as Britain was a creditor country, gold costs did not disturb her; but when she became a debt-paying country, the high-cost sterling was not to be regarded as an advantage.

One remedy looked toward a reduction of wages and a lowering of taxes as well as reduction of social-service activities and unemployment allowances. Such allowances were attacked as an unnecessary burden on the people and as an evil tending to the breakdown of character, which should be avoided.

Others assailed the moneyed class as an element made possible only by exploiting the laborer, and they demanded restitution in the form of an increase in the already high taxes and resisted the efforts to lower wages or curtail social-service activities. They also proposed the remedy of stabilizing the pound at a less figure, so as to increase price levels by those means and through international agreement. The specific remedy proposed by this element was the abandonment of the gold standard.

Such economists as Keynes of the Macmillan commission did not recommend against the gold standard, and, in fact, he favored it, but he did sound the alarm by calling attention to the steady decline of world prices and recommended that the central banks take note and check this dangerous course, else the modern economic organization was destined to collapse. Banks were fearful of any managed credit or currency system, just as we are afraid of it, designed to force prices upward contrary to the recommendation and warning of a commission of distinguished bankers, economists, and statesmen. There is not a Senator here who does not know the danger of undertaking to enhance values by manipulating the currency. That is sometimes done, but it is generally done in emergencies, and it is a very serious undertaking.

During this period when British financial integrity was largely dependent upon assistance from New York and Paris, another report was made by Sir George May in which he declared that $600,000,000 in additional taxes would have to be collected in order to balance the budget. Such an increase in taxation would be serious in a country where such great unemployment existed. The commission recommended a reduction of 20 per cent in the unemployment allowance, which would save $400,000,000. Chancellor Snowden in August disclosed the alarming fact that the treasury would not have funds by November. This was sufficient to frighten capital, especially when the New York-Paris credit of $250,000,000 extended August 1 was gone by August 23, being entirely exhausted in 23 days, creating a situation which made impossible further foreign financing, because under the circumstances resort could not be had to borrowing.

To balance the budget was essential. To balance international payments by reducing costs of manufacturing pointed definitely to a reduction of wages and the cost of social service. This was the issue upon which the Labor government split, and an election was called. The new government, with MacDonald at its head, took the necessary steps to balance the budget. The process involved a reduction of the dole, of government salaries and wages, and of grants for social-service work, and also an increase of taxes.

Those are the issues on which MacDonald appealed to the people of England at an election in which he sought a vindication of his position. We, in this Chamber, to a large extent are talking of the same things every day—reducing the cost of government all down the line and at the same time undertaking to impose additional taxes.

Following the election a credit of $400,000,000 was extended to the British Treasury by private bankers in New York and Paris.

The action taken by the British Government appealed to banking houses in America and France, and they rendered support.

In spite of the steps taken, however, the flight of gold was unabated. The persistent attitude of the Labor element foreshadowed powerful opposition to the one of two alternatives, either a lower wage scale or a higher price level, the first resulting from reduced wages and unemployment allowances, and the second from an inflation of the pound.

On September 15, after the decision of the government, mutiny broke out in the British fleet. By the middle of September, or prior thereto, the credit supplied in August was exhausted, and gold was steadily flowing away from London—$1,000,000,000 having been lost since the middle of July.

Five days after its first meeting, the cabinet decided to suspend gold payments and on the following day, September 21st, Parliament passed the bill authorizing the abandonment of the gold standard.

Such a drastic and unexpected step by this historically stable country produced a profound impression in every financial center of the globe. The repercussion was felt in every industry and channel of trade, national and international, and called for concerted action to avoid commercial and financial collapse even affecting the economic and political integrity of governments, making advisable for mutual counsel and cooperation the part of stable countries. It was known that the action of Great Britain would carry with it the currencies of other nations. Norway, Sweden, and Denmark abandoned the gold standard within a week. In another week other nations would be affected, and most of the countries of South America had gone off the gold standard some time before.

It was known that this action would carry with it the currencies of other countries, and Senators know what followed. To-day in all Europe and Asia only France, Belgium, Holland, and Switzerland are on the gold basis. Every other country in the Old World is off the gold standard; and if France should go off, the other three would go off overnight. This is not only true of Europe; it is universally true all over the Western Hemisphere. There is not a gold-standard country in the Western Hemisphere but the United States and Canada, if we are to include Canada. All the rest have gone, and there are only four in Europe. Of course, Germany nominally is on the gold standard, but that is because of an executive order of Von Hindenburg forbidding the exportation of gold; so we may say that Germany is virtually off the gold standard.

Every country naturally turned to America and France, the two great nations with sound basis of credit and possessed of abundant gold reserves. Within our borders could be found half the known gold in the world. France was next in possession of the precious metal.

On September 25, four days after Great Britain abandoned the gold standard, it was announced in French official circles that France would be glad to consult with America on the problem of the gold standard. An invitation to this effect was immediately extended by President Hoover and was formally accepted and approved by the French Council of Ministers, over which the French President presided at the time of the meeting.

On October 22, M. Laval and party arrived in New York. Our fiscal records show that one month after Great Britain's suspension of the gold standard, when Laval reached America, all forms of money in circulation in the United States had increased in the year over $1,000,000,000, and the total amounted to $5,500,000,000, or more than was in circulation in 1928–29, at the height of business activity.

Senators, that is a remarkable record. With less work to do in 1930 and 1931, we had the largest circulation of money in the peace-time history of America—$5,500,000,000. That indicates that it is not want of money in the country but lack of the use of money, caused entirely by lack of confidence, that has caused money to hide and refuse to come out to work. That is the cause of our difficulty.

In spite of the fact that the 20 per cent lower wholesale price would call for less currency, there was in actual circulation 22 per cent more currency in 1931 than in 1930. The numerous bank failures decreased the use of credit and increased the employment of cash. Unwillingness of banks to continue usual loans to local industry, including retailers, retarded business sales on the one hand and created new demands for cash on the other. Here is the beginning of the double tragedy of runs on banks on the one hand and hoarding of cash on the other, and the result was the closing of banks with sound assets but in an unliquid condition.

With the credit breakdown a new fright for the gold standard appeared. This caused a scramble for the possession of gold, in which European banks made stupendous calls upon the world's greatest gold center, New York.

England's abandonment of the gold standard by Parliamentary action was on September 21. By the end of the week $160,000,000 of gold was withdrawn from New York. During the first two weeks of October over $300,000,000 more was withdrawn. Between September 21 and October 20 the net loss from the American gold reserve was $665,000,000.

This outward flow of gold, following the British assault on the gold standard, stimulated the fear in American circles which took the shape of hoarding money. The reserves were gradually declining from 82 per cent in 1930 to less than 60 per cent by October, 1931, a symptom of concern to the Federal reserve system. Soon after the abrupt and surprising step had been taken by England, the President had a conference of the leading bankers of the country, before whom he submitted a plan of a national credit corporation for the purpose of aiding banks to liquefy their assets to avoid the necessity of voluntary closing because of frozen assets. Two days later he presented the plan to a group of Senators and leaders of both the Republican and Democratic Parties for their approval. Although the plan did not involve legislation, the chief purpose was to assure restoration of confidence in our credit facilities by securing the approval of bankers, business men, the Government, and political leaders in and out of Congress. The President referred to the European situation as affecting us, and the visit of Laval to talk over the problems of the two countries.

The belief was expressed that through the influence of political and banking circles, including the central banks of France, the newspaper propaganda against the American dollar would be ended if they desired to do so.

Every Senator here will recall that on the last day of last week there was an assault in Paris by a certain great leader on the American dollar by the announcement, which seemed to be official, that the National City Bank of New York had suspended gold payments; and it became a matter of necessity for the American Government, as I think, to take official recognition of this assault in Paris on the gold dollar. This was the second assault that had been made; and at the particular time of which I am speaking it required the Government's promise to punish any person undertaking in this method to frighten the two countries to such an extent that the gold standard would be lost by either. Soon afterwards this campaign ceased, and we were assured that France and her banking interests were not conspiring against the dollar but were quite anxious to maintain its position in their own interest.

It was made plain that the French Government was not a party to this movement. Quick action of the Federal reserve bank in adjusting rates to meet new conditions and the expressed willingness of American banks to pay gold on demand immediately stabilized the dollar, and relieved the gathering storm tending toward changes in our monetary system, the danger of which was removed in most financial circles both in Europe and in America.

The financial position in Europe occupied by France, and that of the United States in America, both almost alone in the maintenance of the gold standard, invited the two into community of action. They were the two creditor countries of the earth, one by the dictum of war and the other by business transactions. Within their strong boxes was found three-fourths of the monetary gold of the world. France, Switzerland, Holland, and Belgium were the only European countries which sustained the gold standard. The United States stood alone in the New World, unless Canada be excepted. The operation of the gold standard amid such transitions was a subject inviting consideration of the money powers; hence, the logic of the Laval visit. The joint statement made to the public by the President and Laval after the conference included the following:

> We are convinced of the importance of monetary stability as an essential factor in the restoration of normal economic life in the world, in which the maintenance of the gold standard in France and the United States will serve as a major influence. It is our intent to continue to study methods for the maintenance of stability in international exchanges.

This pronouncement of the policy of the two Governments continuing the gold standard quieted the persistent rumors in the foreign press that the United States would follow Great Britain or that any inflationary policy would be adopted. A declaration to remove all doubt was desired in France—a fact which disproved the allegation or suspicion that the French Government had any part in the campaign against the dollar.

The kaleidoscopic operations in economic values sent gold into hiding and seriously disturbed our own credit system. The constant lowering of commodity prices hopelessly interrupted normal borrowing, due to inability to pay, on the one hand, and refusal to renew loans on the same collateral, on the other. Banks with ample assets, but unliquid, were forced to close. Lowering of returns endangered the refinancing of major industries, which in case of default would be forced into bankruptcy or receivership, with loss to employment of labor and injury to the public interest; hence the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. President, I have taken the time to give the result of a careful study of this particular period, to give the background from the standpoint of the condition of Austria through the breakdown of her greatest financial fabric, and the standpoint of the situation of Germany, which had issued through her industries $6,000,000,000 of securities, a large part of which were sold in America and are possessed by Americans, in order that we may understand why, in the conference of the President with the leaders of both sides of the aisle in this and another Chamber, the moratorium was decided upon.

I wish persons would discontinue their habit of constantly stating that we "gave" Europe $400,000,000. There is not a scintilla of foundation of fact in that statement. We simply excused these countries for one year from the payment of the amount they owed us, giving them 10 years in which to pay it piecemeal. Not a dollar was given to them, and not a dollar was ever intended to be given to them.

The President, with the cooperation of Democrats and Republicans, announced the moratorium primarily in the interest of American citizens rather than on behalf of foreign countries. The President, with the cooperation of Democrats and Republicans, brought about the creation of the National Credit Corporation to resist the trend in the closing of banks due to this situation. The President invited Laval here to understand, if possible, how we could maintain France and America on the gold standard and to express the hope that France would take the lead in the solution of Europe's problems. The President, with the cooperation of Democrats and Republicans, created the Reconstruction Finance program to prevent the industrial bankruptcy that was rapidly coming on us, because the depression that started in Germany, two years before we felt it, was covering the earth like a great eclipse and causing the overturn of governments throughout the world like a house of cards.

I, as a Republican, desire here and now publicly to thank the leadership of the Democratic Party for standing by this program of the President, by which he is trying to pull the Government out of the gloom which now enshrouds it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, somewhat related to what the Senator from Ohio has been saying in reference to monetary reform, one of the important things we have to keep in mind is the necessity of building up our export trade so as to dispose of our surplus products in foreign markets.

Senate Resolution 156, as amended, which authorizes an investigation by a special committee of the Senate of depreciation of foreign currency values, has been agreed to.

I have received this morning from the American Manufacturers Export Association, whose membership seems to include all of the principal exporting manufacturers of the country, a most instructive and exhaustive survey of the effect upon our exports of the exchange control restrictions now in effect in some 29 foreign countries.

These facts coming from the exporters themselves seem to show rather conclusively that the slump in our export trade is due to the inability of our foreign customers to obtain dollar exchange with which to remit for goods shipped. No inducement by way of rebates on existing obligations could conceivably overcome this difficulty.

The question which the United States must answer is simply this: How long can we continue to pay our bills for imports without collecting from our debtors for exports?

I call the attention of the committee, which has been or will be appointed, to these facts, and ask that they consider this question and report on it.

For the information of the Senate, I should like to insert in the RECORD a part of the report of the American Manufacturers Export Association to its members.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> 1. The converting of foreign exchange is the "key problem" confronting American exporters at the present time. Seventy per cent of the members replying indicate that longer credit terms are being granted or taken because of delays encountered in converting foreign exchange into dollars.

2. Permits or "certificates of necessity for importation" when issued by the control boards provide the importer with foreign exchange to meet drafts. These permits when issued have so far been rarely revoked or altered. Sixty per cent of the replies regarding exchange conversion delays indicate that the buyers in foreign countries do not or can not obtain a "permit" or "certificate of necessity" for their importations.

3. Exchange difficulties are reported in 29 countries. The delays encountered are not uniform. Of course, what constitutes a necessity varies by countries and accounts partially for the varying experiences, but not all. Conditions seem to exist that indicate some importers are able to obtain exchange either through diligence or preference while another importer of the same type of product is confronted with difficulties of getting exchange in the same country. Exporters who are having difficulty in exchange conversion should insist that their foreign distributors or agents establish close contact with exchange control boards and to leave no stone unturned to expedite the issuance of import permits or official advice as to date of availability of exchange.

4. Only 35 per cent of those replying felt their sales could be increased if longer credit terms could be granted originally. They felt that the granting of such terms would not result in an unusual credit hazard and were justified because of exchange difficulties. Some exporters, particularly of consumable products, felt unwilling to give longer terms, because they thought the practice was unsound economically.

5. Those exporters leaving their receipts on deposit in foreign countries report no objections from any foreign government to using such proceeds to buy local products for export. Some members' agents or distributors are ready to make purchases in local currencies.

6. Many exporters are inquiring in the United States for importers who need local currencies in foreign countries for the purchase of their products for importing.

7. Exchange difficulties have caused American exporters to abandon wholly or temporarily many of their foreign markets. Of those replying, 55 per cent said they were not selling in countries at all where the exchange problems had forced them out. In the exchange control countries where sales are still being made about 45 per cent of the exporters replying stated the business done is for cash or "SD/BL." The volume of business in all such countries has been considerably reduced.

8. Estimates of requirements for use of approximately $25,000,000 of credit or collection assistance from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have been received from members. Replies of others indicate that 65 per cent of all those who are interested in the financing facilities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are unable to estimate their requirements from data now in their files and are reluctant to canvass their oversea agents or distributors for such data until the Reconstruction Finance Corporation plan and its requirements for collateral or bank guaranties are available for detailed study. This would seem to indicate that the demand for financing be considerably larger once these conditions are known.

9. Those replying felt that the normal foreign demand for American products is not being filled by local manufacturers. Some felt that their European competitors' sales are less affected by the depreciation of foreign currencies, for, while the American dollar has not depreciated, currencies of several exporting European countries have been depreciated. England, many felt, had attempted to overcome exchange difficulties in her export trade by going off the gold standard. In Germany, various members advised, the Reichsbank has assumed all foreign-exchange risk and thus relieves German exporters of such risk. France seems to have helped her exporters to some extent by governmental purchases of both foreign exchange and all large quantities of foreign raw products for resale to French industry.

Some members felt that the recent prohibitive tariffs and customs quotas made effective in "debtor countries" were conceived as a protection against any further depreciation of their currencies through depletion of export exchange and gold reserves.

10. The experience of those reporting is that there is ample local credit and consumption capacity in 80 per cent of our foreign markets for all products that can be purchased there with local currency. They felt a solution of the exchange problem, therefore, might dispel the fear of further currency depreciations and bring about the lowering of tariff walls and the removal or liberalization of customs quotas.

COLOMBIAN GOVERNMENT DECREE RELATIVE TO FOREIGN EXCHANGE AND REQUIRING REGISTRATION OF CERTAIN FOREIGN CLAIMS WITH THE "CONTROL BOARD"

Question. Please let us have information regarding the Colombian Government decree covering foreign exchange and requiring registration of certain foreign claims with the "control board."

Answer. The Colombian Government has just enacted Emergency Decree No. 421, with reference to the use of foreign exchange for the payment of foreign claims for merchandise imported into Colombia prior to September 24, 1931. This decree provides that for the payment of such claims foreign exchange may be obtained only in periodical installments of 20 per cent of the amount of such claims. The decree further provides that all such claims must be duly proved and registered with the control board prior to April 6, 1932. A further decree dated April 5 extended the time in which to file such claims to May 6, 1932.

Inasmuch as debtors can not be relied upon to register the claims with the control board, we are recommending to clients who have such claims: (1) That they issue immediate cable instructions to local representatives or to local banks to attend to the registration required by this decree, and (2) that they also send by the next mail (air mail, if necessary) to the local representative or local bank the following supporting documents: Statement of account, duplicate bill of lading, and duplicate commercial and consular invoices.

(Prepared by Marvin & Bergh, general counsel for American Manufacturers Export Association.)

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I had intended to go in some detail into the pending resolution and to submit some views on the general problem of the practice of economy and reduction of expenditures, but the hour is so late I will not attempt to do so now.

I hesitate, however, to let this day pass without reference to a situation in connection not only with our foreign commerce but with our merchant marine, our facilities for reaching the markets of the world.

Last Saturday a statement was issued at the White House setting forth a proposal to suspend for one year the operation of all Shipping Board lines, at an estimated saving of $7,500,000. That figure, incidentally, is incorrect, because the fact is that the Shipping Board proposes to operate those lines now operated by it for the coming year at a cost of $5,000,000.

The estimate in this statement was that we would save $7,500,000 by discontinuing the operation of the lines for one year. In the first place, what an absurd thing that would be. What sort of a merchant would venture to set up business and get established, and then suddenly give notice, "I have so much overhead here, expenses are so high, and rents are so heavy that I am going to close my store for a year and then come back and resume business."

That is the situation we would be in. We have spent millions of dollars to establish an American merchant marine, we have these lines and these services now being rendered, and the proposal is to suspend operations for one year in order to save this estimated amount of $7,500,000, which would probably be $5,000,000 instead.

Of course, it would mean that we might just as well scrap our merchant ships, just as well give up the idea, which has been emphasized over and over again by Congress, and the people of the country have demanded that we establish and maintain an adequate American merchant marine to serve American commerce overseas. We might just as well give up the idea if we are going to suspend operations for a year.

What would the foreigner do? He would come right in and take our place on the high seas. We would never get back our custom, our business, our trade. We could not make headway any more.

As indicating that, I have word here now that the tentative proposal to suspend the Shipping Board lines is causing irreparable damage, that foreign lines are taking full advantage of that situation by again stating that American services are temporary and unreliable. That is what they have said from the start. They have said, "Do not patronize American ships, because this is only an experiment and a temporary arrangement. Soon they will be off the seas. Keep your connections with our ships, our foreign lines. We are here forever. We have been here since the year one, and we are going to continue here."

They have been saying all along that we did not mean what we said when we proclaimed our intention to the world, and made the appropriations, and spent $4,000,000,000 building ships, that we did not mean that seriously at all, that we were only doing it for the war, and that then we were going to quit. That is what they are saying to-day, after this statement or suggestion proposing that we temporarily give up these services, surrender these routes, and tie up our ships for one year, in order to save this amount of money.

It is perfectly absurd, it seems to me, and, I repeat, it plays into the hands of our competitors. Such a policy would mean absolutely the scrapping of these ships.

I would like to have the Government save money, have it economize. I commend the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] for his splendid work in the direction of reducing governmental expenses. I think it has been clearly demonstrated that he was wise and patriotic in proposing the resolution with reference to the Interior Department appropriation bill, sending it back with a direction to the committee to cut the aggregate 10 per cent. That was done; it was found possible, and it did not destroy the Interior Department or any of its bureaus or any of its essential activities.

We must not go too far in that direction, I grant. There is such a thing as economizing too much, like the horse that learned to do without hay, and then died. We can not abandon departments or bureaus or activities which are needed for the country, those services which are required. I do not think we ought to abandon any building project. I would not stop the construction of a single building to-day, not one. I do not know what the fact is about that. On the one side we have the statement that if this reduction is made it will mean the abandonment or 20 or 30 buildings. I do not know whether that is the case or not. I understand it is denied on the other side, contended that it will not mean the abandonment of any building, though it may mean a little slowing down; but I think the work of construction of these buildings ought to go on.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. People do more work on buildings in the second six months of the year than in the first six months, I suppose because of weather conditions, but during the last six months of last year, with virtually an unlimited amount of money to draw from, $42,000,000 was spent on the construction of public buildings. Let us assume for a moment that the committee would cut this appropriation 10 per cent. That would mean a cut of from $108,000,000 to about $98,000,000. That could be done, and still they would have more than double the amount of money for the ensuing year than they have spent in the present year.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield; but I want to hurry through.

Mr. ODDIE. I stated a short time ago that from the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, who has made a careful study of this matter of the building projects, if the 10 per cent cut is made in this bill, it will have to stop 250 building operations.

Mr. FLETCHER. Stop them, or slow them down?

Mr. ODDIE. Indefinitely postpone them. Among those are the following in Florida:

Florida:
Bradenton	$155,000
Clearwater	150,000
Daytona Beach	285,000
Fort Lauderdale	175,000
Fort Myers	210,000
Jacksonville, courthouse	2,000,000
Miami, quarantine station	65,000
Palm Beach	200,000
Sarasota	175,000

The Senator knows what a serious thing that would be to the State of Florida if those building operations were suspended.

Mr. FLETCHER. Those building operations have been agreed on for a year or more. In the case of Jacksonville, the appropriation was made two years ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is fair to say that the Secretary of the Treasury is very much opposed to any cut in his department, just as the Secretary of State was very much opposed to a cut in his department. Both wrote threatening letters to the Congress that great injury would be done if these cuts were made. The Treasury Department has charge of the construction of all these buildings. It is perfectly absurd to say that a cut of $10,000,000 out of $108,000,000 would stop 250 buildings, as the Secretary suggested. It was also an absurd statement from the Secretary of State to report that if the cuts were made in his department as suggested it would necessitate the cutting off of a number of foreign legations, and I believe he included some foreign embassies. The cuts have been made, and no embassies have been cut off and no legations have been cut off.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just another interruption?

Mr. FLETCHER. I would like to go ahead.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to suggest that the Senator can yield for only a question.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. ODDIE. I want to ask the Senator what he thinks of this statement of the Secretary of the Treasury:

> In this connection, however, I must invite the attention of your committee to the fact that the House of Representatives reduced this appropriation item $12,000,000, or 10 per cent under the amount included in the Budget for the fiscal year 1933, and also point out that the effect of further reduction of $25,000,000 will mean the deferment of at least 250 authorized public-building projects, all of which could be placed under contract during the fiscal years 1932 and 1933.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand.

Mr. ODDIE. The 10 per cent cut will not mean just the 10 per cent of the $108,000,000; it will mean a $25,000,000 deduction from the appropriation, which will make it necessary to indefinitely postpone these 250 buildings.

I have discussed the Treasury part of the bill, and tomorrow I hope to discuss that portion of the bill relating to the Post Office Department.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. For a question.

Mr. JONES. I do not want to ask a question exactly, but I thought I had better correct a statement made by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I have made a mistake, I shall be very glad to have the Senator correct me.

Mr. JONES. In regard to the embassies and the Secretary of State asking us to give him authority to close several embassies, we did not see fit to do it, and so we did not give him the authority.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be the way the Secretary of State stated the question. I think probably the chairman of the committee is right, but the effect was the same. It went out to the country that if the Congress did not immediately grant these appropriations which were demanded, they would have to cut off some legations and some embassies. It was a ridiculous statement.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have the impression that the work of the committee—and I commend the work of the committee—demonstrates clearly that it is possible without crippling or destroying the efficiency of the departments to make the necessary reduction in appropriations. I think the departments can very often bring about coordinations and reductions so that no Government employee need lose his job. But where there is need for some displacement or replacement, the changes can be made in some way to avoid hardships if the department heads will take the trouble to work out a plan.

I do not want to see any of the work stopped. I would like to see appropriations made for going on with the work which has been authorized running into millions of dollars, and for which no appropriation has yet been made. That work ought to proceed. Now is the time, when so many people have no work, to carry on such projects. People have been waiting for two years in Jacksonville to work on the building there. The appropriation was made two years ago and the department has been all this time getting plans and specifications ready and have not even started the work. The delays that have been allowed to take place are inexcusable.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is not due to lack of appropriation for the Jacksonville post office at all. It is due to other causes. There is provided in the $108,000,000 which is sought to be appropriated some 60 new projects and 50 new buildings, so by cutting down the appropriation it need not have any effect whatsoever on buildings already authorized and already begun. It might slow down some of the building for the future, but that would be the worst that could happen.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am glad to know that. The buildings mentioned in Florida are where the projects were adopted months and months ago and appropriations made for them. They do not fall within the category caused by this reduction. The only complaint I make is of the delay—inexcusable and no doubt avoidable—in going on with the work which has been authorized and for which the money has been furnished.

I claim that while we are talking about economizing and ought to be economizing in every direction we should not forget that we must not destroy efficiency in the departments. We must not cripple them to such an extent that we hurt the public business.

Going back to the question of ships, the President said in his statement:

> We now extend in aid and loans to the merchant marine service, directly and indirectly, about $100,000,000 per annum. We can not remedy the situation without legislation.

I do not know where the President got that information. The amount estimated for the next fiscal year for foreign mails is only $28,000,000. The amount estimated for the next fiscal year for expenses of the Shipping Board is only $5,000,000. I can not see how it can be concluded at all that the Shipping Board and its organization is costing us $100,000,000 this year. As I said, the foreign mail contracts total about $28,000,000. That should not be charged to the Shipping Board. The Shipping Board and the Post Office Department coordinate and cooperate in that connection. The Shipping Board certifies the routes available and the kind of service to be rendered. The Post Office Department then determines whether the mail should go over the routes; and if so, it then advertises for bids, and so forth.

I believe the Post Office Department ought to keep separate and apart in its accounts the expense account for foreign mails. They may call it what they like, but in effect it is to help the owners to operate ships under our flag. There is no doubt about that. We might as well state it. That provision in the law was not for the purpose of paying the absolute cost for carrying the mail but for the purpose of assisting the merchant marine, assisting people who had to bear the differential between the cost of building ships abroad and the cost of operating them under our flag. It was intended to help the American merchant marine—to favor them and to benefit them.

Evidently that was the case, because otherwise we would have based the compensation for carrying mail on the poundage basis. It is not upon that basis, but is upon the mileage basis. Ships have to be paid so much a mile, whether they carry one letter or thousands of letters. The compensation is upon the basis of mileage, and the intention was plainly enough that the contract should be of benefit to American shipping. It has been. It has enabled the Shipping Board to dispose of numerous lines and ships and services which they could not have disposed of but for the possibility of obtaining foreign mail contracts.

The Shipping Board is operating four lines to the south, to the Gulf, and three or four in the North Atlantic, seven lines in all. When those are disposed of the Shipping Board will be out of the shipping business. Private owners will own the ships under our flag. The provision for the carrying of foreign mail helped to dispose of the ships. They could not have sold them if they had not had a contract to carry foreign mail. That is perfectly plain.

I do not favor abolishing the Shipping Board. There will be rate regulations to deal with. I think the present plan of selecting the Shipping Board from all regions—so many from the North Atlantic, so many from the South Atlantic, from the Gulf, and the Pacific—is a wise and proper way to constitute the board. I do not want to see that plan changed.

Mr. President, it is very late and I shall not go into further detail about the matter. I want to have it understood by our foreign competitors and by the world, so far as I am concerned, and, I believe, so far as Congress is concerned, that we are going to insist upon an adequate American merchant marine. We are not going to scrap our ships and we are not going to get out of the business. I think it is a wrong time to talk about scrapping ships. It would be a great mistake to suspend operations for a year in order to save a few dollars. The expenses and costs have been greatly overestimated in the statement which I have read.

ELECTION IN MINNESOTA

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I have written to Mr. Howard Williams, of Minneapolis, relative to my election to the Senate.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 14, 1932.

Mr. HOWARD WILLIAMS,
2616 Fifteenth Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minn.

MY DEAR WILLIAMS: Replying to yours of April 10. Controlled newspapers and politicians, editorials, and opinions are of little value to the public man who seeks to know what the people want.

I came to Congress 17 years ago and have stayed here despite the political bosses and their organized predatory backgrounds. I was reelected to the Senate in 1930 in the face of the most tremendous special-privilege opposition fight that was ever put on in the State of Minnesota. I want to thank those who believed in me and gave me their support when the State was maliciously saturated with lies as to my official record and slander of my character.

I want especially to hear from those who were misled in the last election. I want your opinion and your neighbor's opinion, both men and women, friends or foes, that I may know the consensus of the judgment of the citizens of my State upon any question that is before the Senate. I have been chosen your ambassador and I want to represent you and you must realize that the only way I can do it is by hearing directly from you. Your interest in our Government should be equal with mine, and whether you approve of me or not personally should not interfere in recording your opinion. Direct contact will avoid misunderstanding and misinformation.

The frank I am using was given for this purpose just as the frank was given to your newspaper which does to-day send free through the mails, to any subscriber within the county in which it is published, its message, false or true. Subserviency is essential to selfish control and independence of thought must not be tolerated. It is rank hypocrisy for these enemy newspapers to use their frank to circulate falsehoods and in the same paper condemn Congressmen for using their frank to get the facts to the people concerning the actions of their chosen officials.

Out of the six or seven hundred newspapers in the State last election 17 were not unfriendly to me. If I had not used the frank and the radio, the worst might have been made to seem the better reason.

I am especially indebted for my reelection to the rural districts, and I am deeply grateful.

I am inclosing you speech which I wish you would read whether you are a farmer, laborer, professional or business man. The success of agriculture enfolds us all.

Let me hear from you.

Cordially yours,

THOS. D. SCHALL.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting a judicial nomination, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(For nomination this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORTS OF THE POST OFFICE COMMITTEE

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters, which were placed on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar is in order.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of W. Harry King to be a member of the Federal Board of Vocational Education.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc. That completes the call of the calendar.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, April 15, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate April 14 (legislative day of April 11), 1932

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

George A. Welsh, of Pennsylvania, to be United States district judge, eastern district of Pennsylvania, to succeed J. Whitaker Thompson, appointed United States circuit judge.

CONFIRMATIONS

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 14, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we would pray with the Psalmist, Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me. Thus prudence shall become righteousness and morality shall become goodness that is altogether noble before God. The Lord stimulate us to take our rightful place to-day, to do our part in making society more contented and inspire men and women to the best service of our country. Where frowns would gather, may we bring a smile; where discouragement threatens, may we evoke a faith; and where the load lies heavy, may we give a lift. As our Heavenly Father upon earth, full of grace and truth, take us by the hand and lead on and up to the higher planes of thought and life, until we reach the table-lands of God, where we shall lull the ills of time into forgetfulness and bury them without a sigh. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 8397. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate has agreed to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 3584. An act to require all insurance corporations formed under the provisions of Chapter XVIII of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia to maintain their principal offices and places of business within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES IN OKLAHOMA

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the vote on the passage of the bill (H. R. 8750) relative to restrictions applicable to Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 11361) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1055), which was read the first and second times and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLADAY reserved all points of order.

PROPOSED PAY-CUT PLANS

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, as gentlemen know, the Economy Committee had its schedule for the reduction of Federal salaries ready to present to the House to-day to be attached to the legislative appropriation bill which has already been under consideration.

The Economy Committee, which this House set up, has worked in season and out for seven weeks in an effort to intelligently reduce the expenses of the Federal Government. It is needless to say we have had difficulties in our procedure because of the fact that anything we do affects somebody or some group of men and women. We have been met with objections from many sources.

However, we were practically ready to present to this House an extended program which, if adopted, I am sure would save the taxpayers at least $150,000,000 to $200,000,000.

Some time ago the committee invited the President to send down his suggestions, the President having said time after time that he had suggestions, but not having detailed them. The committee wished to have them in detail for its consideration. The committee wrote a letter to the President inviting him to send his specific suggestions. The President immediately invited the committee to the White House. The committee gladly accepted because the committee feels that at this day and time, in this crisis, it is not necessary for this bill to be a Democratic bill or for the reduction to be a Democratic reduction or a Republican reduction. It is not essential that it should be anybody's bill. This committee will support anybody's bill that will reduce the expenses of the Federal Government [applause] and we wish to have, if you please, the thorough cooperation of the administration and anyone who can give us suggestions showing specific savings.

We went to the White House last Saturday for a meeting, at which we discussed both the committee's program and the President's program. The President's program was hurriedly drawn, doubtless, and was not in detail. Many things the committee had considered were on the President's program and vice versa. We made real progress Saturday.

In the meantime your Committee on Economy several weeks ago arrived at a definite conclusion as to what we should present to the House dealing with the salary-reduction problem. We were in agreement, and a record vote of 5 to 2 was had upon the schedule for reductions. There was agreement generally among the committee members, who suggested that I go to the Rules Committee and ask for a rule to place this program of salary reduction on the legislative appropriation bill, which you were considering when the House adjourned last Tuesday.

We were ready to proceed to-day, and I think the House is entitled to know, especially those gentlemen who are interested in this vital problem of curtailing Government expenses, and the country is entitled to know why we are asking to-day that the legislative bill be postponed and why we are not ready to present a bill to you to-day providing for a reduction of the salary of every man and woman who is on the Government pay roll or who receives money as an employee of the Government above $1,000 per annum.

I may say here that the plan, as you have seen it in the RECORD, does not mean 11 per cent on all salaries in excess of $1,000. The committee thought the fairest plan to all parties concerned was to have an exemption of $1,000 on every salary. For instance, under the committee's plan, the $1,200 man would have to live on $22 less during the fiscal year 1933, to which the proposal applies, than his present salary.

I am not going into the details of the other plan suggested by the President, because we do not have that plan here; but under the President's plan, which would mean a furlough of a month, the $1,200 man would give up $100. I prefer, and I think the committee prefers, as between the two, a flat reduction in salary, first exempting $1,000, but I want you to know why we are not ready to proceed to-day.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman permit an interruption at this point?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield for a short question.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am interested in what the gentleman is saying about a $1,000 exemption. Personally, I have been one of the Members of the House who has advocated a reasonable salary reduction, but there are many Members who do not believe that the gentleman's proposed exemption of $1,000 is sufficient; that a person making $1,200 a year ought not to have any reduction, and what I want to ask the gentleman is this——

Mr. McDUFFIE. I hope the gentleman will let me proceed with my statement.

Mr. WOODRUM. May I ask the gentleman this question in connection with what he has just said? Will the House be given an opportunity to increase the exemption of $1,000?

Mr. McDUFFIE. We are not bringing the bill in now. The opposition to whatever we present will have an opportunity to express itself and to offer such an amendment as it may desire to submit.

When we left the White House Saturday it was the understanding that the Director of the Budget, Colonel Roop, would appear Monday with the President's plan outlined in detail, to present for the committee's consideration. We wished to be courteous to the administration, and especially to the President of the United States, who, we are informed, evidently knows much about organizing government. We wish the benefit of his suggestions. Up to this good hour we have not had them in detail as to salary reductions. Colonel Roop was to appear Monday. He did not appear on Monday, and on Tuesday he did not appear with the President's detailed plan.

On Wednesday morning Colonel Roop did appear and brought suggestions, such as you saw in the RECORD this morning, but not worked out in detail. About 10 o'clock this morning I called Colonel Roop and asked him how soon he could present a detailed plan, and he said he could have it here in an hour and a half. Within 30 minutes thereafter Colonel Roop called me and said it would take two days to get the detailed plan. I am not charging Colonel Roop with delay.

I wish the House and the country to know that the Economy Committee is committed to a reduction of Federal salaries. Ninety per cent of the taxpayers of the country are demanding a reduction of Federal salaries. We are trying to do something substantial along that line. I want to say incidentally to you gentlemen that unless salaries are reduced there are going to be new faces in Congress in the future. [Applause.]

I grant that on last Saturday at the White House there was a suggestion of an omnibus bill with the idea of putting all the propositions for savings, both of the committee and the President, under one bill. That, however, can well be done after we take care of the Federal salary reduction bill. We want to be courteous to the President and wait as long as we can before taking up the question of salary reductions, and so the committee asked the gentlemen to delay the legislative appropriation bill in order that we may have the President's views in detail and be able to present them to the House. It is hoped we may have his specific suggestion at on early date. We have been waiting since Saturday for his furlough plan.

I wanted you to know that your committee is not responsible this morning for the failure to proceed to offer a bill to reduce the Federal salaries of this country on the legislative bill to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes, or such time as I need, on Pan American Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and I shall not object—I am going to ask for 10 minutes to address the House on the subject upon which the gentleman from Alabama has just addressed the House.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am going to make a request to address the House for 10 minutes on the United States Steel Corporation making another 15 per cent cut.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, if we are to have all these requests, I am going to object to all of them. I think we ought to go ahead with the appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, may I remind gentlemen that it is the purpose, as soon as we can, to take up the District of Columbia appropriation bill, upon which there will be general debate, and every one of these gentlemen can be easily taken care of. I want to say that unless we get busy and pass the appropriation bills you need not expect to adjourn in June. [Applause.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11361) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes. Pending that I suggest that we proceed without any understanding as to any limit for general debate, except that we have an equal distribution of time.

Mr. HOLADAY. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Pending that he asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11361, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. LANHAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

PAN AMERICAN DAY, APRIL 14, 1932

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, this is Pan American Day throughout the United States, Central and South America. Early in 1931, at the suggestion of the Governing Board of the Pan American Union, the Presidents of the 21 Republics of the American Continents issued proclamations designating April 14 as Pan American Day and urging upon their respective peoples the observance of this day with due and appropriate ceremonies. April 14 was selected because it was on that day in 1890 that the First International Conference of American States adopted the resolution creating the Pan American Union.

As we look back upon the four decades that have elapsed since that time we can not help but feel gratified at the progress that has been made in the development of closer understanding between our own country and our neighbors to the south. The feeling of distrust toward the United States which prevailed for so many years is giving way to one of confidence. The successive Pan American conferences have contributed their share toward this great end. Their influence has been supplemented by the work of the Pan American Union. In addition to closer commercial and financial ties, new currents of intellectual intercourse have been established, all of which have contributed to better mutual understanding.

In fact, we have been slowly developing, through the Pan American Union, a league of the free nations of the Western Hemisphere. The basic idea of this union is not the establishment of a superstate. Nor is there any thought that compulsory process should be used against any member of the union. For over 40 years the union has devoted itself to developing a spirit of cooperation among the nations of America with the well-founded expectation that in this atmosphere of good will every difference that may arise would lend itself to the orderly processes of peaceful settlement.

Even if we limit ourselves to the last few years, the record of achievement in the settlement of difficult and delicate disputes is one of which the entire Pan American Union may well be proud. The long-standing difference between Chile and Peru has been happily settled and these two nations have resumed close and friendly relations. At the present moment there is sitting at the Pan American Union an arbitral tribunal, presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States, which is intrusted with the final settlement of a long-standing boundary dispute between Guatemala and Honduras. Recently a commission to settle claims between the United States and Panama began its sessions at the Pan American Union.

Thus, slowly but surely, the international questions that have arisen between the American Republics are being happily settled. In fact, it is no exaggeration to say that we may look forward to a time, in a not too distant future, in which the American Republics will be able to give to the world an example, unique in the history of the world, namely, an entire continent which has settled its major and minor disputes by means of conciliation, mediation or arbitration.

As another major contribution of very recent times, I need only call your attention to the notable Pan American Conference on Arbitration and Conciliation which was held at the Pan American Union in December, 1928, and January, 1929. At this conference a general convention on inter-American conciliation and a general treaty on inter-American arbitration were signed, both of which represent most important advances in giving the widest possible application of the principles of conciliation and arbitration to the settlement of all inter-American disputes.

I am not certain whether the people of this country realize the full significance of this Pan American movement which has been gaining steadily in strength since the establishment of the Pan American Union in 1890. It is most fitting that on the occasion of the celebration of Pan American Day we should keep before us the larger implications of this movement.

There is something inspiring in the thought that on this day throughout the Republics of America ceremonies are being held, all intended to emphasize the essential unity of ideals and unity of interests of the American Republics. It is a matter of no little significance that the most important celebrations are being held in the public schools of the United States, Mexico, Central and South America, for it is to the younger generation that we must look for the fuller realization of those ideals of continental solidarity for which we are to-day striving.

It has been my privilege to visit many Latin American countries, including a number of the Republics of South America. I have had the opportunity to meet some of their leading statesmen and to study their civilization. Their progress in economic well-being and the advance in their political development have made a deep impression upon me. Even to-day, when they are passing through a financial crisis more severe than our own, they are giving evidence of courage, self-sacrifice, and abnegation in the effort to place their finances on a sound and healthy basis. No one can witness these efforts without feeling convinced that in spite of all temporary setbacks the future of these nations is assured.

Viewing the situation from the standpoint of our own interests, I become more convinced with each year of the importance of cultivating the confidence, friendship, good will, and cooperation of our sister Republics of Latin America. As I attempt to visualize the future of international affairs I am impressed by the fact that our permanent interests are in this hemisphere rather than in other sections of the world. We have to the south of us 20 nations growing in economic strength and in consuming power; countries which can furnish to us all the raw materials that we need and which will become for us ever-expanding markets for our manufactures. Our capital investment in those countries to-day exceeds $5,000,000,000. Notwithstanding present unfavorable conditions, which prevail not only in Latin America but throughout the world, I have full confidence in the future economic progress of Latin America and am convinced that Latin America will not only completely recover her earlier prosperity but will steadily move forward to higher and higher levels of productivity. From the larger point of view of our future international influence, I can imagine no stronger position than that which will be given to us by the closest possible understanding with our sister nations of this hemisphere. Based upon a complete harmony of interests, dealing with them as equals, with no thought either of dictation or domination, we will best serve our own interests as well as the interests of humanity.

If we had paid more attention to the countries of our own hemisphere and less to the countries of Europe, we should be in a far better and happier state than we are to-day. We would not have squandered the billions of dollars we lost in our enterprises and associations with European nations.

I should like to see our business and social relations strengthened between the countries south of us and our means of transportation improved and enlarged. If we had better and quicker transportation, we would be able to do more business, better our social relations, and increase the prosperity of not only our own country but those of our associates of the Pan American Union. The vast possibilities of trade with the countries of our hemisphere are immense. If we realize the large cities, fertile lands, great mines, and oil wells, we can readily perceive that these resources have scarcely been scratched over.

Pan American Day, therefore, assumes a deep significance for the present and the future of our country. In its celebration we must ever bear in mind that our major interests are on this hemisphere and that through the friendship and good will of our sister nations of America those permanent interests will best be served. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a letter I am addressing to the teachers of Baltimore.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR FRIEND: As you are aware, Thursday, April 14, was designated as Pan American Day throughout the entire United States, Central and South America. I am informed that celebrations were held in the schools and other places throughout this section of the world, which comprises practically the entire Western Hemisphere and all the nations parties to the Pan American Union.

I performed my part in this general celebration of Pan American Day by making the address, which I herewith inclose, before the House of Representatives of the United States. It occurred to me that you would like to have a copy of this address, perhaps, to read to the children or to keep, as this celebration is expected to be held annually during the years to come.

May I say at this time what I have been saying to the teachers of Baltimore for several years; to wit, that the teachers and their pupils, if possible, visit Washington during the spring season of the year to view the beautiful surroundings, especially the trees, shrubbery, and flowers throughout the Nation's Capital, and likewise to visit the wonderful buildings which we now have, and particularly to see the new buildings which have been constructed during the past few years.

Congress is now in session and many things of national interest and of particular interest to the teachers and pupils of the land are taking place in that, the greatest legislative body in the world. As I have said before, there is the Washington Monument, perhaps the most picturesque memorial to any man of history; the Lincoln Memorial, with its mirror lake and trees of cherry blossoms, is to my mind the most beautiful memorial existing. I have viewed the ruins of Athens, beheld the Forum of Rome, gazed upon the Pyramids of Egypt, but I know of no memorial more beautiful in its stately silence than this one erected to Abraham Lincoln.

I write to suggest that you visit Washington and if possible bring your class with you before the Congress adjourns. I tender my services to make your trip as pleasant and profitable as possible and will upon request forward gallery cards which will admit you to the Congress and a letter which will admit you to the White House.

As a former teacher, I am deeply interested in public schools, and I want them to have every advantage that can be had.

Do try to come and bring your pupils.

Very sincerely yours,

J. CHAS. LINTHICUM.

PROPOSED PAY-CUT PLANS

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MCDUFFIE], chairman of the Economy Committee, made a very frank and fair statement. We all realize and understand the difficulties of that committee. They have my sympathy, but I must confess that I do not see how they fail to notice that a great deal of this economy talk is inspired for selfish purposes. They have been given a difficult task. Considerable comment has been heard throughout the country on what they should do by people who do not understand the budgetary condition of the country, advice by bankers and brokers and war profiteers who do not care about anything else but avoiding the payment of just taxes. Letters have been written, editorials have been written, statements have been made, speeches have been made by people clamoring for a reduction of the Budget without any knowledge of facts or figures by people who do not understand the budgetary conditions and ignore the best interest of the country. I make that statement without any reservation. I have already given this House documentary proof of large financial institutions demanding reduction of Government expenses and at the same time selling advice to their customers on how to avoid paying taxes. The gentleman from Alabama, I believe, is exceedingly fortunate that the rule was not presented this morning. If I understand the temper of this House, I say that if the rule had been called up under the conditions and surroundings that it was introduced and presented, it would have been overwhelmingly defeated.

Let us see what is back of all this movement. Back of this movement for a reduction of salaries and the so-called balancing of the Budget are two prime reasons. One is to obtain reductions in order to use that as an argument before the other body of Congress to reduce the income taxes in the revenue bill that it is now considering. The other is a movement throughout the country for a general reduction of the wage standard and the resultant lowering of the American standard of living, that in order the more easily to exploit their employees and the workers. There was no cry for balancing of the Budget when millions and millions of dollars were added to the Budget by the issuance of long-term bonds to meet current expenditures. Gentlemen will remember that in the latter part of 1931 nearly $1,000,000,000 of 24-year-term bonds were issued to meet the current expenditures. Yes; a billion at 3½ per cent.

There was no demand for balancing the Budget when $900,000,000 additional long-term bonds at high interest rate were issued in the early part of this year to meet current expenditure. Why? Because certain of the big bankers and financiers wanted some place to put the money they had obtained from the American people by selling them worthless securities. So the bankers got good money and the investors were stuck with worthless bonds and no-good stock. This money now the so-called financiers have invested in good United States bonds. The additional $1,900,000,000 of Government bonds just issued for these manipulators add from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 annually on the Budget. We can not economize there. There was not one word said about balancing the Budget in the early part of the session when this House was called upon to ratify the moratorium, which added $250,000,000 to our budgetary requirements this year, and the next year will add $270,000,000 to our budgetary requirements. I submit in the face of this, is it fair to demand that the letter carrier and the clerk should pay for the moratorium or that the charwoman should pay for the deficit, for which they are not to blame? Why the very people who caused the deficit are the beneficiaries of our bonded indebtedness and are now clamoring to reduce wages.

I deny, and no one can prove, that a reduction of the salaries is necessary or is for the best interest of the country. There are two schools of economic thought. I concede that one school suggests for selfish individual purposes of an efficient, profitable industry controlled by a few privileged persons in this country the lowering of standards of living. For instance, if we should tear down the standard of wages and lower the standard of living, create a keen competitive labor market, a few individuals would profit by such a condition through cheap labor and greater exploitation, but that is not the American way of doing it. [Applause.] On the other hand, if, instead of lowering the scale of wages and the standard of living, we attempt to and we can bring up that scale, we thereby increase the purchasing power of the country, which means more consumption, more business, more employment, and more happiness. This country was most prosperous in those periods where wages were high and the American people had a high purchasing power.

Because, after all, the purchasing power is in the great masses of the American people; it is not concentrated in the hands of the few who are trying to ruin this country. Instead of meeting the situation, it is now suggested by a few selfish individuals to use the Federal Government as the pacemaker in this movement throughout the country to reduce the American scale of wages. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], who this House acknowledges is a very careful thinker and very conservative in his point of view, the other day revealed that in his district one of the largest manufacturers had informed him that as soon as the Federal pay cut goes into effect this manufacturer would reduce his 1,200 employees 10 per cent. That is what is being attempted. That is why informed Members of this House will resist pay reductions.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Am I justified in concluding from what the gentleman states that he approves of the present schedule of salaries for Government employees?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Does the gentleman also approve of the increases given in the pay of Government employees over the period since 1923 or 1924?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Does the gentleman likewise approve of what has been done in reference to increasing the number of Government employees?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Where the increases were necessary by reason of legislative enactment.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. What study has the gentleman made of the present schedule under which Government employees are paid?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. A very thorough study, as I will demonstrate before I finish. I will answer that question. The average Government salary, gentlemen, is around $1,440; and it is lower than the average salary paid in normal times throughout the country.

When the gentleman from Alabama asks me if I am in favor of the increases of salaries that have been brought about my answer is yes, because this country has been going forward economically. As the standard of living improved and the standard of wages increased in industry and in commerce the Government had to keep pace with that. I am sorry to say that in many instances the Government was slow by many years in keeping pace with increased wages in private industry.

I will only refer the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that during war days, when wages doubled and tripled throughout the whole country, all that the Government employees got was a bonus of $240 a year. So the increases in the Post Office and in the classified services were no less than seven or eight years behind the times, or seven or eight years too late.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that during the war, when we were twenty-six billion in the red, that the men who are advocating wage cuts to-day charged the United States Government 400 per cent on everything they sold the Government?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I have great respect for the opinions of the gentleman from New York, for usually I find he has been industrious and has made what he believes to be a careful study of questions before drawing conclusions therefrom. The question I asked him a few moments ago and which he said he would be glad to answer was, What study has the gentleman made of the increases made in Government salaries and the present schedules to justify his statement that he gives full approval thereto?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will take any given industry and compare the wages of the skilled and unskilled trades with the wages paid by the Government for like services, the gentleman will find that the Government pay increases were several years behind those of private industry, and when the Government increased the salaries the increase did not come up to the prevailing rates.

Real earnings of Government employees declined almost steadily from 1914 to 1920. Increases in real earnings of Government employees since 1920 have resulted partly from salary increases, including bonuses, reclassification, and the Welch and Brookhart Acts, and partly from changes in the cost of living. Government employees' real earnings in 1930 were about equal to those of 1913–14, but even in 1931 were still substantially below the average for the 1890–1899 decade. On the other hand, industrial employees' real earnings in manufacturing and transportation have increased for the past 30 years and since 1915 have been on a distinctly higher plane than prevailed from 1890–1899. Even during extensive periods of business depression the average real earnings, after adjustments for unemployment are made, still remain well above the real earnings of Government employees.

This comparison, I am sure, fully answers the charge that Government employees are overpaid.

If the gentleman will take the technicians in the Government service—and that is a class that is being attacked by a number of ignorant tax dodgers as much as any other class in the Government service—he will find that their compensation is way below the compensation paid by private industry for like services.

Government scientific and professional employees are not as well paid as engineers in industry. A comparison of the salaries shows that the below-average man is paid about the same by Government and industry. The Government pays the average professional man from $500 to $2,000 less than industry. The more experience the average professional Government employee has the greater is the difference between his pay and that of the average engineer. The salary of the better-paid professional employee in the Government service is far below that of the better-paid engineers. So large is this difference that the Government can not hope to hold exceptional men except when such men are willing to make a large personal sacrifice. The proposed salary cut of Government employees will hit hardest the employees who for years have made big financial sacrifices by staying in Government service. Loyalty to the service, love of work, and security of salary and position have in the past caused many men to refuse attractive outside offers of more money. A salary cut will destroy the sense of security and wreck the morale, so that when economic conditions improve, the Government will have increasing difficulty in retaining high-quality men.

If the gentleman from Alabama is pleased to cite the fact that many industries have lowered their wages below the standard, then I say that we should do everything in our power to bring that standard back again and not to lower it further than it now is. That is our purpose here. May I quote the great Theodore Roosevelt, who said on a similar occasion, as I was reminded this morning by Tyler Page, our reliable historian, "Rather bring all men up than some down."

I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama that there is something more than just the year 1932 before us. There are the economic welfare and future of 126,000,000 people before us. I say that when we reduce the pay or wages in American industry and commerce we bring the whole structure down so that the standard of living will be lowered. We might find a few selfish individuals who would be satisfied with such a situation; but should that situation be brought about we will have failed miserably in performing our duty for the best interests of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I do not belong to the class who are persuaded by ad hominem arguments in support of conclusions announced. I feel it is important to ascertain whether the party who announces such conclusions has made a careful study of the facts pertinent thereto.

For that reason I inquired of the gentleman to know what study he had made of salary schedules of Government employees.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I know every schedule of salary. I hope to convince the gentleman of that before we finish this pay-slash fight. During the last 20 years I have been through as many industrial troubles as any Member of this House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have seen the garment industry working in sweatshops only 20 years ago at $8 a week, and I have seen them lift themselves from sweatshops to sanitary, well-ventilated, and well-lighted shops, made mandatory by law, and working on a minimum of $30, $40, and $50 a week. [Applause.] I have seen the advance and betterment of truck drivers. I have seen them working in my city on $12 a week, 20 years ago, while now they are receiving $37.50 and $40 a week. I could cite a hundred instances of my own personal knowledge. Now, then, I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama that I will compare the study I have given to this question with his, and I have great regard for him, but in making my study I see one thing, and that is the welfare, the economic and spiritual welfare, of the human being as essential to our scheme of government and not a dividend for some exploiter of labor. [Applause.] That is the difference in our approach. I want to say this to the gentleman from Alabama, to get right down to the proposition: It would be dangerous and unfair if this Congress were to approve either to-day, to-morrow, or any time a percentage reduction of salaries. Why? I can not repeat it too often: Because the minute we do, industry and commerce will pick that up; it will make like reductions, and we will go back 50 years instead of advancing.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The ipse dixits of even the gentleman who has had time to study every pay schedule of the Government——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Every one of them.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is very fine, but even his ipse dixits do not carry conviction. I would like here, without taking any further time, to call to the attention of all Members a concrete, well-assembled list of salary increases for study in order to ascertain whether they can concur in the broad approval that the gentleman has given of all pay schedules. I refer Members to the hearings before the District Committee, on pages 29 et sequitur, in connection with the bill now pending before the committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then let me also call the attention of the committee to the fact that when they read those hearings they also look back a few years when the school-teachers of the District of Columbia and the school-teachers of the country were paid a salary less than that paid to unskilled laborers, and that is only about 15 years ago, because I was confronted with that problem when I was in the city administration of my city. If the gentleman from Alabama or anyone else can take any satisfaction in attempting to confuse the figures in order to bring down the standard of wages, he is entitled to that satisfaction, but I will say this:

That if there is a disparity at this time in any class of Government employees and the employees of commerce and industry, then we should do everything within our power by example to bring the standard of others up to ours, and not bring ours down to starvation wages and lower the standard of living.

This campaign against increased Government expenditure appears to be principally initiated and carried on by the leaders of banking and industry who, in searching for methods of extrication from the present predicament, look principally for the faults of others rather than for the faults of themselves. Considering only the basic fundamentals from a simple common-sense point of view, and brushing aside all the interaction of economic forces, which apparently are not understood, it would appear that a much greater economic waste is being permitted by failures in banking and industrial leadership than is being caused by the necessary expenditures of Congress. It seems to be simple common sense that if everybody in the country is working there would be a greater production of articles whose use or possession would make life easier for the multitude, if results of this production were properly distributed. In other words, the standard of living would be raised. The reduction in our standard of living, caused by a fourth of our people being idle, is surely greater than the reduction in the standard of living caused by Government expenditures, even including unnecessary ones. When commercial leadership can not provide for the employment of a larger per cent of our population than at present, there surely should be no objection to the provision of employment for our population by increased beneficial Government expenditures.

President Hoover, I believe, has hit upon one good idea, and that is his suggestion of a 5-day week. We must reduce the working week as well as the working day in order to give all of the people of this country the benefit of our improved and machine methods of production. When the President of the United States suggests a 5-day week I believe he is setting an example to industry and commerce which will bring up the standard that I have been trying to point out. I do not believe, though, and I do not agree with the President, that the entire cost of going on a 5-day week should be put on the Federal employee. We must adjust this matter so as not to put that entire burden on the employee. If industry would go on a 5-day week and a 6-hour day, several millions of the unemployed would go to work and our depression would soon be over.

Members of the House will remember that a few years ago the 60-hour week was considered a standard week. We are away from the 60-hour week, but unless we watch what we have obtained we may soon be back to a 60-hour week. It was not so long ago that we thought the 44-hour week was the ideal week. We are beyond that now and that is by reason of improved methods of production, which result in producing more than the people have the ability to purchase but not more than their ability to consume. There is a big difference between the purchase power and the normal consumption of a country. We have not arrived in this country at a time when we are really producing more than we can consume, but we have arrived at the time where we are producing more than the great masses of the American people have the ability to buy.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The sum of the gentleman's statement is that he is absolutely opposed to the consideration of any salary reductions whatever.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am opposed to the lowering of the wage scale in this country and also the lowering of the American standard of living. I say this to the gentleman from Alabama: I think that if we do agree on a 5-day basis, that we can find a formula which would be acceptable without putting the entire cost and without putting all of the burden on the backs of the producers and the workers.

All this talk of high salaries of Government employees is not at all correct.

The Bureau of the Budget recently released detailed facts regarding the Federal pay roll. These facts were compiled in response to requests from many sources, including Congress.

The facts definitely refute the numerous wild statements now current as to the existence of a large number of Government employees drawing fat salaries. The outstanding facts revealed are the very small number of high-paid and surprisingly large number of low-paid Federal employees. In the three-fourths of a million civil employees of the Government only 3 in 500 received $5,000 or more per year. Included in this group are the Cabinet officers, assistant secretaries, bureau chiefs, and some of the leading scientists of the country. On the other hand, about 1 in 6 Government employees receives less than $1,000 a year, or $20 per week, and 3 out of every 4 receive less than $2,200, or $43 per week.

About 1 Government employee in every 4 receives $2,200 or more, but less than $5,000 per year. In this group are found many of the key people—professional men, doctors, engineers, lawyers, foresters, auditors, and highly trained specialized groups. They build your roads, collect your taxes, protect you from adulterated foods and fake medicines, control the flood of immigration, enforce laws, protect Government-owned lands from fire, and administer such lands so that they will give maximum service to all.

To make any substantial reduction in the Government pay roll it will be necessary to go far down in the salary scale. A cut in so-called higher-salary brackets—that is, above $2,700—will only reduce the civil pay roll about 1½ per cent and total expenditures about one-third of 1 per cent. No reduction of Government salaries will balance the Federal Budget, and any reduction will place an unfair proportion of the burden on an underpaid group. I refuse to be a party to any such plan.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman thinks that regardless of the depression we ought to continue upon the present $4,000,000,000 basis of Government expenditure.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But analyze the $4,000,000,000. The gentleman from Alabama is too good a legislator to use a phrase that has been used by selfish individuals in this country. What is the $4,000,000,000? One billion one hundred million dollars goes to your debt service. One billion dollars goes to your Veterans' Administration. Seven hundred and fifty million dollars goes to your Army and Navy. Five hundred million dollars was appropriated for the Federal Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Two hundred million dollars we had to appropriate in the deficiency bill for the adjusted compensation. There is $3,000,000,000 right there. Then we lost $250,000,000 by reason of nonpayments by our foreign debtors.

In addition to these figures I will repeat other items to which I have often referred, which are included in our present annual expenditures. There is an item of $226,000,000 for roads—Federal-aid roads—and there was not a peep from big business, which is now clamoring for Budget balancing, when this appropriation was first recommended by the President. Added to this amount there is $13,325,000 for forest roads. A large amount of this goes for labor, it is true, but also for material. It requires banking, financing; it put money into circulation, and it was indorsed by both banking and industry.

Then there is an item of $132,000,000 for rivers and harbors and flood control. The whole country approved of this expenditure. Then there is an item of $63,000,000 for new naval construction, and my colleagues will remember that Congress was flooded with resolutions from chambers of commerce, boards of trade, bankers, patriotic organizations, large corporations, for this additional expenditure, the same people who are crying economy to-day. There is $121,000,000 of public buildings, and that, too, was indorsed universally throughout the country. Have these Budget balancers, clamoring for reduced taxes, protested against $53,800,000 of loans to private ship companies—now asking a 3-year moratorium—and over $40,000,000 in ship subsidies to private shipowners? And how about the subsidies to private operators of air mail lines amounting to $25,000,000? Any protest there from these tax dodgers? Not a word. All they can say is take it out of the wages of the clerk; reduce salaries of Government employees so we can reduce salaries in our factories, in our shops, in our offices, in order to make greater profits to make up losses during the orgy of wild speculation in worthless and inflated securities.

We can not blame this on the charwoman or the letter carrier or the departmental clerk. If the gentleman will take the normal expense of government, it is not much over $1,000,000,000, and $1,000,000,000 for the normal expenditures or the running expense of the greatest power in the world is not too large.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will permit, I agree, of course, with the gentleman's statement that there are certain fixed charges against the Treasury that are irreducible, but I do not at all agree. with the gentleman's statement that within the limits of tolerance there should not be and ought not to be substantial reductions in the running expenses of the Government, particularly under present conditions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And I will say to the gentleman that under present conditions we dare not impair the normal functioning of the Government.

For instance, the Federal Trade Commission was created after years of bitter experience. The Interstate Commerce Commission was created after years of graft and abuse and exploitation of the American people. The Bureau of Mines, Labor Statistics, Bureau of Children, Women's Bureau, Education, Vocational Education, Steamboat Inspection, Efficiency, Classification, Health, Pure Food, Bureau of Standards are other instances of necessary Government activities that under the guise of economy have come under the wrath of certain interests who desire them eliminated.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York five additional minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Every department of Government that we have created has not been the result of whim. It has been the result of years of bitter experience and on account of the necessity of having Government supervision and control over the very complex and intricate industrial and commercial system that we have evolved.

I know many people have pet aversions to some of these Government functions. I know there are people in this country who would want no control, but I submit, gentlemen, can we now eliminate necessary Government control after the dismal failure and the misery and the sorrow that have been brought about on the country and on the people of the country by the very people who would abolish all Government regulation and all Government control.

It is not the cost of government that has caused the deficit. The revenue of the Government has fallen off. Is the Government to blame that the American people have been mulcted of $2,000,000,000 in South American securities and of nearly $1,000,000,000 of European securities?

Are they to blame that banks in whom they had the right to confide and have confidence in advised them to buy their own securities that were artificially inflated, so that now they have lost their all? The banks have their money, and industry and commerce can not even get a loan to-day. Is the Government to blame for that? Not at all, but there are some people who are attacking Congress and criticizing Congress and want to take it out of the expense of government. They talk about a $4,000,000,000 Budget, when it is a $1,000,000,000 Budget. The other $3,000,000,000 is the direct result of the war. The Lord knows the American people did not demand that war, but we have to pay for it nevertheless.

I submit, gentlemen, we ought to look conditions squarely in the face. Only yesterday or the day before one of the leading New York papers, the Herald Tribune, I may say to my good friend from Alabama, printed an attack upon Congress and stated that Congressmen were not subject to the Federal income tax. The writer of that editorial must have known better, but that is the kind of vicious propaganda that is going on. The American people know better. Selfish bankers and big business and brokers can not draw a red herring across the path of their misconduct, of their larceny, in mulcting the people to such an extent that the entire revenue of the Government, practically, from income taxes has fallen off. This is not the fault of Congress.

The cost of the normal functions of government has not increased, and, gentlemen, for one, no matter what abuse I may get—and I know there are a great many others on both sides of the aisle who agree with me—I am going to stand up here and fight hard to maintain the American standard of living, which can only be made possible by a high wage scale, which will provide purchasing power that protects the farmer, protects the business man, and makes our country prosperous and happy. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. I agree with the gentleman in his opposition to salary decreases, and will not the gentleman state that one of our present difficulties is deflation in commodity prices.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. And if we reduce salaries we reduce purchasing power and deflate such prices still further?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I am pleased the gentleman has touched on that. I was going to refer to it.

Why, gentlemen, at this very time there is a demand for inflation. Under the Steagall-Glass bill our currency is now being inflated.

Why, gentlemen, just as sure as we are sitting here, if inflation is necessary, and almost every school of economic thought now thinks it is necessary, in order to give the farmer a chance to pay off his mortgage, in order to give the debtors a chance to pay up with the same kind of currency value as that with which the debt was incurred, then we will have to sit here and provide a compensating increase for all salaries, including our own, if you please, to meet the increased cost of living. Why? Because if you have inflation and increased cost of commodities and you do not increase wages, again, the working people will pay the whole cost, and I will resist that, too. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, at the conclusion of the remarks of Mr. LaGUARDIA, the gentleman from New York, the outburst of applause from the gallery, which is forbidden by the rules of the House, is merely a spontaneous manifestation of the desire and wishes of the American people so well expressed by the gentleman from New York against wage reduction. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have been contending on the floor of this House since the Christmas recess that any reduction of salaries of Federal employees would be immediately followed by a reduction in the pay of all employees in private industry in the United States.

This morning, Thursday, April 14, the Journal of Commerce of New York, the business man's periodical, contains this article. Here are the headlines and the story:

NEW WAGE, SALARY CUTS ARE IMMINENT IN STEEL INDUSTRY—PITTSBURGH HEARS IT MAY BE 15 PER CENT ALL THROUGH THIS TIME—UNITED STATES STEEL NOT COVERING ITS OPERATING COSTS—REDUCTION OF OVERHEAD ANEW IS REGARDED URGENT SO LONG AS OUTPUT HOLDS PRESENT LEVEL

PITTSBURGH, April 13.—Active discussion of ways and means of reducing operating costs in the steel industry, most prominent among which is a new cut in wages, is going on among trade leaders here now. It is generally pointed out that the overhead cost of operation in the industry must be cut further as long as activity persists at the present low rate of capacity.

Pittsburgh industry has been particularly hard hit by the depression because of its concentration upon iron and steel and heavy manufacturing. The United States Steel Corporation and other major organizations have sought to spread work as much as possible and have made only one general wage cut of 10 per cent. It is now felt that an even more drastic cut of, perhaps, 15 per cent may be necessary all around in order to avoid heavy operating deficits under prevailing conditions.

SEE PROTRACTED INACTIVITY

The feeling here is rapidly developing that the present depression will prove protracted and that a major upturn in steel manufacture and similar activities may be a long time in coming. In the meanwhile industrial leaders face the problem of reducing the enormous burden of overhead costs built up in good times, and it is thought that further delay in doing so will merely eat further into reserves that are needed to face future uncertainties.

A number of other economies have already been made since the turn of the year by local industries. Rearrangement and concentration of plant operations in the most efficient available units, salary cuts, and eliminations and reduction in general office personnel are among the steps taken to cut costs, but this merely increases the relative burden of wage that must now be faced.

The United States Steel Corporation has under active discussion a further reduction of wage and salary scales, regarded as essential if further drain on the company's reserves is to be eliminated, it was reported in informed quarters here yesterday. There has been no decision on the size of the expected reductions, nor upon the date when they will be made effective, but the necessity of some move of the sort is recognized, it was said.

CUT LAST YEAR

Compensation adjustments made by the company in 1931, marking the fourth time in its history that the corporation was forced to cut wages or salaries, included three moves. On August 13 all salaried employees receiving over $1,800 per year were reduced from 10 to 15 per cent, depending upon the character of the service rendered, and on October 1 all salaried men not affected by the former readjustment were reduced 10 per cent, as were all wage earners, excepting in both cases transportation companies' employees, whose compensation is subject to statutory control, and a few others who were employed under service agreements.

The report of the corporation for 1931 stated that, based on the average general rates in effect immediately prior to the reductions, the curtailment in pay rolls arising therefrom to the close of December was approximately $3,991,000.

FIFTY-ONE CENTS AN HOUR WAS TOP

Wage scales of the corporation rose from 20 cents an hour in 1913 to a high point of 51 cents in 1921. Three successive cuts in that year reduced the scale to a basis of 30 cents an hour, from which it climbed in 1929 to 44 cents. The cut in 1931 brought it to 40 cents an hour.

The company had in 1931 an average of 203,674 employees.

Gentlemen, this is a conservative New York business man's paper, and you can have no doubt in your minds but what this proposition of the United States Steel Corporation putting into effect the 15 per cent cut on all wages is brought about by the belief that you, the Congress of the United States, are going to cut wages of the Federal employees.

I have said to you time and time again that they were only waiting for the alibi. When the United States Steel Corporation put through their first 10 per cent cut, they were immediately followed by the General Motors, they were followed by the General Electric, they were followed by all the big industries in the United States, and now they are waiting for you to put through your wage cut, so that they can slash the wages of their employees again and again.

They will say the Government has had to cut the wages of the Federal employees; they had to cut the letter carriers, who have been fighting for 25 years to get a living wage; they had to cut the wages of the charwomen and the little clerks, whom the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD] said took money out of their $1,440 per year salary and sent it back to the old father and mother in California, Massachusetts, Texas, Ohio, and all the other States of the Union—they sent money back to help the father and mother and the invalid sister who can not get work in Georgia or Massachusetts or Illinois or Mississippi or Pennsylvania or any other State.

You, the Congress of the United States, will serve as the alibi for these big corporations. You must face the facts. You must realize that when you vote for a cut in Federal salaries you are saying to these corporations, "You are right, we are going to help the propaganda of the big metropolitan newspapers, we are going to help the propaganda so smoothly, cleverly, and insidiously sent out by you big corporations to cut the wages of the American people and and pauperize them. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Gladly.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And that is the same corporation that received one quarter of a billion dollars in tax refunds during the past year?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And out of the last refund of $33,000,000, the attorney received a fee of $8,250,000 from this same corporation.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, last night at the Jefferson dinner the great leaders of Democracy of the United States, who were present, stressed the fact that what they want and what the people want is for the Democratic Party to legislate for the majority of the people, and not allow the individual selfishness of any member of the party to interfere with the best interests of the people.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. They advocated a reorganization of the departments and of the bureaus, the elimination of unnecessary Federal activities, the restoration of our dual system of government, and a permanent reduction of Federal expenses through those means.

Mr. CONNERY. And not through pay cuts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The elimination of bureaucracy.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; and not through pay cuts. The Democratic Party, as I repeated the day before yesterday, will succeed when it has the courage to be democratic, but the Democratic Party of this House or of the United States can not elect a President of the United States and can not retain control of this House and obtain control of the United States Senate if it tries to play the game of the Republican Party.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to stand on the floor to-day and recommend that, in keeping with the Democratic speakers last night, several hundred or a thousand employees of the Federal Government be laid off work entirely?

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, no; I never subscribed to that at all.

Mr. McGUGIN. The gentleman does not want anybody laid off?

Mr. CONNERY. No; whether it comes from the Democratic or from the Republican side. I do not follow out this propaganda they have been handing to us that you have to do away with your Army and Navy and cut them down so that you will have no national defense, or that you have to do away with your statutory award to the man who has tuberculosis, and who, if you send him out of the hospital, is going to die. I am not for taking away his $50 a month. I do not favor that sort of legislation, and I never will.

Mr. McGUGIN. Then I take it from that that the gentleman does not agree with the four great leaders of Democracy that Government expenses should be reduced.

Mr. CONNERY. I will follow no one who advocates cutting the already too low Government salaries. I did not agree with some of the leaders on the sales tax or on this pay cut? The answer to that is simple.

Mr. McGUGIN. The gentleman does not believe in any reduction of Government salaries?

Mr. CONNERY. No; I do not believe that you ought to cut a charwoman's pay.

Mr. McGUGIN. If the gentleman is in favor of reducing expenses, will he tell us how to save $200,000,000 without taking anybody off the pay rolls?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not see any necessity for cutting these expenditures that they are making so much noise about. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] in answer to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] told the House what the expenses of government are, and you do not need to cut them at this time just to please the big interests. Why do you not put some men to work in the country? Why do you not bring wages up in the country? If you do that, you would not be worrying about balancing the Budget.

Mr. McGUGIN. Why does not the gentleman tell us on this floor how to put men to work and how to raise wages?

Mr. CONNERY. I have already told you how to do it. I will tell you again how to do it. I have written the gentleman a letter on the relief bill reported by the Committee on Labor and have received no answer. I have asked the gentleman in that letter if he would sign a petition if I put it on the desk there to allow the United States Government to loan $500,000,000 to the States, the United States to hold the State bonds as security, and thus allow the States to pay their school-teachers, to pay their policemen, to pay their firemen, and $200,000,000 for public construction of buildings already authorized but not appropriated for. This bill, if passed, will put thousands of men to work and put money in circulation to help end the depression. Will the gentleman sign it?

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman tell me where to get that money?

Mr. CONNERY. Where did they get the $2,000,000,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to help the banks and railroads pay their debts to Wall Street? [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN rose.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. CONNERY (laughingly). I want now to yield to the good-looking gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield in order to permit me to answer his question?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. I was hoping that my friend from Massachusetts would answer the gentleman in the affirmative when he requested information as to where they could get the money. They can get five times this suggested salary cut with a tax on beer, and it will be cheerfully paid. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman is absolutely correct. And now I yield to my friend from Kansas again.

Mr. McGUGIN. In answer to the question where they are going to get the $2,000,000,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I say that I did not vote for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They have not got the $2,000,000,000 now, and I do not think they ever will get it. To-day they have gotten something like $300,000,000.

Mr. CONNERY. Did the gentleman vote for the moratorium?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman wanted to let Germany off on her debt?

Mr. McGUGIN. No.

Mr. CONNERY. While the American people go broke.

Mr. McGUGIN. No; I do not know how to get the money out of them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The $300,000,000 the gentleman refers to is coming out of public funds.

Mr. CONNERY. I, too, voted for the moratorium; but I believe if we can give a moratorium to Germany, we can also find money for hungry Americans.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman seems to be predicating his whole argument against salary cuts upon his fear that the United States Steel Corporation is anticipating making a reduction in the wages it pays.

Mr. CONNERY. That is not my only argument. I want people to work, and I believe in decent wages. That is one thing that proves what I have been saying here since Christmas.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With a corporation running at only 21 per cent of its normal production and its reserves necessarily being rapidly depleted——

Mr. CONNERY. And paying dividends!

Mr. BANKHEAD. Paying dividends out of the reserve, but with current business ventures in that situation the gentleman thinks that if the Government declines to reduce salaries that the United States Steel Corporation will not reduce the wages it pays?

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, I do not think that if the Government declines to make salary reductions, it will stop the United States Steel Corporation from cutting wages perhaps at this time, but it certainly will stop them from cutting wages more than they will if the Government cuts salaries. That observation applies to every corporation throughout the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Certainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That illustrates the vicious circle we are in. There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of people improperly housed in this country, and by reason of reduced purchasing power the Steel Corporation is working at reduced capacity. It is the same vicious circle we always have.

Mr. CONNERY. True; and in place of increasing buying capacity, they now want to decrease it by pay cuts. Speaking of my own party again—and I do not claim to be any mentor; my opinion is only as good as that of any other Member of this House—I do not question the sincerity of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] or of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS] or of the rest of those gentlemen who are trying to put this pay-cut proposition through. They have a right to their belief; but I say they are misguided in advocating this reduction of expenditures by cutting the wages of already underpaid Government workers.

The big problem before the American people to-day is not cutting Government expenditures. The big problem before the American people to-day, and the Congress, is what is going to happen to our Government if we continue to allow 8,000,000 people to stay out of work and allow their children to go hungry. What is going to happen in this Nation? Have we any God-given attributes which raise us above Russia, which makes us a government superior to that of France at the time of Marie Antoinette, when she said, "If they haven't bread, why don't they eat cake?" Is that going to be the answer of this Congress to the people who are out of work? After Marie Antoinette said that, the French Revolution ensued.

The masses of Russia barely existed under the tyranny of the Czars; they were lashed and whipped and starved; but there came a day when they revolted, and the result was Soviet Russia.

The American people are intelligent; and if they come to believe that their Government is ready to be whipped into line every time the moneyed interests crack the whip, passing Reconstruction Finance Corporation bills to protect the banks, and passing moratoria for Europe——

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five additional minutes.

Mr. CULLEN. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. And then, having passed such legislation, if the Government proceeds to cut wages, reduces the buying power of the people, reduces their chances to get jobs, adds to the unemployment situation, plays the game of the big corporations, eventually the time is coming when the American people will revolt. If they do revolt, it will be the worst catastrophe in the history of the world, because they are a thinking, intelligent people. If they get tired of going hungry, if they get tired of living in little shacks and hovels, and tired of going into the bread lines, and nothing is done to relieve them, it will be a sad day for our country.

Incidentally, right at that point, gentlemen, we have had replies from governors of States throughout the Union saying, "No starvation in my State; nobody starving; we are taking care of our own; we can take care of our own." Every Congressman must know that there are people in every city and town in this United States who are too proud to go to a poor department or to a welfare board and say, "I want bread." The only time they will go is when they are driven to the last extremity, when the little child begins to go hungry. Then they come in and ask for the dole from the city or the town.

Under our Declaration of Independence, enunciating the principle of the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, the people of this country believe they are entitled to something better than a dole. They do not ask for luxuries; they do not have to have yachts; they do not have to have any of the great luxuries of life, but they do ask a chance to work, a chance for decent food for their children, a chance for decent shelter for their children, perhaps a chance to go to the movies, the simple joys of life; a chance for a little relaxation. They are not getting that to-day. Eight millions of them are suffering in the country to-day.

I say to you in conclusion that in my mind this is no time for the Congress to add to the great army of the unemployed, to help pauperize the 90 per cent of the people of the country who are not millionaires.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is it not a fact that most Government employees are now barely able to support families on the wages they receive; and if you cut their salaries again, most of these families will be on a starvation basis?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In other words, most Government employees to-day, because of economic conditions, are supporting families of three or four children.

Mr. CONNERY. I will say to the gentleman from New York, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD] so well said the other day, they are sending home this money. In Washington here there are three or four girls, Government workers, living in small apartments. They have two girls in one room, using a small gas stove on which to cook their meals, in order that they may save money and send it home to an old father or an old mother, or to an invalid sister or some other member of the family who can not get work, and now you are going to take their last prop away from them and add them to the army of the unemployed.

Now, it has been called to my attention that the estimated saving from these cuts will amount to about $67,000,000. That is 1¾ per cent of all governmental expenditures. Why are we going to save this? I will be frank enough to say it looks to me as though it is merely a sop thrown to the big interests of the United States. It will be said, "We took care of you. We gave you, the United States Steel Corporation, an incentive to cut your wages. We gave you, the General Electric Co., a chance to put into effect your stagger system," whereby men with four children will sometimes make as much as $2.75 a week. It will be said, "We gave you a chance to do this. We agree with you in your sweatshops in Fall River, where you are paying girls only 5 cents an hour and others at the end of the week receive only $5." That is what you will be doing when you pass this kind of legislation, playing right into the hands of these corporations who exploit the weak.

I do not wish to take any more time, but I hope that when this pay cut comes in, we will be Americans and vote down these proposals to cut wages and prevent the pauperization of the people of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I am not rising to speak with reference to the suggested pay cut of Federal employees. But I do think it is very pertinent to the question which I am going to discuss, to ask the question seriously as to why during the past few days the main subject of discussion has been the proposal to cut Federal salaries? Why has that question been the one most talked about in the cloakroom, in our various offices all over Washington, and more or less throughout the country? What is the fundamental, underlying reason for a situation where it has become either appropriate, pertinent, or necessary to discuss Federal pay cuts? In my opinion, the real underlying reason for the situation in which we find ourselves and which brings such issue to the front and makes it important is the fact that we do not have a monetary unit stable in its purchasing power. [Applause.]

It is, in fact, the lack of such a stable monetary unit which has been the main cause for all of the serious disturbances that this country has witnessed between capital and labor down through the decades. It has not only made wages unfair to one side or the other from time to time, but it has also affected the income of producing classes and the ability to pay taxes. So I regard the fluctuating value of the dollar as the main reason for the discussion here in Washington at the present time of this question with reference to salaries of Federal employees. If real salaries were to-day the same as three years ago, no one would suggest a cut. In fact, none would be needed, for the likelihood of a Treasury deficit would probably not have arisen.

At the present time hearings are being held, and have been held now off and on for several weeks, before the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] and his associates, members of a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House. I personally regard those hearings as the most important that have been held before the Congress for several years, for it is hoped that from its investigation and study some legislation can be reported and enacted which will do two things: First, elevate the general commodity price level to a reasonable point, say, to the general stage or level in effect during 1926; and, secondly, after so doing keep the general commodity price level thereafter stable so that the average purchasing power of the dollar will not vary from month to month, or year to year.

The true situation with reference to our present monetary unit and its instability can be seen by any person of average intelligence almost at a glance at these two charts which I have had brought in. I take it that all of you are familiar with the so-called price-index numbers prepared from week to week, from month to month, and from year to year by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. This top chart, No. 1, consists simply of a graph representing the rise and fall in the general commodity price level, as reflected by wholesale prices, from the year 1910 up to the closing period of 1931. The prices that were in effect in 1926 were taken as a base of 100 for the purpose of computing this chart. Variations are shown by the curve or line, and the percentage thereof can be ascertained from the figures at the side of the chart. The years are given at the bottom. The commodities have been weighted in accordance with their relative importance.

You will readily realize from this chart the tremendous fluctuations that have occurred during this period of time in the average cost of commodities which people must buy.

It shows [indicating] how prices rose during the World War so that in 1920 they were almost 2½ times what they were in 1913. Translating it conversely into terms of money, what does that mean? Of course, it simply means that every individual's dollar had in the meantime become a 40-cent piece. That was the situation with reference to endowment funds, with reference to the savings of retired elderly people and everybody else who had either money or obligations payable to them in money. The purchasing power of their savings, hence their true worth, was but 40 per cent. Of course, that meant a very serious injury to all of the creditor classes at that time. Those few debtors who paid their debts benefited, but immediately after the war you had a very great decline in prices as shown here [indicating] in 1920 from a point at about 165 to about 95 within a year.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman give the reasons for that decline?

Mr. BURTNESS. I have not the time to go into all the reasons for the decline, but my general views will be easily ascertained in what I say later. Remember that this is the general commodity price level. Of course, there were many classes of commodities which fell much faster and went to a lower level than is indicated on this chart, including, for instance, agricultural commodities. I am dealing now with the average of all commodities and in which there are classifications and individual items where the fluctuations were even more pronounced.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] asked the reason for that decline. Was not that the time when the Federal reserve banks withdrew credit and, therefore, money was retired?

Mr. BURTNESS. There is no question of that being one of the important factors of the cause, but I did not now desire to take any time in discussing past history. Of course, the war had brought on a tremendous inflation of credit, which continued until 1920 and which was seemingly intentionally—at least very unwisely—contracted with a suddenness which raised havoc.

I want to get along, however, to what seems to be more closely and definitely connected with our immediate problem. Commodity prices were not stable, but were approaching stability from about the end of 1922 up to the middle of 1929 [indicating on chart], and then took a sudden decline, which has continued to this very day.

I have said commodity prices rose and fell during these years. What is the converse of that? The dollar has in the same degree increased or decreased in value; that is, in its buying power. As to that assertion of fact, there can be no dispute.

A graph showing just how that dollar has increased or decreased in value from time to time is shown upon this second chart, chart No. 2 [indicating]. This represents the purchasing power of the dollar expressed in terms of wholesale prices for the years from 1913 to 1931, inclusive. Here, too, the Bureau of Labor Statistics has taken the year 1926 as the base and calls it 100. We might say 100 cents. Of course, some may tell you that a dollar is always 100 cents, and therefore can not change in value and that sort of tommyrot; and, of course, it is always 100 cents, but let us see how the actual value of it has changed from time to time. Just exactly as the commodity price level fell from 100 in 1926 down to 66.3 in February, 1932, five years later, the purchasing power of the dollar increased conversely; that is, the dollar became bloated.

These graphs do not carry the lines into 1932, but show how the dollar increased very fast in value from July 1, 1929, gradually going up almost to 150 at this point in 1931 [indicating]. In fact, the price index for the week ending on the 9th of this month—April, 1932—was 65.7. This means that during that week the buying power of the dollar, as compared with 1926, was more than $1.50; in fact, about $1.52. This line would be here [indicating].

Now, is there anything to a dollar, in so far as its actual monetary use is concerned, except as a measure or yardstick by which you determine the price of commodities? The meter for determining its real value is the general commodity price level. Certainly its main purpose is to be used in business and in all of our transactions as a convenient common measure accepted by all. The amount of dollars available at a given time is important, but does its value go up and down simply with the quantity of currency that may be in circulation?

Of course, the amount of currency that is in circulation, the amount of credit media, whether that be money issued by the United States, whether it be gold or silver certificates, bank notes, Federal reserve notes, or checks, or other evidences passing and accepted for money, does have a marked effect. There is no doubt of that; but let us not overlook the fact that the dollar, the certificates that are issued by the Government, the Treasury notes that are issued by it and the silver coins, are all anchored to a certain definite weight of gold that a statute determined almost 100 years ago shall constitute a dollar, namely, 23.22 grains of gold. Anything else accepted in lieu of Government currency—checks, drafts, and the like—is therefore also anchored to that amount of gold per dollar.

So I take it that many of us, at least, will agree with the proposition that in the long run, by and large, the actual value of the dollar or its purchasing power will, regardless of temporary fluctuations due to credit expansion or contraction, be whatever is the value of that amount of gold. This being the case, you can readily see that while we have had during these years a dollar that is stable in its weight, it has been very variable and fluctuating in its purchasing power. So there are some of us who believe that starting out from that premise it should be possible to obtain a scientific monetary unit, with gold as its backing, just as now, but a unit that will be stable in its buying power. We can make it so by the necessary adjustments in its gold content. In other words, we should simply recognize the fact that gold is but one of thousands of commodities and that it is just as unscientific to fix the price of gold at $20.67 per ounce by statute and keep that price the same, decade after decade, as it would be to attempt to fix by legislation the price of any other commodity, for, of course, the actual value of gold, its wantedness as distinguished from its price, varies from time to time in accordance with the supply and demand thereof and other economic factors.

Open up a lot of gold mines and you will see what happens to the purchasing power of the dollar. If gold becomes plentiful and can be easily obtained, demand for it is lessened throughout the countries of the world and, of course, it becomes cheaper, and it would take a bigger dollar, if made of gold, to buy the same amount of commodities as prior to that time. Why should the price of it remain the same?

So, too, when it becomes scarce, when its production does not keep up with current needs or expansion in its use either in the monetary system or in the arts, gold naturally becomes more valuable. Its wantedness becomes greater, people start clamoring for it, and so, of course, any specific amount, whether it be 23.22 grains of gold in a specific dollar or whether it be 100 pounds or 1,000 pounds of gold dust or in a brick somewhere, becomes that much more valuable when it is converted into buying power or into the terms of other commodities. Having indicated the possibility of obtaining a stable yardstick for our monetary unit in a scientific way by making the dollar redeemable in gold of varying amounts from time to time, but always in whatever amount is necessary to maintain its purchasing power, I will delay detailed explanation of the plan embodied in the bills I am sponsoring; and if I do not have time to discuss them fully, will extend my remarks for the benefit of those desiring to learn more about the mechanics thereof. I want to press more fully in this extemporaneous and rather rambling way the tremendous importance of the problem and the need for immediate solution.

Now, what is the inevitable result of a situation where you have had falling prices from a point of 167 in 1920 [indicating] first to 96.2 in 1921, or 42 per cent from the peak of 1920, or where you have had them drop from 100 in 1926, taking a later period, down to 65 or 66 at the present time, a drop of more than one-third. In fact, it is one-third from July, 1929, to the present [indicating].

Naturally, the debt-paying power of any person who produces any commodity, be it on the farm or elsewhere, has been cut at least proportionately. There can be no doubt about that. That in turn means that the financial institution which is lending money on the credit of commodities or on the property producing such commodities has to that same extent been deprived of security for the loan that he has advanced, and therefore has been placed in a dangerous situation. In fact properties have declined even more in selling values due to the inability to make any profit in using them under such conditions.

Every one of you knows that there are relatively few real-estate mortgage concerns in the country which are sound and solvent to-day, in the sense that they could realize sufficient on their assets to take care of their liabilities. The financial structure is in danger because of the fall in prices. Real estate and similar values decline with the fall in the commodity price level, but often to an even more alarming degree.

The farmers are in a worse condition than the average business. But let us assume for the sake of argument that since July, 1929, he has suffered no more than the producer of other commodities. What would that mean? That would mean that in the payment of his debts, the payment of his interest, and the payment of any obligations which he has assumed he is now obligated to pay one and one-half times as much as he borrowed when measured in the terms of what he produces and sells.

Then when you realize that much of the indebtedness of the country, particularly of agriculture, was contracted when the purchasing power of the dollar was way down here near 60 [indicating] back in 1920, and has simply been renewed from year to year or when it became due, the debtor is now confronted with a situation where the purchasing power of the dollar is about 150. As compared with 60 you can see that every one who has had any portion of his debt carried since war times is confronted with an increase of two and one-half times, not only in the principal which is to be paid some time in the future, but also in the annual interest he has to pay.

So, too, the taxes of the country—Federal, State, local—all of them have been levied and imposed upon the standards of expenses in vogue from 1921 to 1929, and are therefore increased 50 per cent when measured in terms of products at to-day's prevailing prices.

It is not strange that we have had difficulties in collecting taxes under these conditions all over the country, not only in county and municipal governments but in the States and Federal treasuries as well. Our whole agricultural and industrial plant is as efficient as ever. Our manpower is the same. The property is here available all ready to produce the necessaries and comforts of life and the people need them. Only in price, an arbitrary yardstick, has there been a material change.

Well, you say, many remedies have been proposed, and some utilized, to see to it that prices do not go lower. Why has not the problem been solved by legislation already enacted? That is a fair question deserving attention.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 15 minutes more.

Mr. BURTNESS. I voted for the legislation providing for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and I voted for the Glass-Steagall bill. I was glad to do so, I hoped that they would help, and I believe that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation did tend to stop further downward deflation. It was helpful, too, in inspiring confidence in our banking institutions, thus preventing threatened collapse. But so far there are no evidences that it has brought, or can bring, the situation around to the point where it was hoped would be the case. Prices have not increased. In fact, the contrary seems to be indicated by the figures.

In February the price level was lower than that of January and March was lower than that of February. I have not the exact average for March, but I was informed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics a few minutes ago that March was lower than February and the price index for the week ending April 9 was lower than it had been prior thereto. In other words, we are still on a decline, although during the last three months the line has become nearly horizontal. But what we need is a marked positive increase if total and complete liquidation is to be prevented.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. The statement of the Federal Reserve Board——

Mr. BURTNESS. I am coming to that a little later. We passed the Glass-Steagall bill to broaden the paper eligible for rediscount with the Federal reserve system, but so far I doubt whether it has accomplished much. I hope, however, that it will prove helpful. Why have not these enactments solved the problem? Is the weakness in the laws or their administration, or both? Or is there some reason why they can not function to the extent hoped for by their sponsors and by Congress when they were enacted?

I look at it in this way: In the first place, I do not think it is ever possible to solve this serious problem reflected in a price decline of 33⅓ per cent since 1929 by simply increasing some credit media so long as our dollar is tied up with a fixed weight of gold behind it, and particularly so at a time when that gold is desired all over the world and is so strenuously sought for as at present. Regardless of any temporary expansion that will result in an increase in the commodity price level, the pull is always back, whether it be a case of inflation or deflation, to the actual value of the gold behind each monetary unit. That is what makes the unit sound money.

In the second place, what about the laws referred to as temporary emergency proposals to inflate, to increase the general commodity price level? Is not the trouble this, that the general public, and more particularly the banking institutions of our country, are not in the mood to be willing to take the chance, to incur the grief, involved in making loans to farmers, to industrial plants, and to business men in their various communities? What has been the psychology of the bankers, generally speaking, out in our section of the country during the last few years since this depression started?

Naturally most of them have been alarmed, and with good reason. Securities have depreciated. Other banks have closed. Public confidence has been lacking. They have feared possible runs, and that has not been limited to the open spaces in the Northwest by any means, but it is more or less the situation all over. That has meant that every bank has wanted to keep its assets in just as liquid a form as possible in order to meet all possible demands of the depositors who might come and ask for their money. In order to inspire confidence in their communities, in order to make a showing to their depositors that they are not in any way involved, but stand ready to meet demands of any who might desire to withdraw their money, they have wanted to be able to put out their regular statements showing no debts, no money borrowed. No one can blame them for that, for their position has been a difficult one.

By simply passing these pieces of legislation we were not able to change the psychology of the country banker and everybody else. The public fear and timidity still exist and they are not going to have their minds changed in that respect until they realize that we have not only hit the bottom, but that we are on the upgrade, that prices have started to improve, that their security is therefore becoming better. When that is brought about there will not be any danger about extending the credit up to the reasonable needs of the people.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Does not the gentleman recognize that the liquidity acquired by the banks has not been voluntary, but in many cases has been under compulsion from banking departments that have demanded that liquidity to a high degree be maintained, under threats that if it is not the banks will be closed?

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman is right. This whole thing has been a vicious circle. Every tendency from the urge of public officials, National and State examining bureaus, public fear, psychology, the desire of banks to save their securities for their depositors and themselves, and their business practice has been what? To contract the currency; and when I say that I mean currency in its broader sense—the circulating media of all kinds, including checks, if you please, based on various business transactions that arise. Checks are always circulated as money as soon as somebody borrows money in the bank and makes that money subject to check. But the tendency has been the other way. It has been pay your debt, and when it is paid the money representing that debt has stayed there in the bank; it has not been reloaned, there has been no opportunity to extend the circulating media and thereby expand business in the community itself; and when money is put into the bank in that way it becomes just as securely hoarded as if it were put into a hole in the ground or under your mattress.

I do not see any way in which that public psychology and that bankers' psychology can be changed until they feel and see, as I have said, that the general commodity price level is rising. Just as soon as that time comes the individual who has some credit, who has some means, who has been in his mind's eye looking for some piece of property, but waiting, waiting, until it has surely reached the very bottom, will make arrangements to buy. When the office clerk or stenographer thinks that clothes are not going to get any cheaper but are likely to rise in price she will purchase a new supply. Buying will start, retailers will begin to stock up, factories will receive orders, labor will be reemployed, the purchasing power of all will be gradually restored. Therefore it is of the utmost importance that those things be done, whatever may be necessary, to increase the general commodity price level, which, of course, putting it conversely, means decreasing the present bloated value of the dollar.

When I urge this I do not mean what is generally referred to as inflation. I heard a term the other day that I liked pretty well, used by Mr. Henry Wallace, of Des Moines, Iowa, before the Banking and Currency Committee. He called it "reflation"; in other words, simply putting back that which has been taken out since times were fairly and reasonably normal. Put the price level of commodities back to the average of what it was between 1922 and 1929. Of course, if anyone should attempt to go further and try to put conditions back to where commodity price levels were in 1919 and 1920, that would be a serious inflation above what later became normal, which would do even more harm now to the creditor classes of the country than was done then, and might prove just as serious to the public as the harm that has been done to the debtor classes since July 1, 1929.

In my judgment, attempts to effect stabilization by simply increasing and decreasing currency or credit media in some one's discretion will not be a success without including with it the power to change the price of gold, which in effect is the same as varying the weight of gold in the dollar, as the need may require. I know there are some who feel that the number of monetary units in circulation or the credit available is the all-important factor, hence disagree with that assertion. I wish you would read a pamphlet which was sent to your desk recently, apparently through the courtesy of Senator SMOOT, having his name stamped on it, prepared by one Edward B. Howell, entitled "The Economic Crisis—A Study of its Cause and Cure." I understand Mr. Howell lives in Los Angeles. If you will study the chart on page 19 in connection with the text, you will be impressed with the fact that the fluctuations of the general commodity price level have been much the same in all of the so-called gold-standard countries except as they have been affected or influenced by some temporary movement of inflation or deflation of currency within the individual country where the deviation has been temporary. But, by and large, if there have been fluctuations in one country they have been substantially the same in other gold-standard countries.

Referring to this chart on page 19 of the pamphlet [indicating], the main heavy line represents the long-term fluctuation. I do not know if all of you can see it, but this is a chart showing the commodity price index of England and the United States over a long period of years. I am not going to take the time to quote from the pamphlet, as I had intended, but urge you to read it for yourselves.

My study has led me to the conclusion that if we are to obtain an honest dollar that will not fluctuate in its purchasing power we will have to approach the problem in a scientific way; that is, attack the problem from the viewpoint of the actual value of the commodity which is behind the dollar, the value of the gold in which the monetary unit is redeemable. Please understand that I do not believe in fiat money. I want every unit redeemable in something of specific value, and gold is the most convenient and generally acceptable. I do not believe in any system establishing a purely managed currency, at least not as a permanent proposition, for I regard such a system as dangerous in that in any political government it is impossible to get men with sufficient ability and judgment, to say nothing of the strictest kind of integrity required, to manage it for the general public good. Such tremendous discretion is too great a power to give to any man or to a few men. Emergency measures may be a different proposition, and I am not discussing them. We are now interested in ending the present depression, but also in making it impossible for similar depressions to recur in the future.

I hope and believe the bill that will be reported by the Banking and Currency Committee will recognize at least the principle of the variable gold standard for our monetary system. Personally, I would like to see it adopted and made a permanent automatic factor in our monetary system as proposed in my bills. I do not know whether the members of the committee will deem that advisable or not. A recognition of the principle will, however, be helpful, and that is to be found in the Goldsborough bill.

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. Is not 90 per cent of the business of the country transacted through currency credit?

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly; about that. Credit is of greater importance than the exact amount of Government currency in circulation.

Mr. GARBER. And the currency credit is dependent to a great extent upon the confidence of the people in the administration of the Federal Reserve Board. Illustrative of that, the marked decline was attributed largely to the restriction of credit by the Federal Reserve Board and the horizontal increase in freight rates to the extent of 33⅓ per cent throughout the United States.

Mr. BURTNESS. In a general way I would agree with the gentleman, but I have not the time to discuss all the factors fully. Available credit is always a tremendously important factor in the commodity price level.

I started to say that the bill already offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], as a basis for the hearings, recognized this principle. There are some features of it with which I can not agree, but I believe the bill will be rewritten by the committee and that it will be a good measure and one which we can all support. I hope it will go far enough.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Would it not be proper to say that the currency of the present moment is a controlled currency under the present law and the powers vested in the Federal reserve banks, and that by their handling of the currency and credit situation—buying bonds on the market and issuing currency—they have, in fact, controlled the currency?

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly to a very large extent; and the failure of the Federal Reserve Board to do a better job, as reflected in our present situation, is one of the reasons why I fear any system embodying primarily a managed currency. Convinced as I am of the soundness and practicability of a variable weight control based upon the general commodity prices, I do not think that it is necessary to remain subject to the hazards of a managed currency system where many other factors are also involved. In my extension of remarks I will specifically refer to and discuss the bills that I have introduced which I believe provide for a scientific method of stabilizing the commodity price level or, in other words, the buying power of the dollar.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman also include the charts that he is using to-day?

Mr. BURTNESS. That will have to be decided by the Joint Printing Committee.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman make that request?

Mr. BURTNESS. I will be glad to, as the gentleman from Colorado desires that they be included. It will, however, involve a delay in printing the proceedings in the RECORD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. At the cost of another reiteration of my opinion, what the gentleman is now discussing is the most important economic problem that can come before Congress. I want to ask the gentleman if the hearings have not been practically concluded before the subcommittee on this proposition and when may we reasonably expect a final report out of the committee?

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman will have to address that question to the members of the committee, because I am not a member thereof. I have been interested in this question for the last seven or eight years, have discussed it with many members, been in almost constant attendance at the hearings, but have not made much noise about it. However, I have made a full presentation to the committee and in former sessions have made speeches in regard to it on the floor of the House. Farm organizations became interested last summer. Hearings are almost completed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I trust the gentleman and all others who are interested in a real restoration of economic stability in this country will make a great deal of noise about it from now on.

Mr. BURTNESS. I appreciate very much what the gentleman has said, and his earnest interest, for I believe that this question of stabilization of the commodity price level is the key log in the economic jam confronting the country, and that if that question can be solved, including an increase approximately to the 1926 level, many of the other issues that are before us will simply fade away in the mist. There is no question about that. However, unfortunately we now have the two problems: First, a restoration of the general commodity price level of a few years ago, and then the stabilization of the price level in the future, so that such a debacle can not recur as the one we have experienced during the last few years. If my bill H. R. 20, or something equally effective, had been enacted in normal times, I firmly believe our difficulties now would be relatively minor ones.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. According to a Treasury report, there was about $53 per capita circulation of money in the United States in 1920. At the present time there is about $43, yet there is one-third more gold in this country than there was in 1920. According to those figures, which are Treasury figures, the circulating medium can be increased very materially and still be on a perfectly sound basis. Does the gentleman know what steps, if any, are being taken by the Federal Reserve Board looking to the restoration of the currency to its normal and average flow in the country?

Mr. BURTNESS. Well, I can not say I do, exactly. Of course, that question involves a number of problems, which it would take half an hour to answer, such as how to issue additional currency, what sort of a backing to give it, provide a redemption fund, determine whether the Government or the Federal reserve should issue it, and so forth.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman knows that authority has been granted by acts of Congress under the terms of which that might be stimulated.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman refers to the Glass-Steagall Act. I do not know whether the gentleman was here when I referred to that act; but I will say that the Glass-Steagall Act will be of no value to the country whatsoever unless the public, the bankers, the borrowers, and the entire banking structure of the country are willing to use it, and that the Federal Reserve Board can not accept paper that has been made eligible unless and until it is offered for rediscount. Out in the Twin Cities in Minnesota, for instance—where our banking interests in our section really converge—they did not need the Glass-Steagall Act; they had all sorts of paper in their banks which was already eligible for discount and which they could have used if they had wanted to do so; but the constantly falling prices, the human fear, the timidity of the bankers, the need of keeping the bank liquid because of the public mind, were all such that they did not dare to pledge the paper; and as long as the commodity price level continues to fall instead of rise, you can not blame them very much for it, as no one knows what the security will actually be worth if forced to liquidate it.

Mr. JONES. I will state to the gentleman that that is largely true, and I beg his pardon, because I was not here during the earlier part of his remarks. However, I wondered if the Federal Reserve Board had issued an order under which that would be made possible.

Mr. BURTNESS. I think something can be done. Personally, I feel the press report this morning with reference to the attitude of the Federal Reserve Board, inviting, if not urging, a more general use of the act, will be very helpful now; but it may simply be another shot in the arm, and it will not solve the problem permanently. For that reason I am urging scientific legislation that will solve the problem in the future, as well as legislation which will immediately raise prices so that we need not depend on recurring shots in the arm, which are more or less helpful temporarily.

Mr. JONES. Then I assume the gentleman agrees that Congress would be fully justified in passing some such measure as the Goldsborough bill, or some other measure, which would automatically, within proper limits, stabilize the value of the dollar measured in terms of commodity prices so that commodity prices may be increased to proper relative level?

Mr. BURTNESS. I am in favor of any legislation which will restore the general commodity price level to a fair and reasonable stage so as to make it possible for debtors to pay their debts. Then it is the duty of Congress under the Constitution to regulate the value of our dollar by permanent legislation so that the price level will be stabilized permanently.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. I thought the gentleman was about to conclude his speech when I arose. I have been very much interested in the gentleman's discussion of this problem. Will the gentleman in his extension of remarks explain his attitude further with reference to changing the value of the gold dollar to which he referred in his talk? Does the gentleman contemplate that?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes. My prepared remarks cover that quite fully in the discussion of the bills which I have offered for that purpose. I am flattered and pleased with what seems to be an assurance that they will be read in the RECORD and the question studied by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON], than whom there is no more able and earnest student.

Mr. COLTON. There are some of us who follow the gentleman to his ultimate conclusion, but we are also interested in a subsidiary basic monetary unit, and we believe that silver is the logical metal to use for that purpose.

Mr. BURTNESS. I want to say to the gentleman that silver is dealt with more liberally in the bills which I have introduced than in any other bills pending before the Congress except those providing for bimetallism at a fixed ratio. My bills do not place an arbitrary value upon silver. I treat silver the same as I treat gold or would treat any other commodity at its true value. I do not believe in fixing an arbitrary value with reference to silver. We provide, however, that 20 per cent of the redemption fund may be in silver. So long as it is used at its actual value it could well be more. I am not particular as to the exact percentage.

Mr. COLTON. I do not believe in a fixed ratio, but in view of present conditions I believe this country can very well give serious consideration to the use of silver as a subsidiary basic monetary unit. We need something to supplement gold and increase the money of ultimate redemption.

Mr. BURTNESS. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's viewpoint and hope he will approve our method of dealing with silver.

Mr. ARENTZ. In answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] I would like to say that a resolution has been adopted by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York calling for $25,000,000 a week of open-market operations; in other words, the purchase of that many bonds each week in order to do just the thing the gentleman is speaking of and the gentleman from Texas asked about.

Mr. BURTNESS. That was reported in the press this morning. Of course, the purchase of bonds will be very helpful, and the purchase and sale of bonds is one of the methods proposed in my bill to synchronize the issue of Treasury notes with business needs and to assist stabilization, with the fundamental method of varying the weight of gold in the dollar so as to keep the price level constant. We, however, put the responsibility on the Treasury under definite legislative guides and leave nothing to the discretion of the Federal reserve system with reference to that specific feature. This I feel is vital, for I am not enamored with the results of discretionary powers in that regard exercised by the board heretofore. In any event, there must be a synchronization between temporary issues of currency and the scientific basis upon which my bills propose that the monetary unit be based. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTNESS. Under leave to extend, I want to discuss more specifically the two bills to stabilize the buying power of money introduced by me on the opening day of this session. I will first refer to my H. R. 20, which is a fourth revision of a bill first presented in 1923.

The principles on which it is based are set forth in my speeches printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 28, 1926, and March 2, 1931. The author of the plan is Mr. Dana J. Tinnes, an economist, of Grand Forks, N. Dak., whose statement in explanation thereof was recently presented to the Banking and Currency subcommittee holding hearings on stabilizing the purchasing power of money or the commodity price level, and which I hope Members will read.

The bill, in effect, retains the gold dollar as the standard of uniformity while setting up a composite goods dollar as the standard of stability. Many confuse these two aspects of standardization and declare themselves for "maintaining the gold standard" when they merely mean maintaining redemption in gold, thus continuing a gold unit as the standard of uniformity, though they fully realize its unfitness to serve as a standard of stability.

We must differentiate these two aspects of standardization. Full standardization implies not only assurance of uniformity but assurance of stability in its essential quality, and the essential quality of money is its buying power. Every real yardstick is not only of the same length as every other yardstick but it is itself of the same length at all times. Every true pound-weight is not only of the same weight as every other but it is of the same weight at all times.

In the sense of uniformity, our dollar is standardized. Every dollar, whether of paper, silver, or gold, is like every other in its essential quality—value. It is made so by its legal exchangeability, direct or indirect, with every other; for value is simply rate of exchangeability, and things readily exchangeable on equal terms, one for another, remain of the same value, which in money is called buying power.

But in the more important matter of stability, our money is unstandardized. The gold dollar, and with it all media of exchange held at par with it by redeemability, changes in its essential quality, buying power, with every change in the buying power of the metal, gold. This is shown by the changes, not in individual prices but in the average of prices which we call the price level. The only way we have of comparing the buying power of money at different periods is by comparative measurements of the price level. For the price level and the buying power of money are reciprocals; as one rises, the other falls; by regulation of either, both may be held stable.

Since it is manifestly impracticable, as well as undesirable, to price-fix all commodities, thus stabilizing buying power indirectly, the dollar must be stabilized directly, by regulation of its gold weight. And this is the natural way, for money should be the tool of commerce. One does not trim the foot to fit the shoe, but fits the shoe to the foot. Believers in sound money agree that the dollar has buying power in proportion to the weight of gold in which it is redeemable; that more gold will buy more goods and less gold less goods. It logically follows that any change in the dollar's buying power due to other causes can be counteracted by prompt corrective regulation of its weight.

Gold coins no longer circulate. International trade balances are settled in gold by weight, and all gold dealt out by the Treasury for use in art and manufacture is in bars marked with their weight. Gold coins are no longer a convenience. There remains no reason for coining them. Redemption in gold, therefore, will mean redemption in the weight of gold shown by the current mint rate. With this in mind, it becomes clear that the weight of the dollar, i. e., of the uncoined gold bullion dollar, can be regulated and so stabilized by sufficiently prompt adjustments of the mint rate.

Assisting this main stabilization process is a continuous regulation of the supply of currency to the needs of business, additional currency being issued as the need for it increases. These additional issues can not cause currency inflation, for they are put out only at times when the decrease of the mint rate shows a rise in the value of the redemption metal, gold. Since all credit extended is payable in currency, this steadies the use of credit the country over and lessens the need of weight adjustments.

Let me illustrate the operation of this plan: The present depression began in the month of July, 1929. Had this bill gone into effect before the end of that month, the weight of gold to be paid out for a dollar on August 1 would have been reduced slightly to counteract the downward pressure on prices shown during the preceding day. For a dollar calling for less gold would buy less goods, thus tending to sustain the price level. And on every day thereafter there would have been a similar slight raise of the mint rate so long as the downward pressure of the price level continued.

It is not to be expected that each of these infinitesimal daily weight adjustments would be at once fully effective in blocking the decline. But any so-called "lag" there might be would be due to the smallness of the adjustments and would be taken up as soon as by cumulation it became noticeable. Also, no price-level trend is continuous, or unbroken. There are days or weeks when inflation or depression tendencies are temporarily checked. Sometimes, as in August, 1930, the trend is checked, and, as in September of the same year, it is reversed. With our daily measurements of price-level tendencies, many such checks or reversals will be shown which are now ironed out in the monthly averages. And each of such checks or reversals will absorb whatever lag may then exist.

Could the slump of price level have continued two and a half years while the dollar in which price is measured was growing lighter and while the supply of money in circulation was being prevented from shrinking? This would not be change, but prevention of change. The bullion dollar would change frequently in its gold weight to prevent change in its only essential quality—buying power. And blocking change in the value of the gold unit would at the same time stabilize the currency and with it all credit extended and all contracts written in terms of that currency.

I have shown what would have been the effect had this bill been adopted before the present depression began. Should it be passed now, it would prevent price-level disturbance in future and the existing price level would ultimately become the fair and normal level. But prevention of future unfairness would not relieve those who now suffer from a load of debt laid upon them by this depression. To relieve them a debt-adjustment section is suggested by Mr. Tinnes in the statement to which I have referred. Adjustment of debts by such plan would, by reduction of interest charges on public bonds, make possible a great reduction of taxes. Some might question the practicability of such debt-adjustment provision and some its constitutionality. In any event, either it or the plan proposed in H. R. 21 seems necessary to take care of the interests of debtors at this time of an abnormally low price level. It simply becomes a question as to which is the more practical way of handling it.

My remarks thus far relate to H. R. 20, the revised form of my original bill. This measure could go into effect without the least disturbance of business and it would cause no additional bookkeeping in any line. The fluctuations in the value of gold, which would still occur, would then be shown by change in the price of gold instead of, as now, by inverse change in the general price level. The currency and credit in use in trade would become more stable in its buying power than the gold, so the metal no longer would be desirable as a hoard of wealth. There would be an increased use of "lawful money" of the Government in bank reserves. Gold used as collateral against loans would be subject to the same limitations as other collaterals. The "gold clause" in monetary contracts would become obsolete, for the creditors no longer would need protection against inflation nor the debtor against depression. As shown in my speech of March 2, 1932, there would be a great decrease in speculation in gold values. But if passed under present conditions it should, in justice to debtors, include the debt-adjustment feature to which I have referred.

The companion bill, H. R. 21, is an adaptation of H. R. 20, intended to fit the conditions now existing, without the need of the debt-adjustment feature. It aims to deflate the dollar by raising the commodity price level to the stage at which the bulk of existing debts were incurred. It was written just before Congress convened. The buying power of money was already inflated 50 per cent as compared with the beginning of 1926 and more than 43 per cent as compared with July, 1929, which was the month the present depression started. The average of prices had gone down 31 per cent in 23 months with no prospect of its being checked for months ahead. An avalanche is more easily started than stopped.

The proposed raise of 35 per cent would take up little more than four-fifths of the inflation of the dollar since the present price slump began and less than two-thirds of its inflation since January, 1926. Such a raise seemed fair. Were it not that prices were still falling, more allowance might have been made for debts contracted in the two years past though, from the debtors' viewpoint, most of these were but renewals of former indebtedness. The price slump continued until about the 1st of March. According to the index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, wholesale prices continued declining throughout December, January, and February. Even during the last week of January the drop was as great as 1⅓ per cent. Possibly the 35 per cent advance proposed should be changed somewhat. This could be effected by a slight verbal change in the bill. However, that is a detail which can be worked out by the committee and Congress in a way deemed most fair in the interests of the general good.

The 35 per cent raise proposed is effected mainly by the devaluation of the gold dollar in section 1, reducing its weight to 1 gram 250 milligrams, with a ratcheting proviso in section 6 which prevents any downward adjustments of the gold dollar until after the average of commodity prices shall have been raised to the desired stage. The bill also increases the volume of Government currency sufficiently to prevent money shortage being caused by the devaluation of the unit. Government money is but a minor part of the supply of trade media. Should its volume at the start be insufficient to carry out the purpose of the bill, more currency will be added and all of it provided with not less than 40 per cent backing.

A bill to amend the Federal reserve act to induce cooperation by the Federal reserve system was written to accompany this bill, but the new bills by Congressmen GOLDSBOROUGH, STRONG, and RAMSEYER so nearly covered the same ground that it was not at first introduced. I did, however, introduce it on Monday, March 14, as H. R. 10487. Such legislation should grant no new powers to the system, but should guide it in the exercise of powers already possessed. Fundamental functions of the Government, such as controlling the weight of the unit of value by regulating the price of gold, should not be surrendered to any private profit-earning corporation. Neither should wise reserve requirements be virtually nullified by permitting banks to fix their own reserve ratio as proposed in some quarters. I have not asked for passage of H. R. 10487, but submitted it, believing that some of its provisions should be included as amendments to the Goldsborough, Strong, or Ramseyer bill if reported by the committee. The general purpose is similar. It gives a mandate to the Federal Reserve Board to raise the price level to the stage at which the greater part of existing indebtedness was contracted, but not less than 25 per cent.

Silver in H. R. 21 is given liberal treatment, for the currency is made payable in either gold or silver at the option of the Treasury, and in the redemption fund the proportion of silver carried may be larger than that provided for in H. R. 20. But silver is still dealt out not at a fixed ratio to gold but at its current market price.

A necessary part of the bill is the provision in section 1 making notes, bonds, and so forth, containing the "gold clause" payable not in a specified weight of gold but in "lawful money of the United States"; that is, in money representing bullion dollars of the gold weight current at the time of payment. In contracts for future delivery of a given weight of the commodity, gold, the amount should be stated in terms of weight.

If written in terms of dollars, with a gold clause added, it becomes a trap for the unwary. This provision in section 1 is needed to protect those who have "gold-clause" notes outstanding against them. The deflation of the dollar would not fully protect them as debtors if they were still compelled to pay their dollar obligations in gold at the old weight. We are told by Professor Fisher that he was assured by Chief Justice Taft that Congress has the power to nullify the gold clause in such contracts. This seems startling, but I believe it is a correct statement as to the power existing in Congress as distinguished from States.

The first paragraph in section 12 is intended to prevent speculation at the expense of the Treasury; and this is the only feature of the bill which will not do all it is intended to do. For while section 1 nullifies the gold clause in notes and other monetary contracts, it will still be possible for people holding gold before the bill goes into effect to realize directly or indirectly, more for it than it cost them.

There is a remedy for this which will completely do away with gold profiteering. Had this simple remedy been applied years ago other nations would doubtless have followed suit and the free-gold market would have been, in a large degree, restored. It would have prevented the vast impoundments of the metal and consequent enhancement of its value which have been one of the main causes of our economic depression. The remedy which I shall propose and which, for convenience, I shall call section 17 of the bill, may be considered radical by many. But it is radical only in the sense that it is fundamental and goes to the root of the evil.

Measures not justifiable in the case of other commodities may properly be used to prevent speculation in the redemption metal. The only way to quickly restore our commodity price level to the debt-incurrence stage is to deflate the dollar by reducing its weight, accompanying this by proper regulation of the currency volume as provided in this bill. If this sharp devaluation makes possible gold profiteering, then obviously the thing to do is to tax away the profit on such operations.

TAXING AWAY PROFITS ON HOARDED GOLD

I therefore submit for your consideration the addition or insertion at a proper place of the following two paragraphs. The first will prevent speculators profiting by buying gold before the bill goes into effect and selling it thereafter. Both paragraphs will operate against speculating in the metal at any time in the future.

SEC. 17. Upon the first day of the second month after passage of this act, every person and firm in the United States who since its passage shall have sold or traded refined gold in any form or forms to the amount of 1,000 grams or more shall render to the Monetary Standard Division a true and accurate report showing the entire profit on such sales or trades. And upon the first day of every month thereafter, every person and firm whose sales of refined or assayed gold, purchased before or within 60 days after passage of this act and not included in a previous report, shall have aggregated 1,000 grams or more, shall render to the division a similar report of profits derived therefrom. Upon receipt of said reports, the division shall levy against such persons or firm a tax equal in amount to the entire profit thus reported. The tax so levied shall be paid in gold at the mint rate in effect on the date of this report, and the gold so paid in shall be added to the redemption fund.

Upon the first day of every month after passage of this act, every person and firm owning or controlling refined or assayed gold in excess of 1,000 grams shall render to the division a true and accurate report showing in grams the average daily amount of gold so owned or controlled during the month last past. Should the mint rate have shown a rise in the value of gold during said month, the division shall levy against such owner of gold a tax equal in amount to the rise in value of the gold so owned or controlled. The tax so levied shall be paid in gold at the mint rate, current on the date of report; and the gold paid in shall be added to the redemption fund.

The first paragraph of this so-called " Sec. 17 " is designed, as stated, to bar speculation due to the devaluation of the dollar. It would leave no incentive to redeem gold certificates while the hill was going through the legislative process of enactment. The second does not hinder trading in gold later, but taxes away profits on gold hoarded during an advance in its value. Hoarding, at best, is an interference with supply-demand trade in the metal. The tax would not apply on gold held at times when it is not rising in value. The first paragraph is, in my judgment, essential and the second worthy of serious consideration.

Opponents of deflation of the unit may suggest the happy thought that enactment of this bill would benefit not only American debtors but also foreigners owing debts due in dollars. That I readily admit and in reply say it is an added argument in its favor. Are not our European debtors entitled to such a benefit? Their debts to us were entered into when the dollar was much cheaper, as measured in goods, than it now is. We oppose cancellation of foreign debts to us, but can we, with good face, oppose their payment in dollars of about the same buying power as the dollars they borrowed. In any event any devise or change in conditions which will increase the price level will to like effect benefit the foreign debtor.

The redeemability of our currency should be maintained but not on the discredited fixed-weight gold standard. Justice to debtors, taxpayers, and property owners demands that the grossly inflated dollar be deflated. I feel the automatic plan proposed by H. R. 21 is sound in every respect. Unless some such plan is adopted there will be a demand for suspension of redemption in gold until the price level gets back to normal, but would it end there? Suspension is dangerous, for we have no assurance that redemption would be resumed on a proper weight basis when prices become normal and no safeguard against a recurrence of our present maladjustments.

Most of the countries of Europe are off the gold standard, and their price levels have gone up, with considerable temporary advantage to their people. But, of course, redemption must be resumed on some level or their currencies will go the way of the Kaiser's mark. Should they revalue by deflating their gold unit at some fortunate point, as did France, they may become prosperous. Should they do as did England a few years ago, push their price level down and their debts up by greatly overvaluing their units at the time of redemption, they will suffer.

England's suspension later raised her price level, thus enlivening business and relieving debtors of at least a part of the unjust burden laid upon them by the forcing down of prices. Business has picked up despite the raising of the bank rate to 6 per cent and the restriction placed upon foreign trade. An economic survey, by Handelsbanken, one of the two great banks of Sweden, has the following:

England's suspension of the gold standard gave a certain impetus to the economic life of the country. A similar effect was felt in other countries that released their currency. The contrary was the case in the gold-standard countries.

Suspension is not desirable for us; but unless we enact legislation along the lines I propose, we may find it to be the only way to throw off the incubus of a fixed-weight gold standard. The thinking public must learn to distinguish between maintenance of redemption in gold and the maintenance of a fixed weight of an unstable metal as our standard of stability. Should suspension become necessary it might be followed by redemption on a fair level and thus do substantial justice temporarily.

On the other hand, the only system that can give us real monetary stability, not for a few months or a few years but permanently, is the establishment of an all-commodity standard that will operate automatically and will leave little or nothing to human discretion, but will be administered by the Government itself. Only in that way will Congress perform its full duty under the Constitution to regulate the value of money.

If we are to have a stable price level, we must make our currency what it was intended to be—a purely national monetary system. There is no reason why we should not cut our money unit free from monetary foreign entanglements by making the weight of our gold-redemption unit subject to regulation by the guidance of a scientific price-index number, paying out at all times a dollar's worth of gold for a dollar, more when gold cheapens and less when it becomes dearer.

Some suggest that stabilization should be international. The fact is that real stabilization must be independent of other countries and only national in its scope. A world-price index could be but a compromise or an average of various domestic price levels, and a unit based thereon would be really stable nowhere. It is the domestic buying power of our own currency in which we are primarily interested. Tariff barriers imposed by different countries make any attempt at international stabilization impractical. We must not yield to the seductive suggestion of first holding international conferences, for that would only delay this much-needed reform.

I confidently submit H. R. 21 as well-thought-out legislation, based upon sound economics for immediate enactment. Its passage would permit debtors to retire their indebtedness, would safeguard the securities held by creditors, including all financial institutions, would greatly minimize the age-old struggle between capital and labor by doing away with changes in the cost of living, would reduce the hazard of all business enterprises by taking out the gamble involved in fluctuating general price levels—fluctuations in the value of gold, would remove the key log in the jam blocking restoration of prosperity, would end the tremendous losses incurred by creditor and debtor classes in the past whenever the price level has increased or decreased, and would greatly minimize, if not absolutely prevent, recurring depressions in the future.

These and many more will be the good results of any legislation permanently providing a monetary unit constant and stable in buying power. Congress and the country are confronted with no task of as transcending importance as that of providing at once, and for all time to come, an "honest dollar."

So that Members may have before them in convenient form the figures on which the charts used in my speech were prepared, I append hereto the tabulation of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The all-commodity-price index is found in the last column. The indexes for the various classifications of groups of commodities are, however, also very interesting and important. They show, for instance, that the decline has been greatest in farm products—49.7 for the week ending April 9—and least in metals and metal products—80.2 for the same week. The exact price situation for any group at any time since January 1, 1913, can be readily determined by reference to the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, we have waited patiently for the dawn of this wonderful day, a day that we expected was going to be full of hope and promise for us. We knew there had been a couple of mountains in labor, and lo and behold, the net result of the two mountains being in labor was the fact we had a couple of mice brought in here this morning, one from each mountain.

We were told we were going to balance the Budget and to-day was going to be the day that would mark the balancing of the Budget, and these magnificent plans were presented to us. First, that of our illustrious President.

What does the President propose? Oh, he has a wonderful plan. He is going to reduce the wages of charwomen $4.17 a month. Women working for $50 a month are going to get a cut of $4.17 a month. This is certainly a very heavy reduction. We go along to the $1,200 typist and what is proposed there? Oh, we reduce her $8.33 a month. What about the $2,000 stenographer? Well, I guess she can stand a cut of about $14 a month. We will cut a $2,000 stenographer $14 a month. What about the $2,500 clerk? I guess we can go a little stronger on them and we can cut them $17.33 a month. On account of the new income tax in the District, these cuts would bring the amount paid by the clerks up to 15 per cent of their salaries.

What about the Army and the Navy, the fellows getting $30 a month? Well, the plan is quiet about them, and I do not know what is going to happen to them. We will have to await further developments.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They are exempted, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BOYLAN. The plan put in the RECORD does not state that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I inquired about that this morning.

Mr. BOYLAN. Now, this great Economy Committee, what about them? They say that they will waive $1,000 to commence with. The income tax in the District of Columbia for a single person waives $1,000 and for a married couple I think it is $2,500. In the State of New York we waive the first $2,500 for a married couple and $1,500 for a single person.

Let us take a $2,500 clerk. Under the President's plan they are mulcted to the tune of about $208 a year, and under the committee's plan they are mulcted $165 a year, but, of course, between these two plans the President's would be a little better in this instance, because while there is only a difference of $35, yet they would have the benefit of having 30 days off during the year.

Now, my friends, when we passed a bill here a week or 10 days ago, providing additional revenue of over $1,000,000,000, we did not think with all those high taxes we had levied upon the splendid people of our country it would be necessary to go down into the pockets of the poor charwomen working for $50 a month or the $1,200 a year clerk or the $2,000 or $2,500 per year clerk.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is an expert on economy——

Mr. BOYLAN. Oh, no; I do not claim to be an expert.

Mr. FISH. And the gentleman has given a great deal of time to the consideration of these matters. I would like to ask him, in all seriousness, whether it would be possible to suspend the salaries of the emergency officers who are holding Government jobs and receiving double compensation from the Government?

Mr. BOYLAN. Of course, that is a matter that is receiving consideration by a committee of this House and I would not care to anticipate the report of the committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. BLANTON will take care of them.

Mr. BOYLAN. Now, we have a splendid country here, a country we have always been proud of, and we are always happy to speak of our wonderful achievements, yet our greatness has not been accomplished by doing small and petty things, and I think at this day and time and in this hour we ought to send out a note of hopefulness to the people of our country and that we should not set the example here in Washington of reducing the salaries of faithful Federal employees.

I said the other day—and I want to repeat it, because we have got to keep driving this thing home—I said that the Federal employees had never been properly compensated in comparison with similar work on the outside. During the war and after the war, during the period of prosperity, when the pay of artisans was increased, the white-collar men and women did not receive any substantial increase at the hands of the Government. Therefore the present salary is practically a minimum salary, and you want to cut the minimum salary by either of these plans which have been proposed to us to-day.

Now, in making up a tax bill you can frequently take one item and with the application of a small tax you can more than cover the entire amount sought to be saved to the Government by the reduction of salaries. It is, to my mind, an unjust taxation, because you single out certain employees as against every other class of employees. To my mind, it would be most unfair and unjust, because you know that in the application of any laws we pass we are supposed to make them apply equally to all the people of the country, and not to pick out one certain group of citizens to apply them to.

Therefore, any legislation which seeks to tax a Federal employee, which seeks to reduce his compensation, which you do by either plan, militates against him or her as being a Federal employee.

These men and women, these employees, are honorable. They come from all parts of our country, those who are working in Washington and those in the field—and every State has its quota—have adopted the Federal service as a career.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BOYLAN. Now, in pursuance of this career, they take up their work in the Federal departments; and if they are going to be held up year after year and threatened with a pay cut or separation from the service, how can they have any morale or carry on faithfully as they should?

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield with pleasure to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. Is it not a fact that if the Federal employees' salaries are cut it is going to make a great difference in the prosperity we are seeking for; that if their power of buying is curtailed, then it is going to reflect not only in the District but the entire country and make conditions worse than they are at the present time?

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentlewoman's statement is absolutely correct. When you reduce the salaries you reduce the buying power.

To illustrate, take the poor charwoman from whose salary the President proposes to deduct $4.13 a month. That $4.13 may represent 25 bottles of milk; it may perhaps represent some lamb chops which she would be accustomed to eat; perhaps it might mean a new pair of shoes for one of the minor children that she is trying to support. If on account of this cut she is unable to buy those things, necessarily, as the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey has stated, there will not be a market for them, and therefore progress to get back to normalcy will be retarded.

Now, this morning a distinguished gentleman, representing one of these economy committees, told us that we had better watch out as to our vote or we might not come back. Well, we are willing to take our chance on that. I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I make this prediction that if the rule had been brought in this morning we would have beaten it out of its boots. [Laughter and applause.] It was not brought in, and let me tell you another thing, that legislation along these lines, when it is presented to the House, is going to be defeated. Because I know this body. I know it to be a body of men who are human, many of whom have had to make their way themselves, and they have a sympathy for the man or the woman struggling along. It is all right to tax somebody who can afford to pay taxes, but to tax poverty as you would under these two plans is to my mind beneath the dignity of the American Congress. I do not believe that a measure of the kind proposed will ever pass this body, because as I have stated, you segregate a particular class and tax them, which, to my mind, would be unconstitutional. Apart from this, how about the psychological effect of it all? Let us send out a note of cheerfulness and hope to our people and not one of gloom and despair. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, during the past 10 years Republican Presidents have had at their command a Bureau of the Budget, which is the President's private, personal bureau, the officers of which are appointed at will by the President and removed at will by the President. These Budget officers are the personal agents of the President to prepare for him, under his direction and control, the financial estimates of all the needed expenditures that are to be made by every department, bureau, and independent establishment of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year; and when the President's Budget estimates for him the expenditures needed to be made that have his approval, then the President sends a message to Congress transmitting his budget, and the President therein requests Congress to make appropriations covering such estimated expenditures detailed in his budget.

This Bureau of the Budget is controlled absolutely by the President. It takes orders from the President, and from him alone. The officers of the Budget exercise no discretion of their own, but are directed by the President to carry out his will. They obey the President. They recommend only such appropriations as the President desires them to make. And, when the President transmits to Congress his budget, it embraces only such appropriations as have his approval, and which he wants made, and which he requests Congress to make.

When a bill is introduced in Congress that will take money out of the Treasury, the committee to which it is referred sends the bill immediately to the Budget Bureau for its consideration so that it may ascertain from the President whether or not it has his approval, and whether it is within his financial program, and when the President's Budget reports that such bill is against the financial program of the President, there are Members who make it the rule and practice of using every objection and stop known to parliamentary procedure to block such bill and prevent its passage.

Under the President's Budget for the fiscal year of 1931 the general and special fund expenditures were $4,091,663,908.41, which enormous sum exceeded our receipts for that year by $902,716,845.07, or in other words, the Republican President permitted the United States to spend nearly a billion dollars more than we had, thus causing a deficit of $902,716,845.07 for that fiscal year.

Likewise, under President Hoover's Republican Budget estimates for the fiscal year 1932, the general and special expenditures are $4,361,839,800, which is a sum more than two billion dollars in excess of our receipts, thus creating a deficit of $2,122,682,685 in the Treasury. And when President Hoover and his personal Budget agents made up his Budget for the fiscal year of 1933 they knew clearly and distinctly the condition of the Treasury, yet they recommended to Congress in the President's message transmitting his Budget in December when this Congress convened, that Congress should appropriate for the fiscal year of 1933 the sum of $3,996,672,450, when they knew that such sum was greater than our estimated receipts for that year by the enormous sum of $1,416,949,448. The above figures will be found on page 5 of President Hoover's message transmitting to Congress his Budget for the fiscal year of 1933.

It is a fact that the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, of which I am a member, under the leadership of our great chairman, Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, of Tennessee, has in this Congress reduced in a substantial amount the President's estimates for each and every department for which it has presented supply bills, such reductions already totaling about $150,000,000. And our committee expects to make further reductions.

It was within the province of President Hoover to have reduced his Budget estimates $250,000,000, or $500,000,000, or $750,000,000, or even $1,000,000,000 for each of the last three years, if he had desired. He could have slashed the appropriations for 1931 at least $1,000,000,000. But he did not do it. He could have slashed the appropriations for 1932 at least $1,000,000,000. But he did not do it. He could have slashed the appropriations for the fiscal year of 1933 at least $1,000,000,000. But he did not do it. Just why did he not do it? His department heads would not let him. He was not strong enough to make them retrench. He could not turn down their demands. He did not impress upon them his wishes. He let them control him and dominate him. He let them have their way. They wanted $4,000,000,000. And he gave them $4,000,000,000. President Hoover is the Chief Executive. It is his duty to keep the Budget balanced. It is his duty not to spend more than the Nation can afford. It is his duty not to permit extravagance. It is his duty not to permit waste. It is his duty to see that the people's tax money is properly expended.

It is only just and right that the people of the United States should hold President Hoover responsible for the great deficit that our Treasury is now facing. He could have stopped it. He is the only man who could have stopped it. He could have slashed the demands of each and every department, bureau, commission, and independent office of the Government.

He could have told that Budget Bureau, I order you not to give any department more money that I authorize, and the aggregate that you shall allow all of the departments must not be a greater sum than the estimated receipts of the Government.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. What would the President have done if Congress had ordered these expenditures?

Mr. BLANTON. He could have vetoed the bills. Then if Congress passed them over his veto the President would not have been to blame, Congress would have been to blame; but the President did not do that. He asked Congress to appropriate about $4,000,000,000 for each fiscal year.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. The gentleman knows that Congress did order these expenditures.

Mr. BLANTON. I know this, that the Congress of the United States has kept within the Budget recommendations for the last three years. Is there anyone here who will dispute that?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am yielding to those who know first. I see your former great Republican leader [Mr. TILSON] here, whom I will ask first. I mean no offense to my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Goss], but he is like my friend from Illinois, the great general [Mr. CHIPERFIELD], who is used to having underling officers come in and salute him in order that they may not sit down before he sits down. He has been trying to call me down before committees lately, when he is only a "youngster" here, and I do not like it. But as I say, I see here your former great Republican leader, than whom you have never had a better one, the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]. Will he deny that the Congress in passing the supply bills for the last three years has kept within the Budget? Oh, no; he will not.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, wait a minute, please. I also see your present great Republican leader, than whom there has never been a greater, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], for whom, in spite of his being across the aisle, all of us have great respect and regard. Will he deny that Congress in passing the supply bills has kept within the Budget estimates for the last three years? Oh, no. He will not deny it. I see the great tariff leader, the gentleman from New York, Doctor CROWTHER. Will he deny that? No; he will not. Now I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss], who does not know all about it.

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman think the Congress was within the Budget when it passed last year the billion-dollar soldiers' bonus and this year the $132,000,000 road bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to reach that subject in a few moments. I have not got that far along yet. Then I will answer the gentleman's question. The President could have cut expenses for 1931 at least a billion dollars and saved that $900,000,000 deficit, but he did not do it.

It is a well-known fact that each and every department of Government is simply honeycombed with useless bureaus. During the last 10 years under Republican Presidents the bureaus have been accumulating by leaps and bounds, and have had the approval of such Presidents. New commissions have been established, and with the approval of such Presidents. New independent offices have been created, and with the approval of said Presidents. And with each new bureau, commission, and independent office an army of high-salaried officials received appointments for long terms of years—salaries that have been scandalous. In the Shipping Board, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, special attorneys in the Department of Justice, and elsewhere officials have been allowed tremendous salaries of $15,000, $20,000, $25,000, $30,000, $35,000, and $50,000. The Federal Reserve Board, the cooperative associations, and other quasi governmental institutions, subsidized by the Federal Treasury, have paid their officials salaries of $25,000, $35,000, $50,000, and $75,000 per year.

When President Hoover had Congress create for him his so-called Reconstruction Finance Corporation, giving it two thousand million dollars of the people's money, I voted against it for several good reasons, but one was that it permitted employees to be paid salaries without limit. And this super-Hoover corporation is now paying enormous salaries to an army of employees, some of whom we will never get off the pay roll. Just why should it pay a salary of $12,000 each to George Cooksey, Mr. Hathaway, and Mr. Watson, and $13,000 to Mr. Leach, and $13,500 to Mr. Marr, and $15,000 each to Mr. Holmberg, Mr. Bogue, Mr. Roberts, Mr. Miller, and Mr. Sims? Just why should it pay $16,000 per annum to Mr. O. H. Wolfe, when Gen. Charles G. Dawes, who has been Vice President of the United States, and Harvey C. Couch, and Jesse H. Jones, and Wilson McCarthy get only $10,000 each under the law? President Hoover can not answer that. Just why should the 11 members of the Interstate Commerce Commission draw $12,000 each per annum, and their Secretary $9,000, and three of their employees $10,000 each, when a United States Senator receives only $10,000? Why is this commission allowed to spend for personal services in Washington the enormous sum of $2,502,530? Why does the Farm Board permit the cooperative associations to pay Mr. E. F. Creekmore, as cotton manager, a salary of $75,000, and to pay 10 of their officials $340,000 per year, or an average salary of $34,000 per year for each of said officials? Let President Hoover answer why he permits this. Is he not the farmers' President? He claims to be in Kansas and Iowa. Why does he not protect such farmers from such leeches?

Not one move has President Hoover made specifically to abolish any bureau. He could have abolished scores of them. All on earth he had to do was to recommend that Congress make no appropriation for any bureau he wanted abolished, and by not appropriating for it such bureau would have died automatically. The quickest and easiest way to kill a bureau is to give it no money. But instead of consolidating and abolishing bureaus, President Hoover has permitted them to expand and to reach out and to grow by leaps and bounds, increasing their personnel, granting promotions, and increasing salaries, until you find one of his Federal agents in almost every community in the United States attempting to dictate to and interfere with the rights of the people. The present Chief of the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce was appointed so last July at a salary of $8,000, and the only connection he ever had with the Department of Commerce prior thereto was back in 1923 when he was a secretary at a salary of $2,200 per annum.

We have four different air services, all duplicating activities, with four overheads that ought to be one. For years I have advocated the consolidation of the War Department, Navy Department, and Marine Corps, and all of our different air services, into one department of national defense, with an army corps, a naval corps, a marine corps, and a unified air corps, which, if properly arranged, would save $100,000,000 each year and add 50 per cent greater efficiency to all such services. Hon. JOE BYRNS, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has had such a measure to consolidate these departments before a committee for months, and Cabinet officers of President Hoover have fought it and placed every obstacle possible in its way and stopped its passage.

And every time it is proposed to abolish a bureau high officials of the administration, aided and abetted by the employees' unions in Washington, will fight every such measure. And such influences are able to have telegrams sent in bunches from every part of the United States on short notice. You will be astonished to know the extent of this propaganda. In the bunch of telegrams I received to-day from employees over the United States against salary reduction there were 14 different telegrams from Pittsburgh, Pa., alone. Here is one from Harry J. Sindelar, 2124 Straubs Lane, Pittsburgh, Pa.; another from James Ceminar, 1216 Ingham Street; another from W. J. Gunst; another from H. Hill; another from Angelo A. Masellaro, of 44 Gist Street; another from George Metcalf, of 164 Warrington Street; another from J. M. Doloughty, of Sixth and May; another from W. J. Jones, of 28 Sylvania Avenue; another from I. S. Cook; another from Edward Blair; another from H. E. Striepeke, 22 Lawson Avenue; another from C. Yeager, of 1122 Brabec Street; another from B. J. Ruffing, 156 Fairview Avenue; and another from Ida W. Hollaran, president Women's Auxiliary, National Federation of Post Office Clerks, all of the above from Pittsburgh, Pa., received by me to-day, urging that no salaries be cut, and with the others I have received to-day from other parts of the United States, it becomes pretty strong propaganda. And this is what the President and other officials must be confronted with every time an attempt is made to retrench. The bureau chiefs and department heads and Government employees affected who would lose jobs by retrenchment protest and no retrenchment is made.

President Hoover can not turn them down, and gives them pretty nearly what they want. The President is helpless; he can not do things himself. If he were a Theodore Roosevelt, he would take proper steps to balance the Budget. He would have decision. He would be a man of action. He would know how to do things, what things to do, and when to do them, and nothing could stop him.

If he were a Calvin Coolidge, he would help the situation. If he were a Grover Cleveland, he would help tremendously. [Applause.] If he were an Andrew Jackson, he would have abolished scores of bureaus long ago. He would tell them exactly what he wanted them to do, and they would do it. And last but not least, if he were a Woodrow Wilson, he would have gotten us out of this terrible situation long ago.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. How about Speaker GARNER?

Mr. BLANTON. You are going to find that no Garner Budget estimate ever will come in here above the receipts of the Government.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. TABER. When did Woodrow Wilson ever tell Congress that they must not spend more than so much money?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, if the gentleman does not know that we were then in a World War, I will not enlighten him.

Did you know that President Wilson was a martyr to the war the same as the men who did not come back from France? I saw him come in here one day and take his stand behind that Clerk's desk and begin speaking in a conversational tone. The Democrats, every one of them on this side of the aisle, gave him applause. Not a Republican on the other side of the aisle even clapped or made any demonstration whatever for him. He began to tell you about the problems that beset the Government and about his purposes and plans, and the first thing you knew he had such an influence over you fellows that you beat us Democrats rising. All of us rose together spontaneously. It was a wonderful spontaneity that pervaded this Chamber, and all of you Republicans arose and clapped him for 10 minutes. That answers the gentleman. [Applause.] That was the influence he had over this Congress and over the Nation that successfully won a World War and saved a civilization not merely for our country but for the whole world and stopped the domination of a German Kaiser.

Mr. TABER. But that was not keeping down expenses.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, in war we do not expect expenses to be kept down. But I want to say that after the war you had your smelling committees. You had your Graham, of Illinois, smelling committee, that spent hundreds of thousands of dollars. They could not find a single thing that threw discredit or dishonor upon Woodrow Wilson or his administration.

You had your big Joe Walsh committee, a smelling committee that went out in a big Pullman train and lived a month or more in it on the Pacific coast at Government expense smelling; and they came back and could not report a thing that showed dishonor to the President Wilson's administration.

Mr. PARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. PARKS. Please jump on the administration that succeeded President Wilson.

Mr. BLANTON. That is so familiar to all of us that I am afraid it might cause a revolution in the country if I mentioned it.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman who has been defending the people I have been prosecuting before the Military Affairs Committee this morning.

Mr. GOSS. I hope the great dry leader before he sits down will tell us about the billion dollar bonus bill and the $132,000,000 road bill that he was going to get to in his speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to get to it now.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; certainly, to my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Be careful now; they are afraid that you will create a depression. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the gentleman from Connecticut, who has been a State senator, and who during the war served as a private, should be so persistent in condemning the action of Congress in paying a just debt to the brave ex-service men who fought in the trenches of France for $1.25 per day. He has twice mentioned the "billion dollar bonus bill." While our men in France were fighting in the trenches, knee-deep in mud, cootie infested, 24 hours out of the 24 sometimes, and receiving only $1.25 per day, with most of that taken out for insurance and dependents, their brothers at home, who had been exempted from the draft to work, were many of them in the shipyards of New England receiving as high as $30 per day, surrounded by all comforts and conveniences, and in perfect safety.

This so-called bonus was merely an allowance of an extra $1.25 per day that our Government finally decided was due these men who wore the uniform, but instead of paying it in cash to them it gave them a note due in 1945. Just why was this $1.25 per day not paid to these men in cash when the war was over? Not many can answer that. It was justly due them. The Government paid everybody else in cash. But it gave these men a note. And last year this Congress made the Government grant these men a loan of half of the amount. And they are now entitled to the other half. Can any Member who voted to give the land banks the extra $125,000,000, and who voted to give President Hoover's Reconstruction Finance Corporation the $2,000,000,000, without the quiver of an eyelid, now refuse to pay these men who carried our flag to victory the remaining half of their $1.25 per day that was due them on November 11, 1918, when the war closed?

Now, with reference to the $132,000,000, that was merely a proposed loan from the Government to our 48 States, to be used in this depression in constructing public highways and thus giving jobs to heads of families without jobs.

But let me get back to my subject I was discussing. When the President notified me by wire, like he did the rest of you Members, that he had granted a moratorium to Germany and to the rest of the foreign countries who owed us $250,000,000 and wanted us to ratify it when we met, I told him I could not ratify it; and I did not vote with the gentlemen who approved it. I thought we had done enough for Germany and for the European countries. I did not vote with you; I voted against it.

When the President came in and asked for $125,000,000 extra for the land banks I did not go with you; I knew that the farmers would be turned out of their farms; I knew at that time that the day would come when there would be 60,000 farmers lose their farms in one day in Mississippi, like the press reported the other day; I did not vote for it; I voted against it. I knew it was just to help a few land bankers and not the people.

The President said that he did not want this road-construction money spent; and you have stopped that bill; and the President stands with you gentlemen over there in not wanting to pay the soldier boys their debt of honor.

Mr. TABER. How did that get to be a debt of honor?

Mr. BLANTON. I tried to make that plain. When the President came in with his $2,000,000,000 program I could not go along with him, for the reasons already stated.

Mr. GASQUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GASQUE. Will the gentleman tell us to which political party those $15,000 men he has mentioned belong?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know, but I think the President knew he had to provide some jobs for some high-salaried fellows before he ever brought that $2,000,000,000 bill to Congress. I think their salaries had been arranged and I think the men had been picked out when the bill was brought in.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a minute.

Mr. TABER. Right on that point, with reference to one of those men.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want the gentleman to take up my time by asking questions that are not relevant to my argument.

Mr. TABER. It is decidedly relevant.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry I can not yield. The gentleman was not here when some of the things I have been talking about came up and I would rather talk to others who are familiar with the things I have been talking about.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 20 additional minutes.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. My understanding was that the salaries paid by the farm cooperatives were fixed on the average earnings of the farmers.

Mr. BLANTON. My friend from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] showed that it takes about 2,000 farmers working a whole year in some places to make the $75,000 salary of Mr. Creekmore. I have seen little girls and women sitting on plows out in the hot sun plowing, and I have seen them drag big cotton sacks back and forth, little children that ought to be somewhere else than in a cotton field, and 2,000 of them, with their families, have to work a year to pay a salary like that received by this man Creekmore. It is so disgusting to me that I would like to whip him out of office, if I could.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. The gentleman's party is in control of this House. Why does not your party bring in legislation to remedy these conditions?

Mr. BLANTON. We are not in control of the Congress.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Who is?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we are in control of the House only by five votes, but not in control of Congress.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Then who is?

Mr. BLANTON. We have elected a Speaker and organized the House, but what is a majority of four or five Members in just one body? You have a Republican Senate that can tear anything on earth we send over there to pieces, and you have a Republican President in the White House.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. The gentleman is mistaken. We have a number of insurgents in the Senate that will support any kind of legislation that you folks send over there.

Mr. BLANTON. To be vetoed by your President, if it is good. Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to several documents here, and in order to save time I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by putting in my speech various excerpts from certain documents.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what does the gentleman want to include in his remarks?

Mr. BLANTON. Certain excerpts from various documents which I would otherwise read, but I want my time to answer the questions of the gentlemen.

Mr. GOSS. Is this in connection with the gentleman's dry speech?

Mr. BLANTON. It is in connection with everything I am going to say. Some of it is going to be dry and some of it is going to be wet. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say this for my friend here [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL of Illinois]. He is one of the leaders of the wets in the House.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. I will agree with the wet part of that.

Mr. BLANTON. He is an awfully good scout personally in spite of that. All of us like him. I have liked him in spite of the fact that he is the only ex-distiller in the House of Representatives. He is as wet as can be, but he is a good scout, and I hate to see a man like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL] defeated. He was one of the coauthors of your beer bill that you are trying to have signed up, and yet the wet State of Illinois yesterday defeated a man like this.

Mr. SWEENEY. But not with a dry.

Mr. BLANTON. His successor could not be wetter. Why, take our friend CHINDBLOM from Illinois, a good scout, all of us like him on both sides of the aisle; but CHINDBLOM has been a dry all the time, and the other day you beer fellows persuaded him to vote wet, and then you beat him yesterday in wet Illinois. Are you not ashamed of yourselves? Now, that is the wet part of my speech. [Laughter and applause.] That ought to satisfy you beer fellows. I am going to tell you now what you are going to do. You are going to keep on until you cause some of the best men on both sides of this aisle to be kept at home just for nothing. Why do you not withdraw that beer petition and throw it in the wastebasket? It is useless and a mere gesture.

I think that it is the duty of a Member to vote the dictates of his own conscience. [Applause.] If it does not lead him in accordance with the wishes of his people, let his people put him out and get somebody who holds views like their own. This is my belief, and this is what I am going to do as long as I am in Congress. I am going to vote just exactly as I believe to be right, whether I have 10 men with me or the whole House with me. The people I represent know what I stand for, and that is the reason they give me a majority of 50,000 sometimes when I run for office. [Applause.] Even the wets vote for me, because they know they can always depend on my being on the right side of pretty nearly every question. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. I like my dry friend, but I hope he will change his mind and sign the petition so that the wets will have a chance to vote for him before he comes back.

Mr. BLANTON. I am now going to give my friend something to ponder over. You talk about reducing expenses, and the President says he wants to reduce them, and I have noticed how he has reduced them. It is all talk. Have you ever been down to this Commerce Building? That is a standing exhibition of the saturnalia of extravagance that has been going on in Washington under Republican rule during the last few years. Any sane American who will go down there and look through that building and remember that the land upon which it stands is worth $30,000,000 and remember that the buildings that were torn down to make way for it were worth several million dollars more, lots of them being very fine buildings, and then remember that in this terrible time your President has spent $17,500,000 to build that great structure, with a great auditorium that seats 1,000 people, and with no use for it, and with that great aquarium there, and you read the other day in the press here that in the fish department they have tamed and educated 320 trout so that they will bite any kind of a hook, and gotten them full grown and sent them up to the Rapidan tamed and taught, so that the President can catch them when he gets there. [Laughter.] That great fish exhibition in Washington will convince any sane man about the President's economy.

Mr. JONES. May I suggest to the gentleman with reference to his conversation with the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from New York had better let that Member speak for himself?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; that will not appear in my remarks.

Mr. PARKS. The gentleman might suggest that during all of this talk about economy, while it was going on they bought 11 Pierce-Arrow cars for the White House.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not quite correct, and the gentleman will not get me to make a statement that is not fair. They were exchanged, old for new. I suppose there is a good deal of credit goes with that, for the automobile companies want the White House to use their cars. I want to be fair about these things.

Mr. PARKS. Does not the gentleman think that 11 were too many?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, it would be too many for the gentleman or myself. We would get along with one.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. The gentleman says he wants to be fair. Why not admit that the appropriation for the Commerce Building was made by the Congress of the United States and not by the President?

Mr. BLANTON. It was made at his suggestion. He was the man that put it over.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Oh, no, no.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Texas did not complete the historical record of the fish that he mentioned. The tragedy of it was that they were supposed to be carried to the Rapidan and put in the President's creek, but they were actually put in the wrong creek. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, they will catch them if it takes 15,000 men from the Department of Commerce, and they will be caught and put back in the proper creek at Rapidan, where the President spent $2,000 of public money to improve, and the fish will bite for him when the time comes.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I want to let you know something about the hard work that this subcommittee has done in the preparation of this bill. I want to refer to the splendid work of my good friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], and my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY], and my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GRANFIELD], and others. They have done hard, tedious, grinding work, the kind that sometimes puts men in the hospital. They have sat across the table from these bureau chiefs and made them show the reasons for the big sums of money that they have been asking for. We all know the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], one of the best parliamentarians in the House, and one of the ablest Members of Congress. He is most valuable. I take my hat off to him for doing the splendid service that he has performed.

I want you to know that there has not been harder work, more courageous work, done in this House than has been done by this subcommittee. It takes courage to turn these bureau chiefs down when they come in and ask for an increase for their plans—where they ask for $600,000 extra to be turned over to Donovan, to be distributed for unemployment in Washington. We called attention to the fact that this community chest had already assessed the Government employees three days' pay for that community chest—assessed them, and it was an assessment, and they had to pay it. They raised $2,200,000. As I say, they wanted $600,000 extra put in the hands of Donovan. We asked them who was going to handle it, we asked how many men and women were going to distribute it, and what were the salaries paid. They said, practically, "None of your business; we won't tell you. It is confidential." Then when we got to digging around and digging up a $5,000 person here and a $10,000 person there and a $3,500 woman there, we said, "If you don't come clean and give us all the salary drawers we won't give the $600,000 extra to you," and they would not do it, and our committee had courage enough to stand up and say that they should not have it.

Let me tell you something about the increase in salaries since 1923. I have a short resolution that I have introduced to repeal the classification act that I shall put in in connection with my remarks. Before the classification act was passed, I want to show you what some of the salaries were and how the classification act changed them, and you will see that you will have to repeal that act. Let us take the ones in this bill. We had them put in here. I want you to get these hearings and read from page 27 on down. The following is my resolution I referred to above:

[House Joint Resolution No. 344. In the House of Representatives, March 19, 1932, Seventy-second Congress, first session]

Mr. BLANTON introduced the following joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered to be printed:

Joint resolution to repeal the classification act of 1923, and amendments thereto, and provide that the rates of compensation for positions in the United States Government and in the municipal government of the District of Columbia shall be the rates in force prior to the enactment of such act; to fix the maximum of any statutory salary at $7,500 per annum, and to repeal Public, No. 506, Seventieth Congress

Whereas in the legislative branch of the Government there are 2 employees drawing $15,000 per annum, 538 drawing $10,000, 1 drawing $9,000, 7 drawing $8,000, 9 drawing $7,500, 5 drawing $7,000, 1 drawing $6,500, 8 drawing $6,000, 3 drawing $5,600, 6 drawing $5,400, 3 drawing $5,200, 16 drawing $5,000, 7 drawing $4,800, 11 drawing $4,600, 7 drawing $4,400, 10 drawing $4,200, 2 drawing $4,000, 104 drawing $3,900, 15 drawing $3,800, 5 drawing $3,700, 46 drawing $3,600, 13 drawing $3,500, 23 drawing $3,400, 35 drawing $3,300, 70 drawing $3,200, 29 drawing $3,100, 34 drawing $3,000, 12 drawing $2,900, 49 drawing $2,800, 43 drawing $2,700, 55 drawing $2,600, 917 drawing $2,500, 121 drawing $2,400, 47 drawing $2,300, 141 drawing $2,200, 4,442 drawing $2,100, and 2,241 other employees drawing annual salaries from $1,000 to $2,000; and

Whereas in the civil and military branches of the Government there are 32 employees drawing $15,000 and over per annum, 41 drawing $12,000, 6 drawing $11,000, 134 drawing $10,000, 138 drawing $9,000, 40 drawing $8,500, 216 drawing $8,000, 150 drawing $7,500, 244 drawing $7,000, 309 drawing $6,500, 1,943 drawing $6,000, 442 drawing $5,800, 1,324 drawing $5,600, 314 drawing $5,400, 510 drawing $5,200, 1,602 drawing $5,000, 2,034 drawing $4,800, 2,605 drawing $4,600, 1,714 drawing $4,400, 1,535 drawing $4,200, 154 drawing $4,100, 2,371 drawing $4,000, 1,489 drawing $3,900, 2,954 drawing $3,800, 1,602 drawing $3,700, 3,196 drawing $3,600, 2,105 drawing $3,500, 2,019 drawing $3,400, 2,749 drawing $3,300, 4,613 drawing $3,200, 2,011 drawing $3,100, 4,191 drawing $3,000, 4,263 drawing $2,900, 9,425 drawing $2,800, 8,177 drawing $2,700, 15,567 drawing $2,600, 49,291 drawing $2,500; 23,293 drawing $2,400, 26,268 drawing $2,300, 16,384 drawing $2,200, 118,759 drawing $2,100, 25,267 drawing $2,000, and 681,892 other employees drawing annual salaries below $2,000; and

Whereas there are numerous efficient and worthy employees drawing salaries below $2,200 who have zealously worked for the Government for years, who have not had a raise in salary for 10 years, the appropriations designed to relieve them having been used in giving preferential classification and ratings to pet heads of units, and for Congress to regain its necessary control over the continual raising of salaries it is necessary to repeal the classification act, stop making lump-sum appropriations, and return to specific appropriations for all branches and departments of government: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the rates of compensation for positions to which, prior to the effective date of this act, the provisions of the classification act of 1923, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, ch. 13), applied, shall be the rates in force, on the day preceding the effective date of the classification act of 1923, for positions involving the same or substantially similar duties.

SEC. 2. The rates of compensation for civilian or military positions, including Senators, Representatives, and all other employees in the legislative branch of the service, in the United States Government or in the municipal government of the District of Columbia to which, prior to the effective date of this act, the provisions of the classification act of 1923, as amended did not apply, shall be the rates in force on the day preceding the effective date of the classification act of 1923 for positions involving the same or substantially similar duties.

SEC. 3. This act shall not be construed to reduce the rates of compensation for positions for which the rates of compensation on the day preceding the effective date of this act do not exceed an annual rate of compensation of $2,200, so that all existing salaries of not more than $2,200 per annum shall not be affected by this act.

SEC. 4. This act shall not apply to—

(a) The compensation of any officer of the United States whose compensation may not, under the Constitution, be diminished during the term for which he was elected or during his continuance in office; or

(b) Compensation paid under the terms of any contract to which the United States is a party.

SEC. 5. As used in this act, the term "compensation" means any salary, wage, fee, allowance, or other emolument paid for service in a position.

SEC. 6. The classification act of 1923, as amended, is repealed.

SEC. 7. That Public, No. 506, Seventieth Congress, known as the "disabled emergency officers' retirement act," be, and the same likewise is, hereby in all things repealed.

SEC. 8. This act shall be known as the "back to normalcy act," and after its passage the maximum of any statutory salary paid by the Government shall not exceed $7,500 per annum, and hereafter no quasi-governmental institution supervised by and receiving benefits from the Government shall pay any of its officers or employees a salary exceeding $7,500 per annum.

SEC. 9. This act shall take effect on the first day of the month succeeding 30 days after its final passage.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me show how the classification act in 1923 increased salaries. The three commissioners here up to that act drew $5,000 each; now they draw $9,000 each a year at the present time. They got a raise of $4,000 a year each, right on the turn of a pen. Here is Daniel E. Garges, the secretary. He used to get $2,700 a year. Overnight, by passing that bill, you gave him $5,600 a year—more than double what he was getting. Here is one of the purchasing agents, M. C. Hargrove. He used to get $3,000 a year, and by passing that act you gave him $5,400 a year. Here is J. W. Oehmann, an inspector of buildings. He was getting $3,000 a year, and by passing the classification act you gave him $5,800 a year. Here is J. B. Daly, an engineer computer, who was getting $1,800 a year, and by passing the classification act you gave him $3,400 a year. Here is Mr. Richards, the tax assessor. He got $3,500 a year for years, and by passing the classification act they gave him $7,500, double what he received before. Here is his deputy, whose salary was doubled. He now gets $5,600 a year, or $1,600 more than the principal used to get before the classification act was passed. Here is Mr. Towers, the collector of taxes down there. He does not do much, Mr. Richards does nearly all of his work for him. He got $4,000, but the classification act gave him $6,000. Here is Donovan, the man who was going to disburse that extra $600,000 with his high-paid corps. Before the classification act was passed he got $4,000, and now he gets $9,000.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Why did not the gentleman stop this when we were passing it?

Mr. BLANTON. You could not stop it. I have seen things brought in here where you could not change the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i." My friend knows that I have always worked for economy. For instance, here the other day I called attention to the fact that I was expecting a number of school children from my district this year to come to Washington to the Bicentennial and to look at the Nation's Capital. Let me refer now to General Patrick, the head of the Utilities Commission, a retired general, if you please, who is drawing $6,000 as retired pay and at the same time getting $7,500 a year as chairman of the Utilities Commission, and who at the same time has an automobile furnished him free, with a chauffeur to drive it.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. I was very much struck by that table which the subcommittee placed in the hearings. Will not the gentleman extend his remarks by putting in the entire table?

Mr. BLANTON. I have permission to do that, and I shall put it in the RECORD at the gentleman's request. The following is the table:

NAMES AND POSITIONS OF EMPLOYEES RECEIVING OVER $2,500 AND SALARIES PRIOR TO RECLASSIFICATION ACT

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in that connection I want to ask that the committee have Mr. Donovan prepare and submit a table in the hearing showing the names of all employees of the District government who now receive over $2,500 per annum, showing what salaries they drew prior to the reclassification act, under what names their positions then were designated, and also showing those who have come into new positions, who are now drawing over $2,500, and showing what their predecessors drew prior to the reclassification act.

I am making a study of that with respect to all the departments of the Government, and that has been done in regard to the other departments. I would like to have that included in the hearing on the District bill.

Mr. CANNON. That data is being compiled for all the departments, and we will be glad if the auditor could give us that information in regard to the District government.

Mr. DONOVAN. We will prepare such information and insert it in the record.

NOTE.—The foregoing statement does not include supervisory officers and teachers n the public schools, officers and members of the Metropolitan police force, and officers and members of the fire department, all of whom are paid under separate salary acts, and not under the provisions of the classification act of 1923, as amended.

Material increases in salaries have been made to these several employees, but as the question of Representative Blanton was understood to call for information solely with respect to employees whose positions were allocated under the classification act, the several employees mentioned in the foregoing paragraph were not included

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. I noticed when the reclassification act was up——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I ask the gentleman please not to divert me now. General Patrick, besides his $7,500 salary and his $6,000 retired pay and having an automobile furnished him and a $2,100-a-year man to drive it, can buy all of his supplies from the Government stores, including coal for his family, everything they use, food and clothing, and all he gets for himself and family, free dentist and doctor bills and free surgeon bills and free hospital treatment as long as he lives. He was going to put all of the 3,000 ex-soldiers who are driving taxicabs here and making a living out of the business to be run out by the monopolies here by requiring them to equip their cabs with meters. They could not make a living with a meter.

I called attention to this, and somebody got up in arms, and the chairman of our committee introduced a resolution and passed it unanimously here telling General Patrick not to do it, and Patrick at first said that he would not do it. Then the papers got after him, stating that he better assert himself and should not let Congress take away his prerogatives, and then in effect he said, "To hell with the House of Representatives, that he was running the Public Utilities Commission." He went on with his order, nevertheless, and is going to put his meter order into effect in a short time, and instead of paying 20 cents to go to their homes all the people of Washington will be paying 75 cents and a dollar and a dollar and a half, and every taxicab will be in the hands of the Parmlee Co., the Yellow Co., that has run every independent taxicab out of business in all of the big cities of the United States. They will take charge.

Do you know what I am going to do if we do not stop this meter order? I got the subcommittee to put an amendment on the bill to stop his salary, but when the whole committee got hold of it one of our friends objected to it and they took it out. I tell you what I am going to do. I am going to put a notice in every newspaper in my district, and I am going to say, "Children, do not you come to Washington this summer, because when you get to the Union Station you will have to take a Parmlee cab and be charged a dollar and a half to go to your hotel, and when you get to your hotel you will be robbed, for they will charge you three prices; and when you start out to look around the town you will have to hire a monopoly cab and get into it because General Patrick lets it have the absolute right to the curbs in the city of Washington." I will not let them be robbed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman 20 minutes additional.

Mr. BLANTON. I know it is hard on the Chair, but I will ask the Chair to be patient with me, for I have something that I want to get off my system that has been on it for a long time.

I am going to tell my school children to stay at home until we stop this taxi and other monopolies here. I am going to say now for the RECORD that goes out to every part of the United States, "American people, I advise you to stay away from Washington this year, because if you do come here you are going to be robbed." We can not help it; we Congressmen are helpless. It takes months and months to get a legislative bill through the House and Senate and signed by the President. We can not get one passed hurriedly. When we get an amendment to stop it, somebody comes in and takes it out and it can not be passed.

I hope to God the American people will stay away from Washington this year. They ought not to come. They are going to be robbed when they get here. I am going to tell the school children, "You are going to be robbed by General Patrick, so do not come until we stop these monopolies."

Do you know why they took that out? They remembered that the other day I got but 6 votes for my proposed amendment against William Wolff Smith's salary. That was just a skirmish on that proposition. We are yet going to take William Wolff Smith off the pay roll. [Applause.] You watch and see. We began a hearing yesterday on my resolution, No. 355. I showed the other day how he was in the service only 13 days before the war closed; that he was examined just the day before the 13 days started and there was not a thing on earth the matter with him except he was defective. [Applause.] He had three teeth out, and a hernia, and bronchitis, laryngitis, pharyngitis, and various other things. They turned him down.

Mr. PARSONS. Did he have any psychoneurosis?

Mr. BLANTON. They got him in 13 days before the war ended, and he finally got to be retired as an officer. He was in the Sanitary Corps. In 1923 he got in the bureau at $4,000 as special agent. Seventeen days afterwards he was promoted to be general counsel, and he did not know any more about trying lawsuits than a janitor does. He was made general counsel immediately. When the Welch Act was passed, his salary was raised immediately to $9,000; and when the emergency officers' retirement act was passed, he under it gets $187.50 per month additional, and I want to say to you that there were not three men in the House who voted for it understood it or knew what was going to happen; they were misled; they voted for it under a misapprehension of facts.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. I think the gentleman has made just a little misstatement there; I think they promised to vote for it, and in order to live up to their promise they voted for it although they knew it was wrong.

Mr. BLANTON. It was the same influence that got that through that kept every Washington paper yesterday evening from making any mention whatever of the hearing before the committee yesterday. We had a big hearing. General Hines was there, and he said in his judgment there were 2,000 men on the retired list who ought to be off, who ought not to have their retired pay. Doctor Smith, who is drawing a salary of $5,000 from the Government, testified that one retired officer was retired for social inaptitude. [Laughter.] He was asked what that was, and he said that the fellow claimed that he could not carry on a parlor conversation in society. [Laughter.] Such a man was retired! The doctor said he knew of lots of them who ought to be taken off the list.

The influence of this big Army and Navy Club is great. Big Army officers from the War Department were there, and big naval officers from the Navy Department were there, and officers from the State Department, and this department and that department, and the doctors, and the emergency officers were all there. When the hearing closed and the newspaper boys walked out and wrote their articles, the big headman came and said, "You can not put that in." Look at the papers of yesterday evening and not a word about the hearing will be found, not one word.

I want to commend the United States Daily. It had the courage this morning to print all about that hearing. I can recommend it. It prints the news. It is one newspaper in Washington that prints the news, and a business man away from Washington can read the United States Daily and depend upon getting what happens without any color.

But before that fellow William Wolff Smith got his retired pay, over two years and a half elapsed, and he was turned down by five different boards.

Finally, after two years and a half, he got his retired pay. Then when we shook him up last year, General Hines went through his department and found out what existed. He took 64 lawyers away from him and gave them to Mr. Roberts, whom he made solicitor general, and now this William Wolff Smith has one little insurance office down there, but still he allows him his $9,000 a year. He is going to continue to draw it, and there is but one way to keep it away from him, and that is to take him off the pay roll. I proposed to take him off the other day, and I got just six votes. I got a telegram from New York the next morning, and it said, "If you will send me the names of the 70 men who voted against your amendment, if there are any of them from New York, before God I will try to keep them from being again elected." Of course, I did not pay any attention to that. I would not have sent it if I had the names, because I will never do one of my colleagues an injury. They have the right to vote as they please. That was just a skirmish the other day. When this committee gets through with its hearings, you are going to find something done about William Wolff Smith.

When I appeared before that committee, one friend tried to hamstring me before I got started. My friend, General CHIPERFIELD, began to say, "Mr. Chairman, I object to Mr. BLANTON conducting this hearing." Why was he objecting? When I would offer some evidence he said, "I object to this evidence going in." I said, "Gentlemen, whom does General CHIPERFIELD represent here? Whom are you trying to cover up? Whom are you trying to shield?" But the committee let me go ahead. Then my good friend Lieutenant Colonel Goss this morning tried to hamper me, and I had to take him down a bit before I could get started. Then General Hines came in and said the way to do this is to let him appoint a new board of doctors and let them review all of these cases. But, gentlemen, we are not going to let any more doctors make a review; we are going to handle these questions ourselves.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I do not care about myself, because I do not think the gentleman is trying to hurt me or that he could hurt me.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to put in the RECORD anything that will hurt anybody. But I am going to discuss facts.

Mr. GOSS. But I want to say in fairness to General CHIPERFIELD's inquiry, that all he sought to keep out of the public hearings was under section 30.

Mr. BLANTON. He wanted to keep "BLANTON" out of the hearing it was very evident.

Mr. GOSS. All he wanted to keep out of the public hearings were confidential files under section 30 of the veterans' act.

Mr. BLANTON. Was the gentleman there yesterday?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. When he objected to my having anything to do with the hearings?

Mr. GOSS. Yes. He did not object to that. He was objecting to making public private information in the files of the bureau. He was willing to receive that information in the committee. The members of the Military Affairs Committee, as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK], who is now present, will bear me out when I say Mr. CHIPERFIELD said:

Bring them in before the committee in private session, but we are going to protect the confidential information on file in the bureau.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will not bother me any more, I will forgive him for what he has done in the past.

Mr. GOSS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, I, of course, can not speak for the committee, but I feel safe in saying it will give the gentleman a fair deal. As a member of the Military Affairs Committee, may I further add that there will be no private sessions, so far as I am concerned. I shall insist that such hearings be open and aboveboard. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. That was my idea.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The statement made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GOSS] is absolutely true. I do not think the Military Affairs Committee should be turned over as a publicity bureau for any man in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I did not mean it for that. I will say this, that I am not going to say anything to hurt my friend from New York, because he is a good scout; he is a little wrong on this, but there are enough on the committee to let me go ahead without his vote. He is a good fellow nevertheless.

You are going to have to repeal that act to reach these parasites and start over again. General Hines admits there are 2,000 of them, but I think there are about 3,500 of them.

When the war-risk insurance act was passed, the committee brought in a bill starting with $17,500 that they were going to pay the widow of a general, and then they graduated it down to about $3,500 for the widow of a private. When those of us who look after the interests of the common people took the matter up, do you know what we did from the floor here, led by Eugene Black, of Texas? We put in a provision that said when a private gave his life to his country, it was of just as great value as the life of a general, and we made these $10,000 war-risk insurance policies identical for the private and the officer, and this is what ought to be done with respect to compensation.

I have in mind two boys who are brothers. One got to be an officer. The private went to France and had an arm shot off. The officer was in one of the swivel-chair jobs, and the officer is now retired on big pay per month for a presumptive disability, and gets three times as much as the private who has his arm shot off. Is this right? You have got to change it. You have got to repeal that act, and General Hines at first was in favor of it. I do not know what has changed him in the last day or so. I do not know whether it is the Army and Navy Club or not, the one that gets after Mr. Hoover once in a while. This Army and Navy lobby is no respecter of persons. It is the most powerful and gigantic machine lobby that exists in Washington. It has tried to influence more Congressmen than all the other pernicious lobbies put together, in my judgment. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is this the same lobby that attacked our colleague, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], and accused him, in effect, of treason last year with respect to the Navy appropriation bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. There was a bill brought in here once affecting the Navy and the Army. It had various provisions in it objected to by our former distinguished colleague from Mississippi, Tom Sisson. He was very active, and, like our friend COLLINS, was very courageous, and he would fight it a while, and then I would fight it a while, and that evening we had a delegation of Army and Navy men call on us, and they told Tom he would not come back to Congress, and they told me I would not come back. I told them to go to h——. Tom began to apologize, and Tom did not come back, but I went down there and fought them in my district, and I did come back.

They have no right to try to intimidate Members of Congress. I am for them when they are right. I am not afraid to fight against what they want when they are wrong, whether I come back or not.

In conclusion, I want to say that I hope you will back up CLARENCE CANNON and our friend HOLADAY, of Illinois, on this bill. They have saved you lots of money. They have done right by the District. Every time there was a doubt about any matter, they gave the District the benefit of the doubt; and if you will back them up, you will have a good District bill. I appreciate the work they have done, and I am sure you do. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes.

The gentleman who has just taken his seat brought up the subject of taxicabs here in the city, and I think this may be an appropriate time for me to make a little explanation with reference to that matter.

A year or so ago a taxicab war developed in the city of Washington, and as a result of that war and as a result of other companies starting in, taxicab fares were reduced to 20 cents within the first zone, which takes in, roughly, the territory which was formerly the old city. Under the 20-cent fare two or three other companies commenced operations, companies that would buy cars and rent them to young men at about $4 a day. In addition to this, many young men bought their own cars, so that we had, perhaps, 3,000 or more taxicabs operating on the streets of Washington and a taxicab fare lower, probably, than that enjoyed by any other city.

The low taxicab rates interfered with the business of the street-railway companies. It also interfered with the business of the two old companies which formerly had enjoyed a monopoly. I have taken this time because the action of General Patrick in this matter appears to me to be an example of a disregard of public interest such as we seldom see exhibited by a public official.

General Patrick, before our committee, admitted that he started the investigation himself; that the owner of one of the taxicab companies and a man who sold taxicabs complained to him; also there had been complaints from some that had been overcharged; but, in the main, General Patrick placed upon himself the responsibility of commencing the investigation; and as a result of an investigation covering only a few days, and in which they employed one man to go around and check up on one taxicab, and with perhaps some other information, he issued an order of the Public Utilities Commission, which in effect, in addition to requiring all taxicabs to be equipped with meters, will result in at least doubling the taxicab rates in this city and in throwing 700 young men, a great many of them ex-service men, out of employment.

The only people who will benefit as the result of that order are the two taxicab companies which entered into an agreement between themselves, so that they would have a monopoly of the business. As the gentleman from Texas has said, here is the Washington bicentennial celebration coming on, when it is expected that we will have more visitors in Washington than ever before. Some business interests of the city of Washington, seeing that this great crowd of visitors are to come here, hope to make a lot of money if this taxicab rule is enforced.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am interested in trying to secure information as to the number of people injured by taxicabs, and the number of persons so injured who are unable to recover, because the owner of the cab has no property. I am not interested in the meter question.

Mr. HOLADAY. Our investigation of that matter indicated that there were no more people, in proportion to the number of passengers carried, injured when they were riding at a fare of 20 cents than when they had to pay 60 or 75 cents. And further, that they had no more trouble in collecting damages in case of an injury than they have always had. They have always had trouble and, I suppose, always will.

The subcommittee felt that General Patrick had been absolutely derelict in his duties as a public servant, that he had not taken into consideration the rights of the public, that he had considered only the owners of two of the taxicab companies; and as an excuse for the order he said that one taxicab owner, one of the big ones, had said that they were having trouble in paying for their cabs.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is there no authority of law or can not any law be enacted that would control the action of General Patrick, or is he given carte blanche?

Mr. HOLADAY. Without further legislation, I think that he has authority to do as he pleases, unless it could be shown that he had entered the order through corrupt motives or to serve some corrupt purpose, and that, of course, no one asserts.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman admit that it is not possible for the District of Columbia Committee to bring in legislation that would review General Patrick's actions and compel some other action?

Mr. HOLADAY. I think the legislative committee has absolute authority to bring in such legislation, and it is my understanding that they are now preparing such legislation.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman knows that legislation was passed two years ago placing authority to regulate public utilities in the hands of the Public Utilities Commission; and so long as that law is on the statute books, is it not a fact that there is nothing we can do about it?

Mr. HOLADAY. I do not think there is anything we can do on an appropriation bill with reference to a change of the law, and General Patrick is acting under the authority that Congress gave him.

Mrs. NORTON. Does the gentleman believe that we can do anything until that law is repealed? Is not it a fact that as long as that law remains on the statute books we are powerless?

Mr. HOLADAY. I think so.

Mrs. NORTON. Another thing, I have thought that we might issue an order or resolution through Congress delaying this meter order for another year, and in the meantime we could consider the whole situation. I think the main thing we want to avoid is throwing men out of employment.

Mr. HOLADAY. That is true; there are two things we want to avoid—the one which the lady mentions and the other the protection of the public in the taxicab rate.

Mrs. NORTON. If we take the power out of the hands of the commission, Congress must assume the responsibility?

Mr. HOLADAY. I think that is so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment? This is rather an important matter.

Mr. HOLADAY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If it can be reached by joint resolution so that the public may be protected, particularly during this bicentennial year, until the Congress can be more fully informed and have a better opportunity to work out the situation, it occurs to me that if the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] will induce her committee to bring in a joint resolution requesting General Patrick to take no action on this matter pending further investigation, certainly for the period of this year, there will be no difficulty in passing it through this body and the other body of Congress, and I think that action is fully justified by the facts presented here this afternoon.

Mr. HOLADAY. I hope that will be done.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. It seems to me that all the Congress would have to do would be to repeal that part of the law giving the Public Utilities Commission the right to regulate the rates charged by taxi cabs.

Mr. HOLADAY. The chairman of our subcommittee is preparing an amendment to be offered to this bill which, it is hoped, will take care of the proposition temporarily until the legislative committee can act upon it, because there is evident intention upon the part of General Patrick and two or three men in whose interest this order will become effective to rush the thing into effect, if possible.

Mr. MOUSER. The only jurisdiction that the commission has to regulate rates is what is given them by the law.

Mr. HOLADAY. That is right.

Mr. MOUSER. If you take away that jurisdiction, then they can not make such an arbitrary order as has been made.

Mr. HOLADAY. That is the permanent remedy, I think.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. Permit me to ask the gentleman from Ohio upon whom he would place the responsibility, then, if he takes away the power from the commission. Who is going to assume that responsibility?

Mr. MOUSER. I think the cabs could have the right to compete as far as the price they charge is concerned as well as private business, and the commission can still regulate them as to public safety and as to their qualifications for a license to operate a cab.

Mrs. NORTON. Does the gentleman know that this matter has been taken up before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and that a unanimous opinion was rendered in favor of the action of the commission?

Mr. MOUSER. I think that would be so long as the law gives them jurisdiction.

Mrs. NORTON. As long as this law remains in operation.

Mr. MOUSER. But if the Congress will take away that jurisdiction, they can not make such an arbitrary order.

Mrs. NORTON. Does not the gentleman think that before we do that we ought to think the whole thing over very carefully from every angle, and if we can delay this order for a year it will give us that opportunity? It will not deprive the citizens of the cheap fares, and it will not take away from the men operating these cabs the opportunity of making a living, which is probably the only method they have at this time.

Mr. MOUSER. I think that the committee should investigate it, and I think that is where it properly belongs. I think the committee should investigate the law which permits such an arbitrary order as has been issued in this case. I certainly would not take the matter away from the District of Columbia Committee; but, at a time like this, when thousands of people are coming here during this bicentennial celebration, it is a shame to permit such an order as that, especially in this time of unemployment.

Mrs. NORTON. I agree with the gentleman; but as long as the law remains, we are powerless to act. However, if we could bring in a resolution which would set back this ruling for a year, and in the meantime investigate the whole picture, I think we would be doing something worth while. I am absolutely in accord with the gentleman, and I would not want to feel that by any order of ours or of the commission we would take one man out of his cab and prevent him from earning the small amount which he does to-day. I am told that they make three or four dollars a day, but three or four dollars a day at this time is better than nothing.

Mr. MOUSER. Yes. I do not believe that Congress by passing a resolution will have any effect whatever, except a moral effect showing that it is the opinion of this body that we disagree with the arbitrary order. We will have to enact a law to change the jurisdiction of the commission.

Mrs. NORTON. That is my understanding.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. Yes.

Mr. THATCHER. From the gentleman's study of the question, what is the form and scope of the regulation that he thinks should be prescribed for the operation of automobiles and taxicabs?

Mr. HOLADAY. Following out the general theory of the regulation of public utilities by commissions, they must necessarily have a wide latitude of power. The surprising and troublesome thing is that General Patrick, the individual in authority, has entirely disregarded the rights of the public, has given no thought to them. He admits that it will double the rates; he admits that it will throw 700 men out of work, but he says that these two big companies are not making as much money as they should, that one of them said to him that they are hardly able to pay for the machines. Therefore, in order to protect the rights of these two companies he proposes to throw 700 men out of employment, a large part of them ex-service men, and to double the rates on the public, which is, as I said a moment ago, a total disregard of the rights of the public.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does not General Patrick say something more than that? What is his side of it?

Mr. HOLADAY. That is all he said.

Mr. GIFFORD. That does not seem possible.

Mr. HOLADAY. I admit it does not seem possible.

I think I have stated to this House everything that has been said to the committee in his own defense. I asked who filed this petition, who brought the question up. He said that the agent of one of the companies selling machines said he was hardly able to collect for his machines, and there were some individual complaints of people to the effect they had been overcharged.

Mr. GIFFORD. Has he offered no evidence whatever as to the safety of the public from this action?

Mr. HOLADAY. I do not remember any particular evidence was offered on that angle.

Mr. GIFFORD. I read about the promiscuous running around of taxicabs. Was not that testimony offered in the hearings?

Mr. HOLADAY. The facts showed that the individuals who owned their own machines did not have the accidents that the drivers for the big companies have, because the individual owners are individually responsible for repairs to their cars and have to stand the loss themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert certain tables, figures, and statistics which I shall use in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time to make some observations with reference to indebtedness, not only in this country but in the countries across the sea, as it relates to the present period of depression about which we have heard so much and for which so many hundreds, and even thousands, of remedies have been offered, but about which very little has been done.

I have been much interested in the various discussions in the House on stabilization of commodity prices, and I had the pleasure of listening to a discussion upon the silver question this morning when Mr. Strawn, who is head of the United States Chamber of Commerce, discussed the question before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, with a view to returning silver as a medium of exchange in order to give an expansion in world trade.

However, of all of the discussions that I have heard, and of all of the hundreds and thousands of pet schemes and projects that have come to my desk to cure the depression, I have not seen any detailed analysis of what the real, true situation is, not only in this country but across the sea.

We have been told the past year and a half or two years that our condition is due largely to world conditions and not to our own activities here in America. Therefore, I shall direct my remarks to a table that I have planned here, and I may say for the information of the committee that the Department of Commerce, the Treasury Department, War Department, industrial reviews, and others have assisted in the preparation of this table. It runs into billions of dollars, and is fairly accurate when we consider the enormous sums of money involved.

[1] German indemnity.

Mr. PARSONS. The population of the United States at the last census was 122,698,000. I take America first to illustrate, because I will compare it with other countries and with the totals for the world. These figures include all of the nations of the earth with the exception of China, the figures for which the Department of Commerce and various sources of information I consulted were unable to furnish.

The wealth of the United States in 1929, at the high peak, was approximately $400,000,000,000. That value shrank until on December 31, 1931, it was approximately $240,000,000,000.

The income in 1929 was approximately $90,000,000,000. It had shrunk in the year 1931 to $54,000,000,000.

Let us compare that with our indebtedness, because while wealth depreciates and commodity prices are reduced, our indebtedness naturally rises. The national debt, including all of the Federal Government issues, including our currency and the things for which the Federal Treasury is responsible, including the Reconstruction Finance Corporation issue and balancing the Budget July 1, 1932, amounts to more than $26,000,000,000. The internal indebtedness of the States, counties, municipalities, schools, road districts, and the units of taxation in the various States of the Union is $27,375,000,000. The corporate indebtedness of the various corporations of the country amounts to $52,500,000,000. The indebtedness of the Territories and insular possessions is $156,000,000, an insignificant sum.

The individual indebtedness—and this is partly estimated; we have the figures from the banks; we have the figures for certain other concerns that loan money, the remainder of it being estimated and computed in accordance with certain localities and communities where we were able to get a more or less accurate check—the individual indebtedness of one individual to another, of one institution to another, amounted to $26,986,500,000, making the total indebtedness—national, State, corporate, and individual—in this country in 1929, $133,358,500,000. That was predicated upon the values of four hundred billions of wealth in the United States.

As that wealth has been reduced, as the values have dropped at least 50 per cent—farm lands, city property, stocks, bonds, and securities—it augments the debt 50 per cent. That makes a total of $267,000,000,000. That is more than the total wealth of the United States. It is more than five times the income of the various business institutions in the country.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. GLOVER. I believe the gentleman stated that the indebtedness of the United States was about $26,000,000,000. What are the assets? What have we that is owing to us from other nations?

Mr. PARSONS. The assets of the Federal Government consists of its gold and silver in the Treasury, its public buildings, its public lands, and about $11,500,000,000 that is owing to us from Europe.

Mr. GLOVER. Is that all that is owing to us?

Mr. PARSONS. Substantially so. Approximately $12,000,000,000, let us say. The per capita wealth of the United States in 1931 was $1,964. The per capita indebtedness in 1931 was $1,087. Every man, woman, and child in the United States owed on an average of $1,087. Our per capita tax for the operation of all of the various units of government is $171. I have computed this debt on the basis of amortizing the payment of it in 33⅓ years at the rate of 5 per cent, which will make the total indebtedness, including accrued interest, in 33⅓ years, $244,490,583,333. That is $4,000,000,000 more than the total wealth of the United States.

I have heard the statement made here, and I do not repeat it to-day in order to cause any uneasiness, but it is, nevertheless, a matter of fact and we should understand these things and accept them and then try to adjust ourselves to righting the situation—the statement has been made "America is bankrupt." Considering the indebtedness at the present value, certainly the United States is in the red, and so is every other nation on the face of the earth with the exception of Russia.

It would take too long to go into all these figures. I am just going to quote a few of them, and then we will take up the totals. The United Kingdom, with a total population of 45,000,000, has a wealth to-day of $69,000,000,000. Its income to-day is $11,500,000,000. Great Britain's total indebtedness is $81,633,000,000, as compared with our $133,000,000,000. Her per capita wealth is $1,508. Her per capita indebtedness is $1,784, or $276 more than her per capita wealth. The per capita tax in Great Britain is $172, $1 higher than the tax in this country.

If Great Britain should amortize her debt in 33⅓ years at 5 per cent, it would take $148,660,500,000 to retire it. That is about three times the actual wealth of Great Britain to-day in depreciated values. France runs along about the same way. These figures, of course, will be inserted in the RECORD, and I will ask you to examine them to-morrow. I want to take up the figures for Russia for just a moment. Its wealth has increased since 1929 $4,000,000,000. Russia is the only nation whose wealth and income have increased. Her per capita indebtedness is $395. Her per capita wealth is $448, her per capita taxation is $38, based upon the system they use there. Her total indebtedness, to retire it in 33⅓ years, is $109,000,000,000.

For the British possessions, Latin America, and the remainder of the earth, together with the countries I have mentioned, there is presented a total that is very significant.

The population of the world is substantially 1,115,073,000, outside of China. The total wealth of the world in 1929 was $1,105,450,000,000. In 1931 that had shrunk to $721,470,000,000. The income of the world in 1929 was $201,000,000,000. It had shrunk in 1931 to $130,000,000,000. The total indebtedness of the world in 1929 was $494,726,350,000. The per capita wealth of the world in 1929 was $647. The per capita indebtedness of the world in 1929 was $443. The per capita tax of the world in 1929 was $75. To amortize this enormous debt, a debt we have never had before in the history of the world, in 33⅓ years at 5 per cent will take more than $903,000,000,000. That is almost as much as the total value of all material things of the world at the high peak in 1929, and $225,000,000,000 more than the wealth of the world at the reduced value.

These figures simply indicate what the conditions are to-day, not only here but abroad, and if the present commodity price, if the present wage scale, if the present value of agricultural lands and city property remain where they are to-day or are still further reduced, it simply means that all business must be washed out in bankruptcy and a start must be made overa again on a new foundation.

I mention this to bring to your attention the necessity of raising the commodity price level. If it takes inflation of the currency or if it takes price influencing on agricultural products, or whatever measure we may adopt, it must bring this price back to the level of 1925 or 1926 or 1929 in order to restore the solvency of the country.

TABLE II.—Direct money cost of World War

Total cost of World War	284,683,021,580

Mr. PARSONS. The major cause of this enormous indebtedness, of course, was the cost of the World War.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. PARSONS. The direct money cost of the World War to June 30, 1919, was more than $208,000,000,000. Add to that the money costs since the war and the total to-day is $244,000,000,000. These are large figures. When we add to this the cost of the devastated regions and the loss to the German nationals of their territories and colonies, half of which may be traced to a direct property loss, we have a total cost of the World War of $284,683,000,000.

We were told that this was a war to end wars, and yet when I consulted and solicited the aid of the department in preparing the present military figures, I was astounded to find that the strength of the armies, navies, and air corps of the 54 principal nations of the earth showed a 100 per cent increase over what they were in 1912 or 1913, just before entering the world conflict.

I shall insert at this place a table showing the strength of the armies, navies, and air corps in 1912 compared with the strength of the armed forces in 1930.

[1] No data.
[2] In 1912 Austria and Hungary were included in the dual monarchy, and figures on Austria represent the total for the Empire.
[3] Nation nonexistent.
[4] Does not include cost of approximately 36,000 colonial troops, paid for by the Dutch East Indies government. For this latter cost no data are available.

Mr. PARSONS. The total men under arms in 1912 were 5,805,978 in the armies, and in the navies there were 539,131.

In 1930—and we have more under arms now than we had in 1930—we had 9,214,296 in the armies, 581,000 in the navies, and more than 100,000 in the Air Corps, giving us almost a hundred per cent increase. Was this a war to end war, and is the peace that is following in accordance with your desire and mine and the people of the world?

Let us see about the cost. The total cost in 1912 for these same countries was $2,271,103,314. The expenditure in 1930 was $4,757,804,211, or more than 100 per cent increase.

You see that in our efforts to bring about a reduction in armament, in our efforts to reduce governmental expenses through reduction in war preparations, we are met face to face with a hundred per cent increase in personnel and more than a hundred per cent increase in expenditures. The fact of the business is that the cost of armament to-day is about 210 per cent as compared with 1912.

Another thing that is affecting the country to-day, of course, is the decrease in world trade. As an index to the trend of business conditions at the present time I have a table here prepared by the Department of Commerce giving the imports and exports by continents for the year 1912 and, beginning with 1925, through the years down to and including 1931. These figures are very interesting.

In 1912 we had a total world trade of $39,730,000,000. In that same year America's part of the world trade was $4,067,000,000. This increased through the years until 1929, when the world trade was a total of $68,000,000,000, $9,000,000,000 of which belonged to America.

The world trade was reduced in 1931 to $43,000,000,000, and America's part of that $43,000,000,000 was $4,520,000,000. The total loss in world trade is 35.2 per cent, but America's part of that loss is 52.3 per cent; in other words, America has lost in world trade about 17 per cent more than any other country. What is the cause?

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. What is the gross of the other countries and the gross of America?

Mr. PARSONS. The gross world trade in 1931 was $43,927,700,000, and America's part was $4,520,517,000.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Now, give the figures for the other countries.

Mr. PARSONS. I do not have the figures by countries, only by continents.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. What is it for Europe?

Mr. PARSONS. In 1931 the total imports were approximately $23,000,000,000, $13,500,000,000 of which belonged to Europe. The total exports were $20,927,000,000, of which $11,000,000,000 belonged to Europe.

Our exports in 1931 amounted to $2,433,700,000 and our imports were $2,086,817,000, or 9.07 per cent of the world's trade.

Our exports were $2,433,700,000, or 11.62 per cent.

Our world trade reached its high peak in 1926, when we had 16.1 per cent of total exports and 13.7 per cent of the total imports. That has dwindled down until last year the imports were only 9.07 per cent and the exports were 11.62 per cent.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. That would show a little bit of gain at the present time, having more exports than we had imports.

Mr. PARSONS. No; the exports and imports run somewhat near the same proportion for all the years.

American domestic trade in 1929–1931

Wholesale trade	70,000,000,000	50,000,000,000

Mr. PARSONS. Now, I have no inclination to discuss the tariff, but I know of no reason why, with our highly perfected system of manufacture and distribution, our world commerce should fall off 17 per cent more than other countries, unless it is the tariff. I am not going to charge it all to the tariff, although I think it has a great deal to do with it.

Now, I want to present some taxation figures, and I am merely doing this to get the figures in the RECORD.

The total property value in 1928 was $317,000,000,000, and real property assessed was $120,000,000,000. The personal property assessed in the United States was $28,000,000,000 plus. Other property, stocks, bonds, and so forth, was only $6,402,000,000. The total taxation upon which taxes were levied for State and various political units of the Government amounted to $155,464,620,847.

We have in this country outstanding about $53,000,000,000 of tax-free securities or partially tax free. Now, in 1928, we had property assessed at $155,000,000,000, and property not assessed $161,000,000,000. You talk about relief from taxation. These figures are worthy of your consideration.

TABLE 7.—Total valuation of property assessed and taxed in the United States, 1928

Real property	$120,137,619,216
Personal property	28,924,966,978
Other property	6,402,034,653
Total	155,464,620,847

TOTAL OUTSTANDING OF TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

National Government issues, including balancing Budget to date	$26,341,000,000
States, counties, etc	27,375,000,000
Total	53,716,000,000

TOTAL WEALTH, SHOWING AMOUNT TAXED AND AMOUNT UNTAXED IN UNITED STATES

Real estate and personal property assessed and taxed	$155,464,620,847

Total	317,180,620,847
Less lands and property assessed	155,464,620,847
Amount of property bearing no taxation	161,716,000,000

We have lost only 9 to 10 per cent of our total commerce in the world markets, but our domestic trade has been reduced $50,000,000,000. It is our domestic market we want to revive.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. PARSONS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. I was wondering if this shrinkage in the export condition was not due to the financial condition of other countries. If they have no money to buy with, they can not make purchases.

Mr. PARSONS. Certainly we can not hope to sell foreign nations goods unless they buy something from us. There must be a mutual exchange. Our recovery lies in restoring the home markets.

The problems causing the depression began with the inflation period of 1920–21. The slaughter in agricultural commodity prices and land values began in 1921 but reached their lowest ebb December, 1931, wiping out approximately $35,000,000,000 in farm values, upon which is founded the basic industry of the country.

The continual reduction in agricultural values lessened the buying power of approximately 40,000,000 people, and during the period of so-called prosperity the lessened buying power of the farmer contributed to the unemployment of the hundreds of thousands in the cities. To-day the buying power of agriculture, measured in terms of our monetary system, is in the ratio of about 1 to 4. It takes to-day 850 bushels of wheat to buy a binder, 400 bushels of corn to buy a corn planter, 2,500 bushels of peaches at the price they sold at last year to buy a tractor and spraying outfit, the wool from 20 head of sheep to buy a reasonably priced suit of clothes, a bale of cotton to buy a suit of clothes, 10 cowhides to buy a pair of shoes, 100 head of hogs or 30 head of cattle to buy a medium-priced car. To measure these values in terms of expenses for the operation of the White House in one year gives the equivalent of 1,705,000 bushels of wheat, or 2,200,000 bushels of corn, or 14,200 bales of cotton, or 532 carloads of hogs, or 476 carloads of cattle. It is apparent that if the buying power of the farmer remains at the point it is to-day, there can be no alternative except bankruptcy for him that owes and a mere pittance for those who are so-called solvent farmers to-day.

The second contributory factor to our depression, and we might say the climax in the drama of the fall from prosperity to adversity, was the stock-market racket. In spite of the dire conditions on the farm, the remainder of the country was getting along until the plan of deliberate inflation of stocks, bonds, and securities, was perpetrated upon the innocent people of America, from which billions were extracted from every corner of our land, and when the last bond had passed out of the hands of those who grew rich from inflationary values, the unsuspecting and innocent public woke up too late and found bankruptcy, despair, suicide, and destruction following in its wake. The relief measures which have been adopted provide chiefly for assistance, in a large measure, to the very group of men who had as much to do, if not more, in bringing about our depression than any class of people. Not a single, solitary proposal or move has been made to revive business at its grass roots, which is agriculture. We have two schools of thought in this country. Some believe that if you make the rich richer, pouring out the relief on the top round, it will seek its level and spread its ointment to every class and occupation. Others believe that if you pay high commodity prices, high wages in accordance with established prices, thereby making the masses of the people prosperous, it will serve as the fountain from which springs the water of prosperity. I believe in the latter philosophy.

Numerous warnings were sounded beginning in 1926 and periodically through the years to 1929 that there must be a readjustment in industry and business. Each time the stock market reacted to such warnings, the President and the Treasury chief, Mr. Mellon, issued glowing statements of the rosy condition of the country. For two and a half years we have been faced with an ever-increasing peril, with the only hope contained in prophesies, weekly and monthly issued, either from the White House or the Treasury Department, that prosperity was just around the corner and would return the next month, or at least the next season and if not then the next year. The people have been waiting long enough. They are asking now for action.

During these two and a half years not one single announcement was made to reduce governmental expenditures. When Congress met in December, 1930, it was apparent then to any shrewd business man that revenues would fall at least 20 per cent below the expenditures of government, but Mr. Mellon, then Secretary of the Treasury, estimated a surplus of $180,000,000. I insert in the RECORD at this point figures showing the Treasury estimates of Mr. Mellon from the years 1923 to 1931, inclusive, so the country may know how accurate his guesses have been to guide Congress in effecting economies:

TREASURY ESTIMATES MADE BY SECRETARY MELLON

For 1923, the Treasury estimated a deficit of $882,000,000. For 1923 there was a surplus of $309,657,460, an error of $1,006,657,460.

For 1924 the Treasury estimated a surplus of $324,000,000. For 1924 the surplus was $505,366,986.

For 1925 the Treasury estimated a surplus of $68,000,000. For 1925 the surplus was $250,505,238.

For 1926 the Treasury estimated a surplus of $262,041,756. For 1926 the surplus was 377,767,817.

For 1927 the Treasury estimated a surplus of $383,079,095. For 1927 the surplus was $635,000,000.

For 1928 the Treasury estimated a surplus of $200,703,863. For 1928 the surplus was $398,828,281.

For 1929 the Treasury estimated a surplus of $36,990,192. For 1929 the surplus was $184,787,035.

For 1930 the Treasury originally estimated a surplus of $225,581,534, but later changed this to $145,581,534. The surplus for that year was $183,789,215.

For 1931 the Treasury estimated a surplus of $180,076,657. For 1931 there was a deficit of $902,716,845, an error of $1,082,793,502.

Can $85,000,000,000 in land values, stocks, bonds, and securities be wiped out overnight without shaking the foundation of the Republic? Where is the exalted leadership that the American people have been told exists in both the Republican and Democratic parties? I am not making a partisan criticism, but I do make the point that those in charge of this Government have utterly failed to possess the vision of the approaching catastrophe and have miserably failed to provide any definite relief looking forward to the restoration of agriculture and business generally. We came back to the first session of the Seventy-second Congress on December 7, 1931, with the cloud of depression still hanging over us, and apparently neither the President nor leaders of the Senate or House had any definite plan or proposal worked out. The relief program has been added to and subtracted from, with first this proposal and that proposal. In the meantime we suddenly woke up to the realization that there must be additional taxes. Now we are face to face with an economy program, providing for reduction in Federal salaries and governmental expenditures, all of which is a hodgepodge, conglomerated assemblage of ideas with no specific organized plan of action.

The American people are looking forward to a dynamic leadership. They have a right to expect it. It is no time to play politics or quibble over nonessentials. It requires the earnest efforts of the best minds to formulate a program which will abolish, combine, and coordinate boards, bureaus, and divisions, reduce the expenses of government and bring them within the income of the Federal Treasury. If the leaders in both the executive and legislative branches of our Government fail in this accomplishment, the American people, clothed with the majesty of citizenship and armed with the weapon of suffrage, will rise in their might and restore leadership in the seats of the mighty with their ballots in November.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SELVIG].

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Chairman, the refusal of a majority of the House of Representatives to vote in favor of consideration of the so-called drainage relief bill (H. R. 4650) when it was called up under the discharge rule proved a great disappointment to thousands upon thousands of farmers in this country. There are thousands of those who live on the farm to-day who know not where to go to avert impending loss, disaster, and bankruptcy. This bill would have given these farmers a breathing spell in which to recover, in which to hang on until better conditions return in this country.

That this is true in Minnesota is forcefully presented in a letter received this morning. This letter reads, in part:

Failure of the drainage bill is a keen disappointment to the people within the counties of Minnesota heavily burdened by drainage indebtedness. It is hard for them to understand and hard for many others to understand why it is that when industry and the bankers are in tight financial straits the Government rushes to their rescue as a matter of course by appropriating stupendous sums for "stabilization," but when the farmers, discouraged and crushed and in hundreds of thousands of cases unable to live come to their rich uncle for aid they are barely accorded the crumbs that fall from the rich man's table.

All these "economy" measures which appear from time to time and which are heralded in the public press for public consumption lack sincerity and fall on deaf ears because of the obvious inconsistency of attitudes taken by Congress on parallel if not identical issues.

Farmers and districts seeking legislation to authorize a Federal loan of $100,000,000 wherewith to refinance their drainage costs over an extended period at a reduced rate of interest have maintained a struggle before Congress for over three years, have seen their measures recommended for passage in previous sessions by committees having them under consideration in both branches, saw it passed by the Senate last session only to find that it has been all in vain.

In contrast, the present Congress in less than three months has considered, enacted, and put into effect a measure making available $2,000,000,000 for the use of industry and the banker to stabilize and restore his status. So far as the reaction of the farmer to the attempts made by Congress and the administration to recognize and meet his peculiar problems up to date is concerned, I am afraid our political leaders and statesmen will discover that they have been fiddling while Rome has been burning.

I do not know what will be the next step to be taken by the counties in Minnesota that have been unable to collect drainage taxes and that have their drainage taxes and liens extended from year to year in the hope that some relief might be offered which would give the farmer a chance to hang on until a turn to better times had been reached. They are faced with a desperate situation.

Would you say that the defeat of the friends of the drainage bill in their attempt to discharge the Rules Committee means that there is no hope for the bill to be passed when it is reached on the calendar in the regular routine?

I am writing this letter as a citizen who has been deeply interested in drainage-tax relief and who with thousands of other farmers feels a keen disappointment over the failure of Congress to make funds available with which to lighten their burdens and give hope to a despairing class.

I am bringing this matter to the attention of my colleagues in order to have them know that the failure to pass this bill has engendered considerable feeling in the rural areas affected.

Just recently it was divulged in another body that loans had been made by the United States Shipping Board to shipowners at an astoundingly low rate of interest. When the farmers come with a legitimate request, they are refused even the chance to have the bill discussed on the floor of the House.

Such procedure does not seem fair. There is more than a grain of truth in the letter which I have just presented.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am going to take only a few moments of time to present to this committee a matter which will be brought here within a few days, and that is the question of the salaries of the Federal officeholders.

In presenting this matter I feel like the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] toward the workingman. I, for one, do not like to reduce the wages of those in the lower brackets. I feel, however, that we people who are receiving the larger salaries should have a fairly heavy reduction.

In order to present that to the committee at this time and to place it in the RECORD, I refer to an amendment which I expect to offer when the bill comes before the House. I start in exempting all salaries under $2,000. From $2,000 to $2,500, on the $500 I reduce 5 per cent, or $25, and on the next $500, 10 per cent, or $50, making $75, on a person receiving $3,000. I proceed on that graduated scale up to $10,000 received by a Member of Congress. He will suffer a reduction, under my amendment, equal to $2,175.

On amounts received that are above $10,000 the charge will be 45 per cent of each $1,000. In other words, the 45 per cent taken from the salary is taken above the $10,000 mark. I feel the time has come when we Representatives of the people can not vote for cutting everything and reducing all appropriations and say that we cut everything except we failed to reduce our own salaries.

The amendment to which I refer and which I shall offer when the bill comes up is as follows:

AN AMENDMENT TO THE AMENDMENT OF THE LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, PROPOSED BY THE ECONOMY COMMITTEE, TO H. R. 11267

Strike out section 202 (a) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 202 (a). During the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1932, the compensation for each civilian and noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment in any branch or service of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia is hereby reduced as follows:

"Upon compensation of $2,000 or less there shall be no reduction; upon compensation in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $2,500, 5 per cent of such excess.

"$25 upon compensation of $2,500; and upon compensation in excess of $2,500 and not in excess of $3,000, 10 per cent of such excess.

"$75 upon compensation of $3,000; and upon compensation in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $4,000, 15 per cent of such excess.

"$225 upon compensation of $4,000; and upon compensation in excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $5,000, 20 per cent of such excess.

"$425 upon compensation of $5,000; and upon compensation in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $6,000, 25 per cent of such excess.

"$675 upon compensation of $6,000; and upon compensation in excess of $6,000 and not in excess of $7,000, 30 per cent of such excess.

"$975 upon compensation of $7,000; and upon compensation in excess of $7,000 and not in excess of $8,000, 35 per cent of such excess.

"$1,325 upon compensation of $8,000; and upon compensation in excess of $8,000 and not in excess of $9,000, 40 per cent of such excess.

"$1,725 upon compensation of $9,000; and upon compensation in excess of $9,000 and not in excess of $10,000, 45 per cent of such excess.

"$2,175 upon compensation of $10,000; and upon compensation in excess of $10,000, 45 per cent of such excess."

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORR].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I have been particularly taken with this economy talk. It is one of the things that I have heard ever since I have been in the Congress. I myself would be perfectly willing to sacrifice my salary if I thought a cent of it would ever go back to the people who really are in need of some assistance from the Government. I take it that those who are asking for a reduction in Federal salaries are those people who are paying the big taxes, and not from those in distress. We have in our city alone 35,000 people who are out of employment, who are asking for bread.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. In the petitions and letters that I have received for a reduction of salaries, practically all of them have come from the farmers of my district.

Mr. HORR. That might be from the farmers of the gentlemen's district, but at the time when we had before us the agricultural relief bill calling for payment of taxes by people who live in the cities to pay this appropriation I voted for the relief of the gentleman's people on the farms, but now

I am getting letters from the people in the cities asking for relief. I sympathize with the farmer. I come from a farming State, but if his sustenance is taken away from him he at least has his home, his farm, his hog, his cow left, but you take from the man in the city his pay check and he has nothing. When he gets home to his family he finds when his pay check is taken away that nothing is left, and the landlord tells him to get out.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The trouble is that with the low price of agricultural products it is taking from the farmer his home, his land, his implements, his stock, and is sending him out on the road.

Mr. HORR. It is true, and the reason of the low price of your farm products is because those who have been buying your products have been deprived of their buying power and their wage taken away from them. [Applause.] I sympathize with your agricultural people. We are getting many letters from people who are not opposing a wage cut for Federal employees, or any other wage reduction in this United States of America.

We talk about cutting wages and reducing the cost of government! What happened a short time ago to big business? I do not represent big business, or the bankers, but I do believe their needs should be taken care of, and I cheerfully walked up to the trough and gave them their relief, which was nothing more than a dole. In reducing wages, I say to you that we are taking away from the people the very thing that is going to bring back prosperity to this country—that is an opportunity of buying the product of the factory with their wage, the power of purchase from the farmer who is suffering because there is no market for his products.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I want to say to the gentleman that I have expressed myself as being willing to cut my own salary, although perhaps I can not afford it, but I have been absolutely opposed to cutting the salaries of the moderately paid employees, those receiving under $2,500, because I think such a cut would take away a buying power that is much needed at the present time.

Mr. HORR. That is true. I am going to talk to you as I believe we should talk to each other and to the country. We are holding political jobs and our salary looks very large to the people back home, but I do not believe that there is a man in this House, unless he has an independent income, who will come forward with a statement that he can live in this city, the National Capital, for less than the salary that is being paid to the Congressmen. I am a poor man. Many here in this Chamber are poor men. I hope the time never comes when only the rich man and the man of independent income will be eligible to the Congress of this United States.

Gentlemen, we are economy mad. We talk about confidence; we hear it in every committee; we are told that there is nothing wrong with this country except that the people have lost confidence in our Government and in our financial system, yet we come in and add to that disquietude by taking from our own employees the salary and the wage they are now receiving and the word goes out to the country that we are in bad shape financially.

Talk about restoring confidence, when by our actions we are shaking the very foundations of confidence from under our system!

I think we should appropriate money. When depression comes in industry an effort is made to stimulate business. In this depression General Motors and Henry Ford began to advertise; they start the wheels going; they are attempting to show the people that prosperity is here.

There is plenty of money if you will only take advantage of conditions as they are. I think we should appropriate money. To-day I heard a banker, the president of two banks on Wall Street, tell the Ways and Means Committee that we are just fooling ourselves when we think we are balancing the Budget; that we are only doing it from a paper standpoint and are not actually balancing it at all.

I do not want to get in the class of the demagogue and cry out that we are for the common people and against the rich and successful for the sake of publicity, but let us look at it from a real honest standpoint. If a financial measure is discussed on the floor of this House and a few of us get indiscreet and attack some of the New York bankers, the next morning some member with a long face announces to Congress that on account of this attack that is being made stocks dropped 5 or 10 points. That kind of a threat should not be taken here by the Congressmen who legislate for the people of this Nation. Of course the stocks dropped. The bankers control the finances and the stock market.

In my opinion, the only way prosperity will ever come is to quit furnishing relief to those up above, the banker, if you please. The other day the President of the United States asked the little fellow to quit hoarding. Who is hoarding the money of this country? Are the working people doing it, or are they pretending their distress? Where is your hoarding? Where is the money you gave your Reconstruction Finance Corporation? In your banks; and it is going to stay there. Relief is not coming from the top down; it must come from the bottom up.

Big business came out with a declaration that if we put this $5,000,000,000 loan over we would have to pay it back.

I have not always agreed with Mr. Hearst, but his $5,000,000,000 loan plan for the purpose of putting money in circulation is not unsound.

Is it not a fact that business is shortsighted? Of course you are going to pay it back.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. HORR. It is a fact that we are going to have to pay it back. Of course we are. If we make this appropriation of five billions, it is coming in the nature of a tax, but what would happen if two or three years ago this Congress had levied a tax equivalent to the amount of money that these industries had lost because of this depression? Is there an industry in the United States that has not had its profits cut in two, if not destroyed? This is going to continue until there is some activity on the part of the producer, and industry, in my opinion, is shortsighted if it does not recognize this fact. Business is already paying a tax to this depression, and business men would take up arms and go into a revolution if Congress dared to tax them in the amount that they have lost on account of this depression.

I say to you, friends, we are going at it from the wrong direction. The only people who are going to put money into circulation are the people who spend it. You give it to your banks and they hoard it. You talk to me about the banks not buying the bonds to finance public work. They tell us not to put more bonds on the market because the investor will not buy, and yet every issue is oversubscribed. It is a question of honest bluff.

I shall read later a letter from the Chamber of Commerce of Tacoma, Wash.; a resolution from my own city of Seattle, Wash.; a telegram from the city and county commissioners of Spokane, the three greatest cities in my State, calling upon this Congress to give them Federal aid. I want you to know just the condition in which the country is and the necessity for furnishing relief to the country.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I understood the gentleman to refer to the loans being made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as a dole. I think that is very unfortunate, because that legislation was voted for by practically a majority on both sides of the aisle. In that legislation it was specifically provided that these loans should be made on adequate security, and if the gentleman will interview any bank or any organization that has tried to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation he will find that they have had to put up adequate security. I would like to say one more thing. On the first day of this month the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had made loans to over 800 banks. To-day they have made loans to 1,319 banks in 48 States. Ninety-eight per cent of those loans have been made in cities of less than 100,000 and 76 per cent in cities of less than 10,000. Two hundred and fifty million dollars have been returned to business from hoarded money.

Mr. HORR. I am not criticizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I voted for it the same as the gentleman from Kansas. I say that relief was necessary in order to perpetuate these banks, but my thought is not to stop with the bankers. My thought is that though the relief to date has been to the banks, the banks are not playing fair in calling in their loans. If the money has been loaned on good collateral, as the gentleman says, and if the collateral is good, as the gentleman says, they never would have had to go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for relief.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Let me give the gentleman a ray of hope.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Bank credit has been gradually going down in spite of the fact that the Federal reserve system has been buying Government bonds at the rate of $25,000,000 a week, but on yesterday for the first time for a month there was a halt in the decline of bank credit, so it means that very likely from this on there will be an increase in bank credit. I think the system has done a lot of good, and let me say that this Congress has appropriated $175,000,000 for the farmers, for farm loans $125,000,000 to the farm-loan banks, and $50,000,000 to the Secretary of Agriculture to be loaned for seed loans. I am glad of it, and I am glad I had a part in it.

Mr. HORR. I am glad, also, and I agree with a great deal of what the gentleman from Kansas has said. In my opinion the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has accomplished something, but my thought is now that we have done something for finance let us do something for the individual who is hungry, and I am not saying this in a demagogic way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the gentleman advocating a direct appropriation out of the Treasury for the destitute and needy?

Mr. HORR. Not that; no. What I am saying we should do is to issue bonds for the purpose of securing money for the carrying on of necessary and needed public works, thereby giving employment, not doles. [Applause.] And may I give you my reason? I am reading to you from a clipping I have received from the local paper of Spokane, Wash.:

> An army of unemployed marched on the courthouse to-day and demanded immediate relief, and got it. More than 1,500 jobless men and women told county commissioners they were peaceable but would be driven to looting stores and restaurants if nothing was done to relieve them.

And here we have telegrams from this same city saying they can not further take care of this situation.

Permit me to read to you some of the actions taken by the cities in my State. I am reading to you now a letter from the Tacoma Chamber of Commerce. Tacoma is a city of over 106,000:

> DEAR MR. HORR: Last fall this chamber went on record in favor of employment relief by States, counties, and municipalities. At that time we did not deem it advisable for the Federal Government to appropriate money for relief purposes. Our experience since that decision was made has led us to change our opinion. We are now convinced that it is impractical, and in some cases unjust, for this burden to be assumed by the various municipalities, and we are now on record in favor of Federal aid. We believe the President was right when he said the present emergency has taken on the proportions of a major war.

Tacoma thought she could take care of her own problems but it was too burdensome, and now we find her asking for Federal aid.

Permit me to read again a telegram that I received from the city of Spokane, the largest city in eastern Washington. Spokane also attempted to care for the local condition, but this telegram is an answer as to whether Federal aid is necessary to relieve the distress in that city. This is the first time in the history of the city there has been a call of this nature. The following is a telegram that I received:

> The undersigned commissioners of the city and county of Spokane urge on Congress the immediate passage of legislation to aid the States, cities, and counties in taking care of their local unemployment problems. The local communities have now carried on the work for two years and have about exhausted their ability. The problem is national in its scope and every agency of government from the town to the Federal authority at Washington should be exerted to alleviate the distress. Local governments in administering relief are dependent wholly on direct taxes on tangible property and the burden can not be borne much longer.
> We believe provision should be made by the National Government for aiding local communities with funds to be supplied by increased taxes on large fortunes and by a bond issue to initiate and carry on great public works necessary to the full development of the country. We are in the midst of a supreme crisis upon the proper solution of which the future of our country depends. As during the Great War the manhood of our Nation was drawn upon unstintedly to meet the country's supreme need, so now wealth should be drafted to do its share in saving the Nation from further calamity.

In my own city of Seattle of over one-third of a million of population, let me read the resolution adopted by the city council:

> Whereas the present condition of unemployment is now in its third year, and the condition has not improved, but constantly becomes more acute, and
> Whereas the unemployed naturally drift to the centers of population, placing upon the large cities a greater burden than they are able to bear; and
> Whereas these cities are limited in their powers to cope with so serious a situation, and can not be adequately dealt with by them; and it is necessary that the aid of the State and National Governments be invoked, and the Federal Government is the only agency having the power and ability to afford adequate relief; and
> Whereas available funds have been largely exhausted by the various cities, and the savings of the unemployed have also been exhausted, and the prospect is that a serious condition of unemployment will still exist next winter: Be it
> Resolved by the City Council of the City of Seattle, Wash., That we urge upon Congress the absolute necessity of providing immediate relief and of undertaking an extensive program of public works in order to provide employment and that such public works be undertaken in the several States; and
> That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the legislative bodies of the principal cities of this State and other large cities on the Pacific coast, with the suggestion that they adopt similar resolutions and forward the same to their respective Representatives in Congress.
> Passed the city council the 4th day of April, 1932, and signed by me in open session in authentication of its passage this 4th day of April, 1932.
> PHILIP TINDALL,
> President of the City Council.

I have also another letter from Spokane signed by the commissioner of finance, in which he reiterates the request for Federal aid.

Gentlemen, we will either be paying the dole in the near future or the Congress must appropriate money for public improvements. Of course, we will have to pay it back, but, as I said before, if industries had been taxed in the amount of moneys that were lost on account of the depression, industry would have risen in revolt against this tax. These bonds will sell quickly. Since we are paying the debt of war, which was contracted to protect future generations, future generations should take part of this load off our shoulders, and help pay these bonds issued for needed public works.

This plan of Mr. Hearst, to issue bonds for needed public works, would result in large numbers being employed. Employment furnishes wages and creates a market for the products of farm and factory. Eventually this money will find its way to banking institutions, and the banks will thereby be relieved. This will hasten the return of normal conditions, and the bonds can be taken care of in normal times as they mature over a period of years.

Mr. Hearst pays one of the largest tax bills in the Nation. As a level-headed business man and journalist, he would not advocate a measure which would work a hardship on business. I am confident he has the right thought on this problem. Let us do something constructive. Relief can not come from above; it must come from below. Money must be placed in the hands of the workers. They will start it in circulation again, which is the only cure for the depression.

In order to get food into the mouths of the hungry and clothes on the backs of the poor, let us issue prosperity bonds, start the wheels of industry running, and bring back normal times.

Let us not test further the loyalty of our people who are without means. Let us give them the right that belongs to every individual—the right to work and the right to live. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH].

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, from time immemorial political parties have existed. They have been the medium through which the people have expressed their hopes, their ideals, and their aspirations. In the day of the Savior there were five political groups—the Sadducees, who represented the reactionary group of their time, and who owned and controlled all the material wealth of their day; the Pharisees, who represented the common people of their time, the Democrats of their day; the Zealots, who symbolized national consciousness, the predecessors of Patrick Henry, and who were the first to enunciate the patriotic sentiment, "give us liberty or give us death." They refused to genuflect to any alien or foreign nation, and have always fought for the freedom of their people. They were ready to die to bring liberty into the home, hearth, and fireside of their people; the Scribes, who recorded the valorous deeds of their people and preserved the traditions of their forebears; and, last, the Elders, those illustrious patriarchs, who had grown gray in the service of God, and who were elected as judges and placed upon the tribunal known as the Sanhedrin.

Centuries passed by and we find in Greece two political groups, the hoi aristoi, or aristocratic element, and the hoi polloi, represented by the common people. When Rome was mistress of the world and her battalions and legions conquered the then known civilized world, political groups were represented by two parties, the patricians and the plebeians. The patricians belonged to the hereditary aristocracy and the plebeians belonged to the common people of ancient Rome.

For almost fifteen hundred years when knighthood was in flower, dukes, lords, and barons represented the landed aristocracy. The common people were feudalistic slaves who had economic security but who were denied liberty or freedom of expression.

In the period of King George III we have the Tories, who represented the philosophy of absolute monarchy, and the Whigs, who represented the liberal party in England in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

Since the creation of our Government our people, in my humble opinion, have been divided into two groups, those who represent the reactionary conservative views, and those who represent liberal principles and ideals. To me a reactionary conservative is one who adheres to the existing order of things and is opposed to any economic change. A liberal, on the other hand, stands not only for stability and order but for progress and reform. I am proud to proclaim myself as a liberal, progressive Democrat, free from narrowness, bigotry, intolerance, or bondage to authority, battling for economic principles that will bring the greatest good to the greatest number, and justice to rich and poor alike. [Applause.] As a liberal progressive I am frank enough to admit that you can find reactionary conservatives on both sides of the aisle, as well as progressive liberals in the Republican and Democratic ranks alike.

Mr. Chairman, the tragedy of our terrible economic depression at the present time is that the strong are getting the assistance of our present administration, whereas it is the weak, the helpless, the hopeless, who need it most.

The barometer of the civilization of any nation throughout the ages has been the treatment that has been accorded to those who work and toil in the quarries of life. For 140 years the American workingman has struggled, toiled, and drudged to develop an American standard of living. We are all proud of that standard, and we love to see it advanced. In my opinion, labor is the producer of capital and should be entitled to a fairer share in the distribution of the wealth that it creates. [Applause.]

For almost five decades the Republican Party has boldly proclaimed its right to the suffrage of every American citizen. Its economic principles had brought about affluence and prosperity. The full dinner pail appealed to the gustatory joy of the American toiler. In the last campaign the Republican nominee for President promised two chickens in every pot, two automobiles in every garage, and the abolition of poverty. The millennium was at hand.

Now, everywhere throughout the length and breadth of our country 8,000,000 people are out of employment, pleading, begging, and crying for work. Twenty million American citizens are the victims of hunger, penury, misery, and want. Charity is knocking upon the door of self-respecting American citizens.

For 12 years the Republican Party, the reactionary conservative group, has been in control of the destinies of our Republic. They have almost ruined our country socially, economically, and financially. They are floundering in the mire of financial and economic uncertainty. They have no plan, program, or treatment that can restore our economic stability.

It remains, therefore, for the liberal and progressive patriotic element of the Congress of the United States, which is found on both sides of the aisle, to unite to bring our beloved Republic back to the happiness, success, and prosperity that every thoughtful and self-respecting American is praying for it to achieve. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic Party has taken possession of the House of Representatives. If it continues to remain Democratic, true to its ideals and to its traditions, liberal and progressive in its view of economic ideals, loyal to the great masses of people who are looking for new leadership to bring our ship of state, that is being buffeted by economic typhoons and political storms, into the harbor of peace and prosperity, as sure as night follows day the next President and the next House and Senate must be Democratic. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, there are three kinds of wages that workingmen receive in exchange for their labor. First, saving wages; second, living wages; and third, starvation wages. The Democracy of the State of New York, from which I have the honor to come, under the supervision of the Democratic leaders who represent our great Empire State, have been instrumental in placing upon our statute books no starvation wages, yea, no living wages, but the only kind of wages that should exist in our Federal Government and our State governments, and that is saving wages that will make it possible for every man and woman who works for our country to save money from their earnings to help to maintain them when age, sickness, or disease falls upon them. [Applause.]

The Government of the United States has been derelict in its obligation to its Federal employees. It has never paid them saving wages. God knows it has not even been living wages. Post-office clerks, customhouse workers, clerical workers in the different departments of our Government; yea, 87 per cent of those who work in the Federal departments receive less than $2,000 a year. The survey of Federal employees and their salaries recently made by the Bureau of the Budget tragically shows the insufficient pay that has been given to those who work for Uncle Sam. The most startling revelation made in their report shows that 100,000 civilian Government workers are paid less than $1,000 a year. Can anyone live in luxury on such a salary? Are these the princely salaries which some Members of Congress would want to cut? More than one-half of the civilian workers are found to be receiving less than $1,900 a year. Do the Members of Congress want to balance the Budget by slashing away at these meager and pitiable salaries that these poor people receive from our Government?

More than half of the total amount paid by the Government for civilian salaries goes to men and women who individually are paid less than $2,200 a year. Is there any Member of Congress who would state that this is an adequate amount with which to support an American family in conformity with American standards? There are about 4,000 civilians outside of Members of Congress and the judiciary who are paid more than $5,000 a year. Members of Congress receive $10,000 a year. From the work, toil, and labor that I see each man perform, there is no doubt in my mind that he earns it justly and fairly. Every Member of Congress has to maintain his home in the State from which he comes, live in Washington, contribute to every charitable institution within his district, and help every impoverished family that knocks upon his door seeking assistance. The wonder to me is how any Member of Congress can maintain himself adequately and justly upon this salary.

The absurdity of making the proposed cut apply to the military and naval forces can only be manifested when we realize that the survey shows 290,913 people in this service in which 220,673 receive less than $1,000 a year. Is the United States Government impoverished in the pay that it gives to those who have given the best years of their life to serve our country loyally and faithfully? I say our country has never done enough for its employees. The Federal Government should not join those misguided private employers who are using the present economic condition as a weapon to batter down the American standard of living, which has taken so many years for our Republic to bring into realization. [Applause.]

In 1928 I was a member of the Civil Service Committee of the House of Representatives. At the present time I am ranking member of that committee. We passed the Welch bill to increase the salaries of all working people employed by our Government, particularly those in the lower brackets. Federal employees came to our hearings from all over the country. They pleaded, implored, and besought us to give them an increase in salary during the great height of American Republican prosperity. Mr. Coolidge was President. The bill was voted out unanimously by our committee. Everywhere throughout the length and breadth of our country industrial and white-collar workers had their salaries increased very greatly. Our poor Federal employees had received no increase whatsoever. The Welch bill was reported out with increases in the salaries of our American Federal employees to the extent of $90,000,000. President Coolidge sent for Mr. LEHLBACH, the chairman of the Civil Service Committee of the House of Representatives. He advised him that he would veto that bill unless the $90,000,000 of increased salaries was reduced to $18,000,000. The wish of President Coolidge was complied with by all members of our committee. That meant that the working people employed by our Government only received increases of $60, $120, and $180 per year. That was in the height of our great period of economic prosperity. Even in those days these Federal employees appearing before our committee cried that their children had very little clothing, one pair of shoes, food not of the best quality; that when their children were sick they had to go to a dispensary or be admitted as a charity case in the hospitals of our country.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, if that was the state of affairs of our Federal employees in 1928, when our country was enjoying the most prosperous period of its economic history, what would be their sad plight to-day if you reduce their salaries, which are now insufficient to support their wives and children and those who are dependent upon them? [Applause.]

I say to you, ladies and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, you liberals and progressives like myself, that we as Democrats do not believe in the principle of "soaking the rich." But while we do not believe in this monstrous doctrine of "soaking the rich," neither do we believe in the un-American sentiment of letting the poor starve, who are helpless and hopeless in finding work in this great Republic of ours in the so-called twentieth century of civilization.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIROVICH. Not now. I only have 15 minutes to speak. If I have a little more time, I will be glad to yield. My distinguished colleague knows that I have never failed to allow any man to ask any question at any time if sufficient time is given to me by the House.

Mr. HOLADAY. I shall be very glad to yield the gentleman a minute extra.

Mr. SIROVICH. Very well.

Mr. HOLADAY. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he were acquainted with his distinguished leader's remarks last evening upon the subject of demagogues. I refer to Al Smith.

Mr. SIROVICH. It is only people who forget from whence they come, from whom they spring, and who fail to realize and to respond to the cries of the unemployed, hungry, and suffering, who are demagogues.

Mr. HOLADAY. I was asking the gentleman if he was acquainted with his leader's remarks.

Mr. SIROVICH. My leader never meant the kind of remarks I am making. He would speak as eloquently for the sick, the unemployed, and the starving American just as I do. He meant the remarks of men who have everything to live for, who see the suffering and humiliation and starvation all around them, and who have not the sense or feeling of humanity to know that those people need help. They are the demagogues of America, not those who have what they want and are willing to share it with those less fortunate than themselves, and who are pleading for those who have not. Let me tell my distinguished friend from Illinois that when I came from the hospital a few days ago, pretty nearly every private hospital in New York City was empty; because the white-collar element for whom I am speaking, the element that makes our Republic possible, could not afford to go to private hospitals. Bellevue Hospital was overflowing with the poor, every bed was taken. Cots were on the floor. Is that a picture that the gentleman of Illinois could feel proud of? Is there not something in that? Would it move the gentleman who comes from Illinois to know that in some of the department stores in New York City girls are working on a commission basis? They do not earn 10 cents a day, sufficient to pay their traveling expenses back and forth. Surely the gentleman will agree with me, because I know he is human and is actuated by the purest intentions, that one who is trying to remedy such conditions should be encouraged.

Mr. HOLADAY. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Admitting all the conditions as the gentleman has portrayed them, what does he propose to do about it, what is his remedy?

Mr. SIROVICH. That is a good question and a very fair one. I should recommend nothing better to the President of the United States and the leadership on the gentleman's side of the House, if it has leadership, than to read the speech that I made in answer to Mr. JAMES M. BECK three months ago on Stabilizing America First, in which I gave 10 commandments, which if put into realization would be helpful in restoring the prosperity of our Republic. These are the 10 commandments:

COMMANDMENT 1

Scrap the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill from top to bottom. Right the wrongs of injustices done therein. Then establish reciprocal relations and understanding with all the nations of the world for the mutual benefit of all concerned.

COMMANDMENT 2

Place agriculture on a parity with industry by passing a bill similar to the McNary-Haugen bill, introducing the principle of debenture or the equalization fee.

This will place agriculture upon a parity with industry and bring justice and happiness to 40,000,000 farmers who are the victims of a high protective tariff that compels them to purchase their goods and materials in the restricted markets of our country and sell the products of nature's soil in the competitive markets of the world. Let us, therefore, stabilize the farming interests of our country by helping them in this the greatest hour of need so that there shall be no repetition of over a thousand banks failing in their midst.

COMMANDMENT 3

Abolish child labor. Children under 16 belong to the schoolhouse, not in the mills, mines, looms, and factories. They should not compete with adult men and women for work that rightfully belongs to them.

COMMANDMENT 4

Establish a 5-day week and a 6-hour day in industry. Machinery has dislocated production. It has displaced men and women in every industry. We should frankly recognize that in our machine age mechanisms are superior to men, and the creation of a shorter working week with fewer working hours per day would better enable man to cooperate with the advance of machinery.

COMMANDMENT 5

Establish unemployment insurance and old-age pensions in every State of the Union so that in times of prosperity we may be able to prepare for days of adversity. Unemployment insurance and old-age pensions are neither new nor radical ideas. The arch conservative, Bismarck, instituted them in Germany way back in 1883. The liberals, Asquith and Lloyd George, brought them about in England in 1909, and the socialists, Briand and Clemenceau, introduced them in France in 1910. Twenty-eight other nations of Europe adopted them in one form or another. Why, then, should America, the most advanced country of the present age, lag behind?

COMMANDMENT 6

Institute employment agencies throughout the United States through the cooperation of the Federal and State Governments so that labor may easily be shifted from one part of the country to another in times of economic depression.

COMMANDMENT 7

Guarantee bank deposits in every bank of the country through a national bank insurance fund so that no depositor should ever be permitted to lose a single penny through the closure of any bank, whether due to frozen assets, incompetent or corrupt management, or economic depression.

COMMANDMENT 8

Put teeth into the Federal Trade Commission act so that grossly unfair methods of competition should be prevented.

COMMANDMENT 9

Recognize Soviet Russia and so open up to American capital and labor the vast markets and resources of that enormous expansive territory containing 160,000,000 inhabitants who are yearning for the friendship of Americans and who are begging to be permitted to buy from them and to do business with them. Millions of unemployed American men and women could be put to work to-morrow to supply the needs of Soviet Russia if we recognized that country immediately.

COMMANDMENT 10

Modify the Volstead Act to permit the sale of light wines and beer. This would at once deal a deathblow to racketeering and bootlegging in this country. At the same time it would turn billions of dollars into the Treasury of the United States, relieving our citizens of the enormous burdens of taxation.

When the moratorium was presented to this House, I voted for it. I thought it was only a palliative, just the same as when I was a doctor and had a patient who was suffering after an operation, who could not move and turn without agony, I gave him an injection of morphine or opium, knowing that it would help him for 24 or 48 hours, but that he would come to later. The moratorium was palliative. When you brought out the Reconstruction Finance Corporation measure, I voted for that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIROVICH. May I have 10 minutes more?

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman nine additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SIROVICH. When the Steagall bill came in to help the Federal farm banks, I voted for the legislation. I voted for every measure that I thought would help. I voted for every bill that would help to bring back big business, industry, agriculture, and banking, everything that goes with it, but I have not found all this wealth trickling down from above to help the fellow who is below. You have got to do something for 8,000,000 men and women who are to-day starving. They do not seek charity or a dole. These Americans want and demand work. There are 20,000,000 of those who are dependent upon them. If you reduce the salaries and wages of American men and women working for the Federal Government, you will be depriving people of hundreds and thousands of dollars of aid who are dependent upon these people to help them along. You will reduce the purchasing power of almost a million Federal workers. I am glad to say that every one of my colleagues from the city of New York is absolutely and unalterably opposed to this cut. I am sure that that little warrior, LAGUARDIA, sitting over there will help us fight against this reduction of American wages.

My philosophy of life is to aim high, as high as I possibly can, and it is not to cut down the standard of American Federal wages which has taken years of effort to acquire. Labor has been working for hundreds of years to reach the standard that it has. Do you remember when the industrial revolution was created way back in the time of Adam Smith, Jeremy Benthem, David Ricardo, John Stuart Mill, and Thomas Malthus? Workingmen were laboring 100 hours a week. Women and children were working 60 and 70 hours a week. Men were put in prison for trying to promote the welfare of their fellow workingmen and their labor organizations. I want to protect the rights of those who have acquired property through legal process; I want to conserve the rights of those who have no one to speak for them. This is the duty of every man in Congress. I do not believe in the ipse dixit of the President or anybody else. The President has not shown the great leadership that compels us as Democrats to follow him. We ought to follow the old ideals of Jeffersonian Democracy, which have always been our refuge in every hour of need. That is why I am going to plead with you liberals, you Republicans, you progressive Democrats, you who sympathize with those who toil and struggle to keep a standard of living that will make the world better for our having lived in it.

Let us not follow this blind leadership, whether it is on the Republican side or on the Democratic side. Let us follow the instinct of justice and righteousness, so that when you and I retire from Congress and are lying unconscious on our beds, and hear the music of the angels calling and beckoning to us from above, we will hear the voices of those whom we have helped in their hour of need crying and praying for us. Ladies and gentlemen of the House, all of the Federal employees are appealing to you as Republicans and to my party as Democrats, in their great hour of need, not to reduce their salaries. I for one, as a Democrat, am going to listen to their appeal. What will you Republicans do to help them? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

A DIRECT CONSTITUTIONAL REFERENDUM ON THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, on the 19th of February I filed House Joint Resolution 307, which proposes a constitutional amendment providing for a direct constitutional referendum on the eighteenth amendment.

First. This resolution authorizes a direct popular vote of the Nation for or against the eighteenth amendment.

Second. The referendum would automatically follow the adoption of the amendment at the next general congressional election in every State.

Third. Dual majorities would be necessary to accomplish repeal—a nation-wide majority and a majority in each of three-fourths of the States.

This conforms to the present requirement for ratification; that is, three-fourths of the States must concur.

This amendment provides the additional assurance that the eighteenth amendment can not be repealed without majority approval of the voters of the Nation.

Fourth. If repeal secures a nation-wide majority in the first election but not a majority in each of three-fourths of the States, the States voting adversely may reverse their action in separate referendum elections to be held by them within five years thereof.

This conforms to the present constitutional practice which makes the approval of a proposed amendment by a State final but which permits a reversal of its action by a State which votes adversely.

Fifth. The fifth section gives assurance that, notwithstanding repeal, the saloon will not be reestablished.

Sixth. The most important psychological or political phase of this proposal is that the question it presents to a Member of Congress and to a member of a State legislature is purely whether or not he is willing to permit the people to decide this question for themselves. In other words, this does not propose repeal but simply that the people be given a right to vote on the question.

Seventh. It is proposed that the amendment be submitted to the State legislatures instead of to conventions. State legislatures are organized, have regular meeting dates, and are prepared to act without unnecessary expense or delay.

The Federal Government can not require the States to hold conventions nor control the method of selecting their delegates. The State legislature could select the delegates by appropriate action for that purpose, or it might provide for the selection of delegates through district representation instead of a state-wide vote. It is impossible to secure an accurate reflection of popular sentiment through State conventions selected by district representation.

At best the amendment of the Constitution is a slow process. There is no short route. The orderly methods of the Constitution must be regarded. I believe this amendment proposes the most expeditious means by which the controlling vote of the people of the Nation can be obtained on the question of repeal.

Congress and State legislatures will much more readily give their approval to an amendment which simply grants the people the controlling vote on the question than they will assume responsibility for a direct proposal of repeal. The one method simply grants the people the right to decide; the other method proposes what the decision shall be.

If the convention method should be adopted, it would require legislation in each State to provide for the convention, the method of selecting delegates, and an appropriation of funds to pay the expense of the convention.

The convention system of ratifying amendments through the direct election of delegates thereto affords the nearest opportunity the Constitution now provides for a direct vote upon this question; but in my judgment a direct referendum, such as here proposed, will more promptly lead to a vote of the people of the Nation than by proceeding by the convention system. In any event this proposal would secure a direct vote for and against repeal and, I believe, secure a determination more promptly than any other method available under the Constitution.

From the standpoint of a policy for the Government, or for a candidate, this proposal is founded on a just principle of popular democratic government, regardless of the merits of the wet and dry controversy.

The right of the people to vote on their constitutional amendments has practically become an accepted policy of popular government in this country. When the Federal Constitution was adopted, the people of no State, so far as I am aware, had a right to a direct vote on constitutional amendments. To-day 47 of the 48 States refuse to permit an amendment to be adopted without the right of the people to vote thereon.

This proposal would apply that principle to the Federal Constitution.

Prohibition has become one of the great bitter controversial questions of our national history. The court of highest authority in this country for the settlement of the controversy is the people. All other means of deciding this question are subordinate and inferior to a decision by the people themselves. We should not be satisfied with a decision by an inferior court, or method, when the highest court in the Nation is available for that purpose.

The liquor interests when intrenched in power resisted all efforts to secure local option and state-wide votes on the liquor question. It was a group policy that temporarily served their purpose, but as a public policy it was wrong and ultimately failed.

The situation is now reversed. There is a disposition among the drys to resist all attempts to secure a popular vote as to what shall be done with the eighteenth amendment. It is a group policy, but not a good public policy and ultimately will fail. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by including a copy of the bill to which I referred in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

House Joint Resolution 307

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing for a referendum on the eighteenth amendment, and to prohibit saloons

Resolved, etc., That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Each State shall submit to the electors thereof at the next general election at which Representatives in Congress are elected in such State, after five months from the ratification of this article, the question whether or not the eighteenth amendment to this Constitution shall be repealed.

"SEC. 2. If a majority of all the electors so voting thereon shall favor such repeal and if a majority of such electors in each of three-fourths of the several States shall have likewise voted for repeal at such election, or at like elections held separately by States within five years after such election, the eighteenth amendment shall thereby be repealed.

"SEC. 3. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

"SEC. 4. Each State shall submit such question to its electors and determine the result of any election under this article as the law thereof provides, or, in the absence of such State law, in such manner as the Congress shall by law provide.

"SEC. 5. Should the eighteenth amendment be repealed, neither Congress nor any State, Territory, or possession, shall have power to permit or authorize the conduct of a saloon; and it shall be unlawful for any person conducting a saloon to manufacture, transport, possess, or sell intoxicating liquors for any purpose.

"SEC. 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, when the revenue bill was under discussion and about to be passed in the House I offered an amendment in the interest of the match industry of the United States.

I have in my district two very large industries. One is the match industry and the other is the rubber industry. The amendment that I offered was considered by some of the Members of the House as in effect an embargo upon foreign matches, and therefore they held up their hands in holy horror, and upon the promise of the Ways and Means Committee that the match industry would be given careful consideration in the revenue bill I withdrew the amendment.

The revenue bill imposed a tax of 4 cents per thousand on domestic and foreign matches. The match manufacturers of the United States have sent the following communication to the Senate Finance Committee, which I desire to read:

APRIL 5, 1932.

SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned American match companies, representing 98 per cent of the American match output, protest against the proposed excise tax of 4 cents a thousand on matches as passed by the House of Representatives.

Since early in 1928, when the Russians began dumping matches into this country at prices below the American cost of manufacture, the American industry has been continually harassed by foreign-dumped competition it could not meet, and by importations which have avoided the true intent of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, so that not an American match company has been able to show a profit on matches.

Russian and Japanese matches are being sold to-day in the United States at a price equal to the cost of manufacture in this country.

This proposed excise tax is most unfair to the American industry for the following reasons:

While the excessive tax is put on matches not a single article competitive with matches is taxed.

No tax is put on lighters used in place of matches.

No tax is put on electric current used for lighting in place of matches.

No tax is put on gas in place of matches.

No relief is given to the domestic manufacturers from foreign dumped matches.

Most of the excise taxes in the proposed bill are luxury taxes—the match tax is a tax on a necessity.

Compared with other excise taxes in this bill the proposed match tax is:

Four and one-half times the proposed tax on cosmetics, furs, jewelry, sporting goods and cameras, yachts, motor boats, and safety-deposit boxes.

Nine times the proposed tax on chewing gum, radios, phonographs, candy, and mechanical refrigerators.

Fifteen times the proposed tax on automobiles.

Twenty-two and one-half times the proposed tax on trucks.

Forty-five and one-half times the proposed tax on automobile accessories.

Under this proposed tax the consumer will pay on the average 45 per cent more for his matches, as the selling price of matches at present in this country is cost to the American manufacturer. Any tax must be added to the selling price.

We realize that the Budget must be balanced, that the match industry must bear its proportional share of increased taxes, but emphatically protest against this proposed tax in its present form, which severely penalizes matches against its competitive articles, seriously raises the price to the consumer, and is a tax on a necessity from 4 to 45 times as much as other taxes placed on luxuries in the same bill.

Respectfully yours,

The Diamond Match Co., T. J. Reynolds, vice president; The Ohio Match Co., L. H. Meade, vice president; North American Match Co., John G. Daniel, vice president; Federal Match Co., H. W. Williams, vice president; Palmer Match Co., John L. Walker, vice president; Pacific Match Co., O. V. Snyder, president; Sun Match Co. (Inc.), Titus H. Irons, vice president; Lion Match Co., Leo Greenbaum, president; Union Match Co., C. S. Beasley, managing director; Wisconsin Match Corporation, B. C. Snead, vice president; Columbia Match Co., J. H. Weaver, president; Empire Match Co., K. Friedman, secretary; America's Own Match Co., Ned. G. Begle, president; General Match Co., J. C. Peurrung, president.

Before I conclude let me say that during the discussion on the revenue bill the gentleman from Pennsylvania said American manufacturers going abroad and building plants there were white ants consuming and destroying the American Government. The gentleman from New York said that American manufacturers were going abroad and building plants for the purpose of exploiting foreign labor. I want to give you some facts if you will bear with me a few minutes.

Prior to 1927 the rubber industry of Akron, which is the center of the rubber industry, was manufacturing substantially all of the tires for Great Britain and her dominions. Great Britain had two plants there—the Michelin Co. and the Dunlop Co. The Akron manufacturers were manufacturing at Akron, Ohio, and selling hundreds of thousands of tires abroad. They had spent millions of dollars advertising their brands, had established agencies all through Great Britain and its dominions, and had their dealers and their wholesale organizations and their inventories over there in Great Britain. Great Britain put a tariff on tires and tubes in 1927 of 33⅓ per cent. This tariff was an absolute embargo upon American tires and tubes going into Great Britain.

The result was that the Akron manufacturers had to make up their minds whether they would give up this business they had in Great Britain and its dominions after spending all these millions of dollars in building up and advertising their brands and getting established and building up good will throughout the territory controlled by Great Britain, or whether they would go in there and build plants. They could not pay the tariff of 33⅓ per cent. Their only alternative to building manufacturing plants in Great Britain was to withdraw and leave the entire business to the Dunlop and Michelin companies, who had plants there.

The conclusion they came to was that they had to go to Great Britain and build these plants. They went into Great Britain in 1927 and they built three rubber plants with an investment of about $21,000,000. Some of this investment was British capital.

I want to call your attention to the fact that this tariff of Great Britain was put on in 1927, three years before the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill was passed; and therefore it was not a retaliatory tariff. However, it was a tariff which was an absolute embargo upon American tires and tubes going into Great Britain.

You have heard a lot of talk here about the reduction of Federal salaries. If you will give employment to American labor, you will not have to discuss the question of reducing Federal salaries.

If you will so arrange the taxes under this revenue bill and so arrange your tariff that we can manufacture in this country the manufactured goods we consume, then you will give employment to American labor. That is exactly what Great Britain and these foreign countries are doing. Great Britain put this tariff on and changed its policy with reference to the tariff because it had several millions out of employment. To-day these tires which were formerly made in this country with American labor, with cotton grown in America, and with fabric made in America, are being manufactured in Great Britain with British labor and this country is losing all of the advantage because of the British tariff, which in effect is an embargo.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think the gentleman referred to me as the gentleman from New York who made that statement. I want to say to the gentleman that he is most unfortunate in the selection of his industry as an illustration to contradict what I said. Let me refer the gentleman to a survey made by the Department of State of the American rubber industry in Liberia, and he will see I put it very mildly.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Let me say this to the gentleman, that Akron manufacturers did not go abroad to exploit foreign labor nor did they go there to destroy the American Government. They went abroad because they had to go or lose their business in Great Britain to British manufacturers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman has attributed too much of that statement to me.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time to call to the attention, especially of southern Members, that I am informed that there has been a recent advance in price on sulphate of ammonia, which is a further burden on the farmer at a time when he is practically bankrupt. For the past six months an investigation has been going on by the Treasury Department at the request of the manufacturers in the United States, largely the steel corporations, for the purpose of placing a duty on the importation of foreign sulphate of ammonia.

On last Monday a conference was held with the Treasury officials and the manufacturers of this product, which apparently will bring about a final decision of the Treasury in this matter. It seems that these manufacturers of sulphate of ammonia have reasons to believe that the Treasury Department will pass favorably on their request which may be the cause of this advance in price at this time.

It may be of interest to you to know that about 12 months ago I was informed that the manufacturers of sulphate of ammonia in this country tried to form a combination with Germany and other importing countries for the purpose of controlling and fixing prices of this product in line with the nitrate combination. It is my understanding that Germany would not stand for this. Certainly this advance in price at this time is not warranted because of a shortage of sulphate of ammonia to take care of the present demand. I am informed by the Department of Commerce that while the production of sulphate of ammonia in the United States decreased 32 per cent during the first two months of this year in comparison with the first two months of last year, largely because of the inactivity of the steel mills, imports have increased over 50 per cent. I am hoping that those of you interested in the cotton farmer of the South will join with me in trying to ascertain just why there is an advance at this time when farmers in the United States are receiving small loans from their Government for the purpose of buying fertilizer. I have been promised the privilege of being heard before the Treasury Department before they put into execution provisions of the antidumping act placing a duty on imports of sulphate of ammonia. I am hoping many of you will join with me in my fight for the protection of the farmer, who apparently is about to be robbed because of an unfair increase in price and the placing of a duty on this very necessary product for farm purposes at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the committee approached the formulation of this bill in a very sympathetic frame of mind. There was not a member of the committee who was not anxious to make ample provision for every essential department of the District government. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, we felt it was incumbent on the committee to effect every legitimate economy. As a matter of fact we were under tacit instructions from the House which materially circumscribed the latitude of the committee in recommending appropriations. The House, by its unanimous action on the resolution repealing the 60-40 law and by the passage of the four Mapes bills providing approximately $3,000,000 additional District revenue, left the committee no choice but to reduce the proposed amount of the Federal contribution from $9,500,000 to $6,000,000. In addition, the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations restricting subcommittees to the estimates submitted by the Budget Bureau, the decline in commodity prices, and the general demand for retrenchment of Government expenditures, rendered reductions imperative. In response to these urgent requirements, the committee have reduced practically all items in the bill with the exception of those providing for schools, hospitals, and libraries.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, the fact that we have denied no recommendation or request by the authorities for either buildings or teachers for the public schools. And we have provided practically every facility requested for the Public Library with the single exception of a branch library which, under the circumstances, the committee thought could be postponed without prejudice.

The adequacy of the appropriations recommended by the committee is shown by a comparison of the amounts carried in this bill with the amounts appropriated for similar items in 1923, just one decade ago. For example, in 1923, $57,690 was appropriated for building inspection. This year we provide $161,200. In 1923, $31,520 was provided for personal services for the Public Utilities Commission. This year it is $101,440. In 1923 the appropriation for the office of corporation counsel amounted to $23,420. This bill carries for that office $89,380. As late as 1928 we appropriated $25,300 for the department of vehicles and traffic, while this year we provide $70,360. And similar increases are found throughout the bill. These increases are out of all proportion to increases in the population and service of the city and the District and, so far as I am able to learn, constitutes the most notable increase by percentage of any comparable city in the country.

Practically all the amounts carried in the bill have been determined by the unanimous action of the committee. And I want to take advantage of the opportunity to express appreciation of the work and cooperation of all members of the subcommittee, and especially of the invaluable service rendered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY], the ranking member of the minority.

Mr. Chairman, general debate has been exhausted and I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, there are no requests for further time, and I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

For two commissioners at $7,500 each; people's counsel, $7,500; and for other personal services; in all $101,440, of which amount not to exceed $5,000 may be used for the employment of expert services by contract or otherwise and without reference to the classification act of 1923, as amended.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 7, after the paragraph ending on line 13, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used for or in connection with the preparation, issuance, publication, or enforcement of any regulation or order of the Public Utilities Commission requiring the installation of meters in taxicabs."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to explain the real purport of the amendment now under consideration.

Mr. CANNON. This is the item discussed at length by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], both members of the committee. The amendment is offered for the purpose of continuing present taxicab rates and regulations in the District.

Mr. STAFFORD. The ultimate object is to nullify the order of the chairman of the Utilities Commission, so far as banning general taxicabs in the District is concerned.

Mr. CANNON. And to prevent a large number of taxicab drivers from being driven out of the only profession they can follow at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assumed that was the purpose of the amendment, but I wanted to have the statement made that that was its purpose.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am in sympathy with this amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Every Member is in sympathy with it else a point of order would have been made against the amendment and it would have been stricken out with a bludgeon.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee how much it costs to install one of these meters?

Mr. CANNON. I am told that the expense would probably approximate $125 per car.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that would put a great many of these taxicab drivers out of commission.

Mr. CANNON. Hundreds of them who have no other means of livelihood.

Mr. STAFFORD. And this is the only way to protect them?

Mr. CANNON. To protect them and at the same time protect the public from exhorbitant charges for transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY

For personal services, and for substitutes and other special and temporary services, including extra services on Sundays, holidays, and Saturday half holidays, at the discretion of the librarian, $319,440.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

What is the occasion for the increase of $23,000 plus in the salary allowance for the free Public Library?

Mr. CANNON. It is occasioned by a consolidation. We consolidated two items, the item for substitute and temporary clerk hire, and no actual increase is involved.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

MUNICIPAL CENTER

For the acquisition of land in the municipal center, and for grading and paving of streets, and relocation and construction of District of Columbia owned utilities within and/or adjacent to the municipal center, $222,000, and in addition thereto not to exceed $1,278,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the municipal center contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932, of which sums not to exceed $900,000 shall be available for the acquisition of land in the municipal center, and not to exceed $600,000 shall be available for grading and paving of streets, and relocation and construction of District of Columbia owned utilities within and/or adjacent to the municipal center.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am certain the large membership that is absent from the Chamber is interested in the work that is going on in connection with the municipal center. I notice you have a considerable appropriation here. Just what is proposed to be done toward continuing to expend large amounts of money for the improvement of the municipal center? Here you have an appropriation of $1,250,000 or more for this work. This includes the purchasing of land, and I have always taken the position that it is rather an imposition upon the good patience of the taxpayers of this country to purchase land in the District for the building of ornate Government buildings in these pressing times. I think the country and the membership that is not here would like to know just what is the policy recommended by the committee with respect to the building of this ornate municipal center.

Mr. CANNON. None of this appropriation is for building purposes. We are appropriating here $222,000 which, with a reappropriation of $1,278,000 provides $1,500,000 to be expended during the coming year.

Mr. STAFFORD. For what purpose?

Mr. CANNON. At the express request of the Commissioners of the District we made no appropriation for buildings. Nine hundred thousand dollars of the $1,500,000 is to be used for the purchase of the remaining lots in the municipal area not yet acquired by the District.

Mr. STAFFORD. Everyone knows that real-estate values are not going up, and yet the Government is buying real estate in the District at the expense of the taxpayers. I can realize that there may be some justification for giving employment to labor in the matter of building, but I can not see any justification for appropriating $1,500,000 for the purchase of old, dilapidated buildings on property that will not appreciate in these times, just for the benefit of the landed gentry.

Mr. CANNON. I heartily concur in everything that the gentleman from Wisconsin has said. I am happy to note that he and I are together on all matters of economy, and I am certain he will indorse the action of the committee when I explain that the reason this land has not been bought before this time is because we insisted on getting it at a reasonable price. We have already bought all the land in the Municipal Center project that could be secured at a reasonable price, and what remains to be purchased is land for which the owners ask more than we think we should pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is all the more reason why we should not now recognize them, even if they have come down to a reasonable plane. They should be punished to that extent, because you are punishing the taxpayers of the country by appropriating $1,500,000 for the purchase of virtually bare lots with some old rookeries on them.

Mr. CANNON. The appropriating of this $900,000 does not mean we are going to buy this land at the price asked by the owners. We merely want to have it available in the event any of them are willing to sell at a reasonable price.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, next year and the year following and two years thereafter, if I know anything about realty values, you can buy the property for less than you can buy it to-day.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can be certain we shall not pay more than the land is worth.

Mr. STAFFORD. But you are taxing my people and the people of the country to the extent of $1,500,000 for the purchase of unnecessary land.

Mr. CANNON. The commissioners simply want to be in a position where they can acquire the land if they have opportunities to buy it at a reasonable price.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who is there in the country to-day that has land that is not willing to sell it?

Mr. CANNON. There are several owners who have been holding out for an exorbitant price.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I would keep them holding out for an exorbitant price for 10 years to come, or until business conditions got better.

Mr. CANNON. I heartily agree with the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 17, beginning in line 5, strike out the paragraph ending with line 18.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LANHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11361) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and had come to no resolution thereon.

RATIFICATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

By the secretary of state.

This is to certify the foregoing and hereto attached typewritten copy of a joint resolution, entitled "A joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the terms of the President and Vice President and Members of Congress," to be true and correct as taken from and compared with the original joint resolution so entitled, now on file in the office of the secretary of state.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at Columbia, this 31st day of March, 1932.

[SEAL.] W. P. BLACKWELL,
Secretary of State.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DRANE, for an indefinite time, on account of important business.

To Mr. KLEBERG, for three days, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. CROWTHER, for three days, on account of important business.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the life of Thomas Jefferson, delivered over station WJSV at Washington, D. C., April 13, 1932, by our very distinguished colleague, Hon. EDWARD E. ESLICK, of Tennessee, upon the invitation of the Society for National Capital Memorial of Thomas Jefferson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address is as follows:

Thomas Jefferson was born in Albemarle County, Va., April 13, 1743. One hundred and eighty-nine years ago was born the most far-seeing and constructive statesman of the western world.

When America belonged to Great Britain, he visualized a new nation—a republic. He had read the history of nations, and he knew the story of mankind. He dreamed, when America was an English possession, and pointed the way to the future. His dream came true when the new Republic was welcomed into the family of nations. He was the evangel holding aloft the light and proclaiming the way; the pathfinder pointing the route to a future greatness and a deserved glory.

Jefferson gave to history more broad principles of government than any other man—more suggestions to correctly govern human society than any of the others of his day and generation.

He proclaimed a declaration of principles to govern man and country. May I not call this roll, devoting only a sentence to each of them?

He proclaimed the sovereignty of the people and his abiding faith in democratic government.

He denounced the privileged orders of nobility and the entail system of property rights. He declared for their overthrow.

He declared for universal education and for local circulating and public libraries.

He challenged the union of church and state. He demanded their separation.

He believed that no people could be happy and contented without freedom of speech and thought.

Local self-government was dear to him, and it was the heart of the Democracy he believed in.

Economy in government was essential to the prosperity of the people, and large national debts were a public detriment.

He believed in a policy of peace; that the nations that lived by the sword died by the sword; that the nation that risked its life upon the keen edge of the bayonet was destined to go in the carnage of the battlefield.

He believed in the equality of man and political equality; in manhood or universal suffrage; that these were the unquestioned rights of a free people.

His faith was in the sovereignty of the States. He believed in a strict construction of the Constitution.

He did not believe in a great standing army but in a well-trained militia.

He was opposed to gratuities, bounties, and monopolies. He looked upon these as favors passing to the few at the expense of the many.

He wanted to emancipate all slaves and deport them.

He believed in the expansion of the United States, including Louisiana, Florida, Cuba, and Canada.

The Louisiana Purchase, nearly one-half of the present United States of America, was consummated by him. He paid the pittance of $15,000,000 in the greatest land purchase and sale ever recorded in human history.

He was just to the Indians, and in his fairness to them he believed in the maintenance of Indian reservations.

He advocated a judiciary without the control of the legislative or executive branches of Government. He believed the three departments of Government—legislative, executive, and judicial—were distinct and should be kept separate and apart each from the other.

He believed it was the province of the courts to interpret the laws, not to write legislation into opinions. This was his quarrel with Chief Justice Marshall.

He believed in a small navy.

He thought one of the safeguards of the Nation was rotation in office.

His devotion to the Union was never questioned. His opposition was adamant to all movements, North or South, looking to secession.

Very few of our people know that Jefferson was the first prominent man to lift his voice against African slavery in this country. Public sentiment favored slavery. When a member of the Continental Congress, and as chairman of the committee to propose a plan to govern the Northwest Territory and the territory that embraced the present States of Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, and my home State of Tennessee, he offered this resolution to abolish slavery:

"After the year 1800 of the Christian era there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of the said States otherwise than in punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted to have been personally guilty."

This was in 1774, 5 years before the adoption of the Federal Constitution—35 years before Abraham Lincoln was born and 91 years before Senator John P. Henderson, of Missouri, proposed the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution abolishing slavery and involuntary servitude in the United States. If you will compare the thirteenth amendment and the Jefferson resolution, you will find them to be in almost identical language. The thirteenth amendment carried out what the Jefferson resolution sought to do 91 years prior to 1865 but failed by a single vote.

Jefferson retired from Congress in 1776. He entered the Virginia Legislature for the purpose of bringing her laws into accord and harmony with his conception of Democratic government. During this time he broke down the English law of primogeniture and entail. He fathered and passed the law for public education. In fact, he created a system of education from the primary school to the university, probably the most complete and perfect system of education in any State in the Union.

He was on a committee with Edmund Pendleton and George Wythe to revise the laws of Virginia. Jefferson did most of the work. The legislature refused to ratify part of his work. In 1785, when he was away in France, his great friend, James Madison, secured the passage into law of nearly all of his proposals. Included was the famous statute for religious freedom in Virginia, in which there was a complete separation of church and state.

Upon this question Jefferson had differed widely with two other very great Virginians. They opposed his views. These men were the immortal Washington and the great orator of the Revolution, Patrick Henry. It was to these men Jefferson said, "I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man." What a declaration! The challenge of a crusader and the battle cry of a revolutionist!

We must not forget that Jefferson's creative statesmanship belonged to four important periods of our history—when we were an English colony, the transition from colony to independent government, the creation of government and the adoption of its policies, and the first two decades in the life of the young Republic. Jefferson was on trial in all four periods. He measured up to the highest requirements—the pilot who kept to the charted course in the night of national storm as well as in the sunshine of the open-eyed, watchful day.

In the great crises of the world the Master measures human destiny, and the man and the occasion meet. Jefferson, the statesman, the philosopher, and the creative genius, never failed his people in the hour when liberty, protection, and happiness were involved. The historian has called it fate, labor, destiny. I care not which. The Sage of Monticello belongs to the ages. A large part of American history is his monument. Truly is he great in the record of our greatness, measured by accomplishment, the only standard by which men shall live.

The modern historian has given Jefferson scant credit in the framing of the Constitution. He was dissatisfied with it and opposed it unless amended. It was at his request and upon his suggestion, and moved by his followers, that the first 10 amendments were added. These constitute the American Bill of Rights. They are the real covenants of our safety, the safeguards for the citizenship of the land.

I can not go into them in detail. They guarantee religious liberty; freedom of speech and of the press; peaceable assembly; the right to petition the Government; the right to bear arms for protection; soldiers shall not be quartered in private homes; the denial of unreasonable search and seizure; that the accused must be indicted by a grand jury, and can not be compelled to testify against himself; that no man shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; that in criminal cases the defendant shall have a speedy trial. Trial by jury is guaranteed. That excessive bail is prohibited; that the rights of the States not expressly granted are reserved to the States.

Mr. Jefferson suggested and caused the passage of these amendments known to the world as our bill of rights.

Jefferson is best known as the author of the Declaration of Independence—the child of his brain and pen. He gave utterance to his philosophy of government in this great state paper. That all men are created equal; that they are endowed with certain inalienable rights; that life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness belong to all peoples. And that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed—a fundamental philosophy expressed by Lincoln at a later date in a single sentence: "A government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

Jefferson had his battle over the Constitution. He won in the amendments forming the Bill of Rights. Two very able men sat in the Cabinet of President Washington. Jefferson was Secretary of State. His brilliant rival, Alexander Hamilton, was Secretary of the Treasury. There was a conflict of opinion on governmental policy. Each represented a different school of thought. May I not contrast them for a moment? Jefferson believed in the sacred rights of man, while Hamilton believed in a strong government for the benefit of the few and powerful—the classes. Hamilton believed in property qualification of suffrage. Jefferson advocated manhood suffrage. He was a liberal, while Hamilton was a conservative. Jefferson thought of the individual. Hamilton saw only the state. Jefferson believed that governments should serve the masses, with equal justice and without favor of special privileges. Hamilton taught the doctrine of special favor to the rich and powerful—he believed in privilege for the exclusive classes. Jefferson marshaled democracy against aristocracy—and won.

The days of Jefferson and Hamilton saw the same philosophy of government, with the same issues dividing the people, that we have to-day—money against man, materialism against humanity, property rights against human rights. Jefferson stood for mankind; Hamilton for materialism and property rights. Through the long years these issues have lived. And they are with us to-day more clearly and concisely drawn than at any time in the life of this Republic.

For almost half a century the Jefferson policy of government obtained. Nearly all the while it was a rule of the people. But not so in the last third of a century. We have drifted away from the old Jeffersonian doctrine. The classes have benefited in privilege and by special legislation. The land of opportunity and equal chance has been sent adrift. Instead of equal opportunity and a fair distribution of wealth, ours has become a land of privilege under the law and an aristocracy of wealth. The economic condition of to-day is the price of this un-American policy. Thirty per cent of our population are hungry and naked. More than 8,000,000 men belong to the great army of the unemployed. There are more men to-day tramping the streets than ever before in any one nation in the tides of time.

More men in the army of the idle and unemployed to-day than all the combined men who ever stood in the armies, under the Stars and Stripes in time of war, in the more than hundred and fifty years of our existence. In a single year 504 men paid on a hundred and forty-two million dollars more net incomes than the gross sales of the great American wheat, cotton, and tobacco crops combined produced in an area where the population numbered 20,000,000 people. What an indictment of privilege. What a challenge to the wrongs inflicted upon the great basic producers of this Nation.

Two ex-Presidents died July 4, 1826. The last words of the New England Puritan, John Adams, were "Jefferson survives." Jefferson was then dead. Jefferson met his Pilot face to face, and in that solemn hour he thought of his country in death as in life. His last utterance was: "I commend my daughter to my country and my soul to the God who gave it."

They wrapped him in the mantle of his many glories and laid the Sage of Monticello to rest near his home. He had held offices from justice of the peace to President; a Member of the Continental Congress, Governor of Virginia, Secretary of State, minister to France, Vice President, and twice President; but when the inscription he desired chiseled in the rock to be above him in the long night of his sleep, it was not his desire to tell of the offices bestowed upon him but of the things he regarded as the best of his life's work. He directed carved there that he was the author of the Declaration of Independence, the author of the statute of religious freedom in Virginia, and the father of the University of Virginia.

May I not say that the time has come for us to return to the Jefferson policy of Government if this great Republic is to endure and fulfill its pledges and promises made in the long ago. The time has come when economy shall take the place of extravagance; simplicity over show; substance over shadow. Man must be master and money the servant. Invisible government must give way to actual government; first place must be given to human rights above property rights.

Patriotism must be measured in service to country and its people. It shall not be weighed by worship of the golden calf and a defense of corporate greed. Ours must be a democracy for men—not an aristocracy of wealth.

Let the world look upon our flag as it shall become the emblem of freedom and protection, guaranteeing equal rights to all peoples who avow their allegiance to it and invoke its protection.

When the warm heartbeat of mankind shall take the place of the clink of gold, when privilege shall yield to the policy of the greatest good to the greatest numbers, when greed and selfishness shall bow to the demand of public welfare, we may well believe in the age that equal and exact justice to all and special privilege to none is the return of the Jefferson age and policy of government.

The stability of government depends upon the happiness and contentment of the people. To-day our people are unhappy. It is hard to measure the feeling of unrest. We must face the future with uncertainty or with hope and faith.

Believing as I do in the principles of Jefferson, and believing that the just cause is a winning cause, I shall expect a return to the Jefferson principles, when we shall have the government of our fathers again. With a happy and contented citizenship we will face the future with an abiding faith in the belief that the Republic, built upon the foundations conceived by the sage of Monticello, shall live and lead the way in the march of human progress until that blessed hour when light shall meet twilight in the morning of God's perfect day.

Mr. McCORMACK. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a recent address by the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] on the life of Thomas Jefferson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by the Hon. MARY T. NORTON, Member of Congress, at the luncheon in honor of the birthday of Thomas Jefferson, at the Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., April 13, 1932.

It is a great privilege and pleasure to address this distinguished audience from all parts of the country, meeting in the Capital City of the Nation to celebrate the one hundred and eighty-ninth anniversary of the birth of that great, indeed, I may say greatest of all Democrats, our beloved Thomas Jefferson.

What can I tell you about this man that every other Democrat could not tell you much better perhaps than I? You know that he was an inspired idealist, yet one of the greatest statesmen and politicians of all time. Can one read the Declaration of Independence without experiencing a justifiable pride in the fact that he, the author of that noble document, was, and still is, our very own—the patron saint of a great party that has withstood many storms and emerges as the only hope of a demoralized and saddened people?

Would that he were here to-day to show us the way. His optimism, his ability to do the thing he believed to be right, even in the face of unequaled difficulties, seems to have been the keynote of his unmatched leadership. Then, as now, our country felt the need of a great leader, and it turned to him as the savior of mankind, believing in and following his peerless leadership. The world has but little use for half-hearted men and women; it applauds and adores those who have the courage to carry on when dark clouds obscure the horizon. Is it, then, strange that those of us who believe in the principles he believed in are here to-day to renew our faith in the party for which he gave his life? Are we worthy of the eternal heritage of honesty, loyalty, and devotion that he has handed down to those of us fortunate enough to be members of his great party? And are we worthy to carry on where he and other equally illustrious leaders of Democracy have left off? I submit that we are not worthy of this great heritage if we do not to-day meet the issue that is before us fearlessly and pledge ourselves to give the best we have to give to ameliorate the pitiful condition of a leaderless, unhappy people.

Perhaps out of all the misery of the past three years good may come to our Nation. Pray God that it will come. Let us hope so, but as one Democrat I entertain serious doubts that it will come soon unless some drastic steps are taken to reduce Government expenditures. I resent the fact that after the worst orgy of spending ever witnessed in this country it has become our unhappy task to bring more unhappiness by levying taxes to keep the Nation solvent.

It would seem to me to be in order to-day to look over the events of the past several years to find the reason for a depleted Treasury and more than 8,000,000 men and women unable to find work. Let us then examine the facts:

Since the Democrats organized the House of Representatives much has been heard of "balancing the Budget." So much that the majority of people during these past few months have become "budget conscious" and are asking why we did not hear more of this balancing process during the past two years, when under a Republican administration we strayed off the balanced Budget. Why should the Democrats be obliged to balance something without balance for more than two years? These are a few of the questions asked by every man and woman interested in government, and the answer may and probably will awaken a long-dormant electorate. People will soon begin to understand that a reckless, extravagant Republican administration during 12 years (several of which witnessed the greatest prosperity of our Nation) is responsible for a large part of our present difficulty. I have been so much interested in trying to find out just how this great deficit could happen in view of the much-talked-of Republican economy that I secured a most interesting publication entitled "The Budget, 1933."

The Budget, as you probably know, is a Republican institution originating in the late lamented Harding régime, when Republican disciples of economy embarked on that celebrated "back to normalcy" voyage that landed some of them in the penitentiary and others in oblivion. The "Budget" is just a bewildering array of statistics. It serves, however, to give one a real picture of Republican economy programs, past and present.

The Department of Commerce figures are especially interesting, particularly so since the completion of the $17,500,000 building to house Federal employees whose meager salaries are now in jeopardy. I like fine buildings and believe the greatest Capital in the world is entitled to anything within reason, but the thought persists that a government like an individual should have known that a "rainy day" would come and instead of spending lavishly and unnecessarily placed in reserve half of the millions used in this monument of extravagance.

Expenditures of Government money, within reason, are justifiable only when such expenditures produce results. I mean by that statement when one can point to definite benefits that have accrued to the Government from the use of such funds. The Republican administration has squandered money on the Department of Commerce and some of its newer divisions with the prodigality of the proverbial drunken sailor. Results achieved by this department over a period of 12 years do not justify the extravagance with which money has been appropriated for its use.

Of course, as we all know, this widely advertised department made a convenient stepping-stone to the Presidency for our current Chief Executive. Expenditures of this department during the Harding and Coolidge administrations, when Mr. Hoover was its Secretary, make interesting reading and stand, I submit, as one of the chief reasons why we Democrats have inherited this horrible nightmare called "balancing the Budget."

Expenditures in the Department of Commerce in 1921 aggregate $30,828,761.55. In 1931 these expenditures had mounted to the staggering sum of $61,477,117.63; this is an increase of over $30,000,000. Thirty million dollars in 10 years, mind you!

I am not opposed to a policy that would stimulate foreign trade. Sound foreign-trade policies are essential to the economic welfare of every nation, but I am unalterably opposed to the continued maintenance of a bureau that is a "white elephant" of gigantic proportions. I refer to Mr. Hoover's fair-haired child, the Division of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce.

To get a correct picture of this bureau it is necessary to take a look into the list of high-salaried commissioners, attachés, and clerks sent to the four corners of the world to do the work that heretofore had been and could be done more satisfactorily by our Consular Service. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, regardless of the highly seasoned propaganda, has not justified the price it has cost.

With hundreds of trade commissioners in every part of Europe and the Far East supposed to stimulate trade, our exports in 1931 were 37 per cent less than in 1930, less than half as large as in 1929, and the lowest value recorded since 1914. What argument can, therefore, justify the personnel of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce?

For the business of promoting commerce, so called, the expense is $457,572; in Latin America, $255,821; in the Far East, $149,072.

For promoting commerce in Africa, the cost to the Government is $52,500.

As a result of this great expenditure, what can we show on the other side of the sheet? Just this—that our exports have decreased in 1930 from three billions eight hundred and forty-three millions to something over two billions in 1931, or back to where we were in 1915, which goes to prove that the Department of Commerce has been and is the most costly bureau any government ever attempted to support. It can not be justified and should, to a large extent, be eliminated. I have only tried to present a short sketch of this department. To make a complete picture would require more time than is at my disposal to-day, and it would be necessary for me to go into the extravagant details of the 101 offices maintained by this bureau throughout the United States, as well as in Europe, Africa, and the Far East.

This brings me back to the subject of why the Democrats upon assuming control of Congress in the year 1932 were obliged to pass several bills, namely:

Two billion dollar Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, to aid the bankers; Glass-Steagall banking bill, to improve the facilities of the Federal reserve system; $10,000,000 agricultural credit and revolving fund; and $137,000,000 road aid bill, to help restore confidence to a discouraged people; and also to adopt a taxation bill to balance the Budget.

It has not been an easy task nor have we enjoyed it but we have felt as patriotic citizens we were obliged to do so. We know that even our optimistic citizens are losing courage and as a result they intend to place responsibility for the Hoover economic war.

While it is true that world conditions have, to some extent, upset our economic equilibrium, it is equally true that in such an emergency we should have had the wisest and finest type of leadership and even most of our Republican friends freely admit that this has been lacking. When the wheels of commerce are turning briskly any kind of leadership seems good leadership. It is only when the motor stalls and the wheels stop moving that real leadership is necessary and should be forthcoming.

We are now at the crossroads—looking backward we see long lines of men, women, and children on the verge of starvation in a country rich and powerful, pleading for an opportunity to work and live according to the accepted standard of living—their pleading unheard because our Government has lost the common touch. We see on all sides discontent and unhappiness. Laws enacted to destroy, not to upbuild. Taxes levied on essentials and the people denied the privilege of even voting on whether or not certain laws with which they are not in accord should be continued.

We have, then, the other road ahead—the road which should be strewn with the demolition of many unnecessary, extravagant departments or bureaus, chief of which should be the Department of Commerce, and next the so-called Bureau of Enforcement, otherwise known as the Prohibition Bureau. When one attempts to list the offenses committed in the name of this bureau, words fail. From the passage of the eighteenth amendment up to this year of 1932 the noble experiment has cost the American people, in dollars, three hundred and seventy million three hundred and sixty thousand five hundred and eighty-five. This sum is based upon official figures. This does not take into consideration the revenue which could be had from a legalized tax on beer and wine; while the cost in murders, suicides, corruption, crime, and prison and insane-asylum upkeep can not be estimated.

While all of this is developing, the leader of our country is not sufficiently interested to even attempt to discover the remedy. May I ask you to compare in your own minds the course which Jefferson would have followed if confronted with similar conditions? Can you imagine that sturdy friend of human rights and foe of paternalism in government indorsing a program involving vast payments of public funds in foreign countries for the benefit of the powerful few with world ambitions? Jefferson's devotion to human liberty, his determination to protect those who require protection gives ample proof of the scorn with which he would have viewed these developments.

What, then, is our task? It is to bring about the kind of leadership that will have the courage to lead, not trail along with expediency nor with what appears to be the popular lead, but strike out as a party interested in returning government to a long-suffering people. A leadership strong and courageous to do the right thing at a time when the right thing is a necessity.

Let the Democrats nominate a man whom the country will trust—Main Street as well as Wall Street—then go out and elect him. That is our job, and if you have the right kind of courage, you will not quit the job until a Democrat goes to the White House, elected by the greatest majority any candidate has ever received.

THOMAS JEFFERSON AND PRESENT DAY DEMOCRACY

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address by Representative FRANK CROWTHER, of New York, delivered on Tuesday evening, April 12, 1932, over the National Broadcasting Co. chain in a nation-wide hook-up.

One hundred and eighty-nine years ago to-morrow Thomas Jefferson was born in the colony of Virginia. He was one of America's greatest statesmen. To him is ascribed the authorship of the Declaration of Independence. He was a leader in the Continental Congress. He was first Secretary of State, during the administration of George Washington; our second Vice President, during the administration of John Adams; and our third President, which position he filled for eight years. His achievements constitute a common heritage for all Americans. His advice as to the conduct of public affairs was sound and is as timely to-day as when he gave it, because it was based upon those fundamentals of political economy which time can not change or circumstances alter.

The Democratic Party of to-day claims Jefferson as its founder. It calls itself the party of Jefferson. In point of fact, it is not. There is no need to speculate upon its pretensions. We have the record before us. Here is what Jefferson thought of the favorite present-day Democratic practice of "soaking the rich":

"To take away from one because it is thought that his own industry and that of his father's has acquired too much in order to give to others who, or whose fathers, have not exercised equal industry and skill, is to violate arbitrarily the first principle of association, namely, the guaranty to everyone of a free exercise of his industry and the fruits acquired by it."

To-morrow evening there is scheduled in this city—the Nation's Capital—a Jefferson Day Democratic banquet. Democratic celebrities of national reputation are advertised to attend and speak. All living unsuccessful Democratic candidates for President—a very formidable group in itself—are on the program. All candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination this year are invited. Democratic leaders in both branches of the present Congress have promised their attendance.

These will include those Democratic Members of the House of Representatives whose speeches and votes upon the tax bill reported by their own leaders became so radical that their floor leader, Representative RAINEY, told them in open session their actions bordered upon communism and their program, if put into effect, meant confiscation of wealth and a penalization of thrift that would place the United States on the level of Soviet Russia. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the past month contains hundreds of pages of Democratic speeches urging that the accumulations of the thrifty and skillful and industrious be taken away from them, that the rich be "soaked" in every possible way and from every possible angle.

Yet, those Democrats, after spending a month in making a butchery of the economic principles advocated by Jefferson, will assemble to-morrow evening to render lip service to his memory and, with a straight and unblushing face, proclaim themselves his political posterity.

Prominent Democratic Senators will be in attendance, Senators who have acquired a national reputation advocating redistribution of wealth and "soaking the rich," Senators who will, within a few days, be speaking and voting in support of tax rates that will seek to take from those who have been industrious and forehanded the fruits of their industry. There will be the flower and the chivalry of the Democratic Party, its leaders and spokesmen, invoking the name of Jefferson at the banquet table and preparing to return to the legislative halls to dishonor his precepts.

Democratic Congressmen whose names are attached to bills introduced in this Congress calling for appropriations of billions of dollars for pork and plunder will be in attendance to profess their devotion to the principles of Jefferson, who, in his day, rebuked Congress for "its dissipation and waste of public funds" and for "its seeking objects whereon to throw away the supposed fathomless funds of the Federal Treasury."

The States of Mississippi and South Carolina are 100 per cent Democratic. They have never had a Republican State official. They have never had a Republican sitting in either branch of their State legislature. Democrats have had complete and uninterrupted domination of those States since they were organized and admitted into the Union.

The State of Mississippi last week witnessed the sale of 60,000 farms under the sheriff's hammer to satisfy tax claims, and a week before the State House was mobbed by indignant citizens gathered from all quarters of that Commonwealth to protest the enactment of still more burdensome State taxes.

The comptroller general of the State of South Carolina, in his last annual report, showed that State on the highway to bankruptcy, with Democratic State and county officials drawing salaries equal to, according to his statement, 20 per cent of the total value of the cotton and tobacco crops of that State. Under the Democratic State administration of Tennessee, and because of it, that State is unable to pay its employees, meet other routine expenditures, and only with the greatest of difficulty is able to negotiate temporary loans. These are but a few examples of the fiscal policies which prevail in States in control of the Democratic Party.

No doubt, distinguished Democratic representatives from those States will be seated at the banquet table to-morrow evening to orate of their devotion to the principles of Thomas Jefferson, whose writings as a statesman and whose official communications as a President were filled with exhortations to public economy.

Side by side with them will sit Democrats from the State of New York whose Democratic governor, in an address over this network under the auspices of this program last week, showed himself possessed of that outstanding quality so essential to typical Democratic leadership, namely, demagoguery. He phrased an attack upon President Hoover and the Republican administration by charging they had placed a $2,000,000,000 fund at the disposal of the big banks, and in so doing had ignored the necessities of the local banks, the little business men, and the farmer.

Fortunately, in the interest of truth, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which is the $2,000,000,000 organization he referred to, must under the law make a report to Congress every three months of its activities. Its first report has been filed and it shows that, among other things, it extended aid to 91 Iowa banks and trust companies, the largest number aided in any State. However, to mention a few other States, it shows that this corporation aided 21 Alabama banks, Arkansas 20, Georgia 26, Louisiana 18, Kentucky 14, Missouri 39, Montana 14, Nebraska 27, North Dakota 10, Oklahoma 28, South Dakota 15, Washington 46, Virginia 30, and so on, to the total number of 582.

It needs no elaboration to convince anyone that those banks in those States are not big-business banks. They are local banks, and by helping them weather the storm every individual in their community was saved from possible financial disaster, if not actual privation and suffering.

This information was available to Governor Roosevelt before he made his prepared address. It had been printed in detail in all metropolitan papers, including those of New York City, which are on the governor's desk every morning when he reaches his office. His charging that the administration was playing favorites at the expense of the little fellow was a base and unwarranted misrepresentation, not to be excused even when made for demagogic purposes by a demagogic candidate for the Presidency.

It is to be regretted that Governor Roosevelt will not be in attendance at the Jefferson Day banquet to-morrow evening. He would be in congenial company. What a familiar spectacle that banquet will present. The same old Democratic Party, publicly offering empty words in tribute to their leaders of yesterday, while behind the scenes they set up the machinery to scuttle every sound economic policy advocated by those leaders.

The same old Democratic Party, demagoging its way through the pages of American history, forever rolling the stone up the hill, forever carrying water in a sieve, always frustrated in its hopes because it lacks the integrity to be honest with itself and the capacity to keep faith with the American people.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 9575. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 826. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine claims of certain bands or tribes of Indians residing in the State of Oregon;

S. 1719. An act amending the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma to submit claims to the Court of Claims," approved June 4, 1924;

S. 3584. An act to require all insurance corporations formed under the provisions of Chapter XVIII of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia to maintain their principal offices and places of business within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. 3655. An act to provide for the leasing of the segregated coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian Nations in Oklahoma, and for an extension of time within which purchasers of such deposits may complete payments.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 15, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Friday, April 15, 1932, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

IMPORT DUTY ON COPPER

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the Michigan House of Representatives in favor of a tariff duty on copper. I ask for its publication in the RECORD under the rule and its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan was referred to the Committee on Finance, and it is as follows:

House Resolution 9

MICHIGAN STATE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A resolution memorializing Congress on the passage of a tariff on copper:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has under consideration a tariff on copper; and

Whereas the copper industry of the State of Michigan is one of our important natural-resources industries; and

Whereas the copper industry of the State of Michigan would greatly benefit from a tariff on copper, and such a tariff on copper would aid in securing to this State industry an opportunity to stabilize its market in the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan, That the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan place itself on record in the urgent request that Congress give favorable consideration to the subject of a tariff on copper; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States and to each of the Michigan Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

FRED R. MING,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PROPOSED UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF LEGISLATION

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter and three telegrams, which I desire to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD. I ask that the first telegram be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Telegram]

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 14, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber:

Representing tens of thousands of textile workers, we hope your unemployment relief and construction bill will secure same hearty indorsement as it does from the United Textile Workers of America, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

THOMAS F. MCMAHON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams and letter will lie on the table, and will be printed in the RECORD, as requested.

The telegrams and letter are as follows:

[Telegram]

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 14, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber:

Engineers Unions, New York City, indorse your unemployment relief and construction bill.

JOHN J. MCDONALD,
Fourth Vice President,
International Union of Operating Engineers.

[Telegram]

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 14, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber:

Bindery Women's Local Union, No. 66, International Brotherhood of Book Binders, heartily indorses your unemployment relief and construction bill.

Yours for success,

KATHERINE HARRINGTON,
Secretary-Treasurer.

CENTRAL TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL OF GREATER NEW YORK AND VICINITY,
New York City, April 11, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: At the last regular meeting of the Central Trades and Labor Council of Greater New York and Vicinity attention was called to the bills that you have introduced in this session of Congress, as our organization is on record in favor of those bills.

It was voted that we communicate with you to encourage you in your efforts in having these bills enacted into law.

Assuring you of our continued cooperation, I am,

Very truly yours,

JAMES C. QUINN, Secretary.

REPORT OF THE COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4289) to amend the act of February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., title 47, sec. 85), and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 567) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 4400) granting a pension to Sampson M. Morris (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOWELL:

A bill (S. 4401) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 4402) to remove the limitation on the filling of the vacancy in the office of senior circuit judge for the ninth judicial circuit; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. BLAINE introduced Senate bill 4403 and it was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which see under a separate heading.)

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4404) for the relief of James L. Logan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 8750) relative to restrictions applicable to Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for authorized expenditures of the Federal Trade Commission, in performing the duties imposed upon it by law or in pursuance of law, from $1,236,500 to $1,596,500, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10022, the independent offices appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REVENUE AND TAXATION—AMENDMENTS RELATIVE TO COPPER

Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. VANDENBERG submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by them jointly to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have received an extremely interesting letter from President Ernest M. Hopkins, of Dartmouth College, on a question that is now agitating the country. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE,
Hanover, N. H., April 8, 1932.

DEAR MR. SENATOR: In answer to your inquiry whether I should be willing to write you my views concerning the eighteenth amendment, I am perfectly willing to state my position.

I am opposed to the amendment and I believe that it should be repealed. Until two years ago I withheld from public statement of my conviction that the principle of the law was wrong because I assumed that the practice might show possibilities of public advantage sufficient to outweigh what seemed to me the fallacies of its theory. I have come to the point now, however, where I not only believe that the repeal of this amendment is important, but, moreover, I believe it is fundamentally vital to the welfare of the country at large.

There are few major problems—social, economic, or political—before the country which are not being complicated and made more difficult of solution by the existence of this amendment. In the impossibility of its enforcement it works disastrously to respect for law and creates demoralizing disdain of government. It is corroding the standards of public morality and it is insidiously debasing the code definitive of what constitutes desirable personal conduct. Socially its effect has been to provide a subsidy for the underworld, by which criminals are being given unprecedented power and by which viciousness is being increasingly protected. Vast moneyed resources have been made available for the corruption of the public service by virtual assignment to antisocial groups of the large sums which formerly, in the excise, went to relieve the financial burdens of government.

The saloon in its old-time form has gone, and is good riddance. However, it is not entirely clear to me that this gain is as complete as proponents of the amendment claim it to be when I consider the apparent effect on the body politic of the furtive dives and the gilded speak-easies which steadily increase in number in country and town.

All in all I am rapidly coming to the conviction that the most vital political issue before the country is the extent to which pride of opinion as to what prohibition ought to do is blinding us to what it actually is doing. I am not so much concerned about what happens to my own generation. It has made its bed and might well be left to lie upon it if that were all there were to it. My concern and my deep solicitude are for the welfare of the oncoming generations. For them the ideal of temperance has been tarnished, and to their imaginations is being given an illusory impression of romantic adventure in condoning weakness and vice and crime.

It is said that Sir Edward Troup, for many years the able permanent secretary of the Home Office in England, judged all proposals for the introduction of legislation to govern social evils on the basis of three fundamental principles.

The first was: Not to make crimes, unless forced to do so, out of things which were not crimes already.

The second was: Not to introduce prohibitive legislation beyond the standard of conduct which will be accepted by the sentiment of the country.

And the third was: Not to throw on the guardians of law and order burdens greater than they could bear.

These seem to me principles desirable for consideration anywhere at any time within a democracy.

I am very respectfully yours,

ERNEST M. HOPKINS.

The Hon. HIRAM BINGHAM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a discussion of the financial situation appearing in Commerce and Finance for April 13, 1932.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From Commerce and Finance, April 13, 1932]

THE WAY OUT—DEVALUATE THE DOLLAR!

(By Srinivas Ram Wagel, of H. Hentz & Co.)

(The following article approaches the question of overcoming the depression from an entirely new angle, and the remedy outlined is one not suggested heretofore. No exception can be taken to the author's diagnosis as far as it goes, and he frankly confesses that his proposal, which represents his own personal views, is offered as a life-saving measures and not a cure-all.

While Commerce and Finance does not sponsor the drastic remedy for existing conditions proposed by Mr. Wagel, we are glad to publish his views as provocative of constructive thought.—The Editors.)

"The best hope of the world for recovery," says Sir Arthur Salter, "is that it should first come in America because of her great internal resources and then spread elsewhere. The first necessity in America is that the measures recently taken to balance the Budget, to give liquidity to the banks' assets, to remove any danger to the currency from a drain of gold to France, to restore confidence, and to reduce hoarding, and to enable the banking system to make money more accessible, should be successful."

All this is now being done. The Budget is being and will be balanced; the Glass-Steagall bill has removed any possible danger to our gold and the banks; strenuous efforts are being made for the restoration of confidence; effective steps have been taken to reduce hoarding, and over $200,000,000 have been returned to the banks; the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is enabling the banking system to make money more accessible.

And yet there are no signs of change for the better; manufacturing activity is at the lowest ebb; commodity prices are at the bottom, and proportionately lower than in any other important country; securities are at the lowest level since 1910. The depression is now playing a game with the country. Like the proverbial feline against whom the more the boots thrown the more it holds onto the neighborhood, making a pandemonium of the night, the more the steps taken against depression the more it stays and howls. Confidence has a tantalizing way of always being just around the corner, but never arriving.

A SERIOUS SITUATION

No wonder that people are perplexed about the absence of recovery in the United States. Some of us lay a flattering unction to our fond hope by saying that the slowness of revival is the penalty for the crash which was more far-reaching and precipitous than any that occurred in the past. It is excellent to have confidence, but it is more prudent, even wise, to probe deeper into our ills than has been done hitherto.

The situation is eating into the vitals of the Nation; smug satisfaction with the resources of the Nation and resourcefulness of the leaders will not take us very far. The situation is now too far gone to manage with mere palliatives. Drastic steps and immediate relief are necessary if the economic polity of the Nation is not to break down completely. The patient must be revived from coma. We must follow it by a slow and calculated process of medication for permanent cure.

There must be recovery in the United States for its own sake, as also to help the whole world. The common interest of mankind is just as great as their divergent competitive interests. But a healthy nation means nothing else but that the individuals composing the nation are healthy. No one waits for his neighbor to get well so that he may get well himself. Therefore, world recovery means that each individual nation must exert its utmost to recover itself from the depression.

THE CRISIS AND THE CAUSES

The continuance of the crisis in the United States since the autumn of 1929 has been hitherto attributed to numerous individual or combinations of causes—all of which, however, do not affect the vital issue, at least in the United States. Let us make a brief survey to find out how far these causes are operative:

1. Overproduction: As regards manufactured goods, there has been a gradual reduction in output until at date the total is on the basis of less than 50 per cent of that of 1929 on the average. The industrial output in 1931 was $40,000,000,000, as against $70,000,000,000 in 1929. To-day it is over 10 per cent less than at the close of 1931. Both the wholesale and retail markets are subsisting from hand to mouth. There are no impeding stocks of goods.

Raw material production in 1931 was near the level of 1913. As a matter of fact, world steel output at 69 million tons compares with 74.6 million tons in 1913, and pig iron at 55 million tons in 1931 compares with 77.7 million tons in 1913. Copper, zinc, tin, lead, and aluminum production in the first three months of 1932 are on the level of that of 1912. Of course, there are large stocks of these metals undisposed of. Coal production is below the level of 1912. Production of raw materials in the United States is at a low ebb.

Output of agricultural and cereal produce shows material increases, although wheat and cotton are likely to be short crops this year. Excepting in sugar, the increases are just about in the same proportion as the increase in world population. There is extraordinary want all over the world, as well as in the United States. At least, in the United States there would be no surpluses if people could satisfy their wants for food and nourishment.

2. Underconsumption: Of course, it evists. It, however, is not voluntary, and it is not curable by any measures so far proposed.

3. Technological advance, in a measure, has led to overproduction and increase of unemployment in certain lines of industries. In fact, it has affected but 4 per cent of those gainfully employed in the United States. Labor saving is taking place in most industries only to a very limited extent. Mass production has not been practicable in more than a relatively small part of industry even in the United States. Therefore, technological advance can not be the cause of such terrific distress and depression as prevails to-day.

4. Want of coordination: "Business must recognize," says Mr. Paul Mazur, "that its development has been lacking in balance; that no improvement in production technique that increases capacity and output can continue permanently and in security unless the power of consumption within the Nation is quickly built up to the new level of production." It may be that national or industrial planning might help. On the other hand, there are others like Mr. Myron Taylor, who says that "On the whole, the working out of this relation between supply and demand will be most effective if guided by the responsible individuals directly concerned, since their self-interest acts as the strongest incentive to rationalization and stabilization of the economic system."

That is all well and good and concerns the distant future. It does not touch the fringe of the subject we are most interested in; that is, the present paralysis of activity. When demand exists the means of production are available, and yet the two are absolutely unable to come together.

5. Insufficiency of gold and currency: This argument, which is still finding numerous adherents, is the most absurd of all. The United States has at present four thousand fifty-three millions in gold as against one thousand two hundred eighty-nine millions in 1913. And yet, the national activity, including foreign commerce, is at the level of 1913. The United States money in circulation is now at five thousand six hundred millions as against three thousand two hundred millions in 1913. We have money and gold enough to do more than twice the present volume of business.

6. Want of credit: Since 1929 the bank deposits have declined from fifty-three billions to forty-six billions. However, there are far more instruments of credit to-day than in 1914, when the total of bank deposits was only eighteen and four-tenths billions. It needs only an elementary knowledge of economics to understand that most of the credits available during recent years have depended more on deposits than on money or gold supply.

7. War debts and reparations: No doubt the European countries are in a very large measure affected by the war debts, most of all Germany, because of the more or less astronomical figures of reparations. As far as the United States is concerned, even the complete loss of the annual payments, amounting to $300,000,000, should hardly influence the activity and prosperity of the Nation, as it is the tiniest fraction of the normal national income and less than 7½ per cent of the Federal revenues.

8. Foreign commerce: The foreign commerce for 1931, at about four thousand millions, has sunk to the level of 1912; and the current year bids fair to make even a poorer showing. But even at that the foreign commerce was but 12½ per cent of the national industrial and agricultural output in 1929 and 10 per cent of that of 1931. The complete loss of it will only be a minor factor in the economic polity of the United States. The internal resources and the national market of the country are so great that all other factors pale into insignificance. It is very different in the case of Germany, Great Britain, and Belgium, and even France, which is the most self-contained country in Europe.

9. Conditions in Europe: No doubt a prosperous Europe will exert an exhilarating influence, materially and psychologically, over the United States. But what has that got to do with using our own raw materials and food products and labor and enjoying and maintaining the standard of living the United States is accustomed to?

10. Depreciation of foreign investments: It is a big loss no doubt. But indebtedness by foreigners was incurred not in cash but in goods at very high prices. In any case the greater part of the sums sent out in the shape of goods are not due yet. It is the surplus, and not something which we could use. The loss bears on only a small fraction of the people, and does not justify the depression and its effects.

11. Excessive governmental expenditure: The governmental expenditure in the United States—State, Federal, and municipal—has increased from three billions in 1913 to thirteen billions to-day, i. e., in just a period of 19 years. But this total is spent within the country itself, to pay for services, labor, and goods manufactured in the country. It is maintaining a certain amount of national activity and employing millions. No doubt it is not productive; but productive labor is dangerous in these days of underconsumption.

There is little reason why this should cause the present depression—at least, why it should keep it up.

12. Tariffs: The effect of the tariffs on the United States is very much exaggerated. To those who say that it is keeping out European goods, with which Europe and America could repay interest and amortization on our loans to them, the answer is that the total is small, and that very much could not be sold here anyhow without seriously disturbing internal industrial activity.

In fact, a large influx of foreign goods would mean only more unemployment.

And yet leaders of thought and industry are laying special stress either on the foreign situation or artificially fostering activity. Mr. Silas Strawn, chairman of the International Chamber of Commerce, pins his hopes on the Lausanne conference for the settlement of reparations as a prerequisite to the return of confidence and restoration of credit; he wants "tariffs and other restrictions strangling trade" to be removed, and, of course, national budgets must be balanced. Mr. Charles E. Mitchell, of the National City Bank, declares that "no nation can isolate itself economically in these times or prosper in a world of chaos." And, according to Mr. Laurence Laughlin, "there has developed a tendency by untrained politicians to offer enormous issues of government securities, thinking that recovery and employment might be aided by increasing our debts just when we are critically short of reserves with which to pay." And Mr. R. C. Hawtrey, an English economist, promises us prosperity the moment we leave the gold standard.

All these touch but the fringe, and do not go to the core of the problem. They may prove, probably, why and in what manner the depression is operating or the intensity of it; but they do not show the why of the depression nor what steps have to be taken to bring about relief.

THE FUNDAMENTAL CAUSE

So far as the United States is concerned, the fundamental cause is simply and solely due to the shift in internal monetary affairs. Similar situations exist, in varying degrees, in other countries; but the situation in this respect happens to be most severe in the United States. It is also a subject which few, if any, have paid attention to. It is not the fault of capitalism; it is not the fault of individuals, governments, or institutions. It has "just growed," like Topsy, and is strangling the nations, including those who, probably, according to communistic and socialistic philosophy, are believed to be benefiting by it.

THE NATION'S DEBTS

The greatest and most potent and primary cause of the depression is the enormous debts that are overhanging the country. By debts I do not mean Government obligations alone, to pay interest and amortization on which the public is taxed. I refer to all the indebtedness, bonded or otherwise, of individuals, corporations, and the Government, including the Federal, State, and municipal administrations; these include industrial bonds, railroad bonds, real-estate bonds, and mortgages, and, of course, farm mortgages. An estimate of these amounts is made up as follows:

United States Government bonds	$17,000,000,000
State, county, and municipal bonds	17,000,000,000
Railroad bonds	11,000,000,000
Industrial bonds and mortgages	10,000,000,000
Public-utility bonds	7,000,000,000
Real-estate mortgages	25,000,000,000
Farm mortgages	8,000,000,000
Mescellaneous	5,000,000,000
	100,000,000,000

These bonds are payable in dollars, irrespective of the decline in values, production, consumption, taxes, and employment. National activity is groaning under the weight of this indebtedness. If things continue as at present, say a year longer, and prices go on depreciating and unemployment mounting, all equities will be completely wiped out in common stocks, real estate will be barely worth the price of the first mortgage, and there will be pauperization of the bulk of the population of the United States.

HOW THE DEBTS MOUNTED

Let us briefly review how the debts mounted. More than 90 per cent of this indebtedness—national, corporate, or individual—was brought about during the years following the start of the war. The total national wealth of the country in 1914 was estimated at one hundred and ten billions; at the close of 1929 it was estimated at between three hundred and twenty to three hundred and fifty billions. The increase in national wealth was in a very large part represented by plants, buildings, roads, and public improvements, utilities, and goods in use not immediately dissipated in consumption. It was also to a very large extent magnified by the increased earning power as well as other trite psychological factors. The rearing of the national structure of wealth year after year was due in complete measure to the profits reinvested in more and more visible tokens of wealth. As a result of the national activity and development some received more and some less. The great majority of the people have had only the means of subsistence, although they probably had a larger measure than usual of enjoyable goods. Out of approximately 48,000,000 gainfully employed in the country, the largest number of taxable incomes was 4,489,698 in 1924 and 1,946,675 in 1930; the 1931 total will be in the neighborhood of 1,500,000. If, for the sake of computing those who have surpluses to invest, we eliminate those who had incomes of $5,000 or under, we are left with 709,710 individuals who have wealth, surplus, or profit to reinvest. Two important facts must be borne in mind; quite a number of wealthy individuals have invested funds in tax-exempt bonds; the bulk of the income from corporations goes to comparatively few individuals, although apparently stock and bond ownership is distributed widely.

This is not an arraignment. It is mainly intended to arrive at facts in order to suggest remedies. The profits which were reinvested were made not only out of enhanced volume of production and activity but also out of increased computation of values. For volume of production mounts only when values are inflated out of all proportion to costs and yield extraordinarily high profits. As a matter of fact, growth in volume all round, considering the growth of population, was measurably lower than the advance in values. And the debit accounts of the majority of the population were almost in direct proportion to the enhancement in market values. The simultaneous increase in prices and wealth which started on its mad course with the advent of the Great War and continued up to the autumn of 1929—except for a short period in 1920–21—led to advances in money wages and earnings for the majority. It was, however, marked by an extraordinary phenomenon; that is, the more the growth of the earnings of the average man the greater his debt.

This was true also of business, individual or corporate. It was due, no doubt, to the excess of confidence and the credit which was offered to all and sundry by those who were wise enough to keep on saving and charging high for everything, including money and goods. The pace was fast; the volume of debts skyrocketed. Everyone thought that the genii would be throwing wealth, profit, and wages into their laps; there was no time to think of the day of reckoning.

The average individual had one satisfaction; he was always free to take the wealth of his creditors in order to make up what the statistician calls the average income and average wealth of the individual in the Nation. The greater the growth of the national wealth the greater the volume of indebtedness in the country. Few realized, in the overwhelming optimism that prevailed during the decade of 1920–1930, that there was a limit to any debt burden; that interest and amortization have an insidious way of growing into mammoth proportions. The debtors became obligated to work more and more in order to maintain their accustomed standard of living as well as make payments on debts at one and the same time.

No doubt earnings and wages increased measurably; but prices, interest, and rent increased in a higher ratio. The situation necessitated ceaseless motion and unprecedented activity to make ends meet. Another extraordinary feature was that the bulk of the goods produced in the country has to be consumed by the debtors themselves—with the exception of a very small percentage that is exported to foreign countries. The situation might have been different in the United States had there been a foreign market for a substantial part of the production. Such, however, was not the case; and, it can be stated with assurance, will never be the case for any known period of time.

THE IMPOSSIBLE TASK OF DEBTORS

Therefore the debtors, i. e., the bulk of the population of the United States, had set themselves to the impossible task of paying for and consuming practically all that was produced in the United States and yet creating a substantial margin to pay interest and amortization on national indebtedness. The equity in the instruments of production belonged to the debtors, i. e., owners of common stock, home, factory, and what is generally known as property, who, along with the labor, consumed all they produced, or were expected to. The bondholders had, in general, a mortgage on the instruments of production, but were in no sense producers or consumers—in a large way.

Fearing foreclosures, the debtors reduced consumption in order to be prompt with payments of interest and amortization; in other words, it became impossible to maintain the standard of living to which they were accustomed. As a matter of fact, many were in no position to consume much of new production when the crash arrived, as the purchases on consumers' credit had already fully mortgaged future earnings for a time. The curtailment of consumption led to decreased production, which took away the means of livelihood of many. There was, therefore, a further curtailment of consumption, followed by a further decline in production. The total of unemployed was mounting up steadily, and adding to the number of people unable to buy goods and commodities.

Production and consumption might have been adjusted and prices maintained, even on the basis of reduced volume of sales. But the debts, bonds, and mortgages were hanging like myriads of Damoclesian swords, threatening constantly to annihilate all equities. In the scramble to maintain equities at any cost to avoid or postpone foreclosures, goods were thrown on a market, in which there was no glut, but a highly shrunken purchasing power. Prices began to toboggan; goods were sold at heavy losses. Thereby more avenues of production and activity—which induced consumption—closed down or only worked part time. This is the rake's progress of the past two years. Everything was in a flux. The only unchanging and unchangeable factor was the indebtedness of the country in "gold dollars."

LOSS OF BORROWING POWER

As it developed, the situation became one in which all lines of activity lost their borrowing power. The new values that were created during the boom years no longer existed. But these new values had already been consolidated into bonds and mortgages and fixed in terms of the dollar. The holders are expecting to be paid in full; it is not their worry that the values on which the bonds and mortgages were created no longer existed. It is the debtor's lookout.

In so far as the national interests are concerned, mortgages or bonded indebtedness should not be a serious matter, provided that such were being held widely. As between large numbers of creditors and debtors, foreclosing or transfer of rights to property, easement, etc., should in no way affect national activity, economy, or prosperity. Unfortunately, however, in the United States, the creditors form a very limited class, including banks, insurance, and mortgage companies and such other institutions, the great bulk of whose shares are held by a very small minority of the Nation.

There is nothing inherently morally or legally wrong in this state of affairs. The creditors, however, do not consume the tiniest fraction of the goods produced; and the debtors, whose equity was melting away, constitute the bulk of both the producers and consumers. The latter have not the wherewithal to buy and use goods, once their equity has lost its collateral value. In the United States to-day, people are losing interest in enterprise; the air is permeated by the pessimism of the dispossessed. The bulk of individuals and business men have no longer any borrowing power. The banks and the creditors have a proper appraisal of the values of collateral. In fact, in most cases they have the collateral—all of it. They find that, in prudence and justice to their own interests, they can not lend any more on the bulk of the collateral that is now available. But, if they do not lend, there can be no revival of business—even temporarily. Hence the impasse.

SIMILAR CONDITIONS IN EUROPE

Similar situations have existed, and exist, in Europe, and in varying degrees of rigor. France solved the problem by devaluing the franc, practically wiping out the internal indebtedness; her tax and debt burden is the least onerous of all in Europe. Germany wiped out internal debts; but the reparations in astronomical figures still threaten to engulf her in utter misery. Great Britain expects to follow in the wake of France, and reduce her internal debts.

There is one important difference between conditions in the United States and Europe. In spite of the higher ratio of governmental debts in European countries, the farm, home, and industry there have an infinitely less burden of debt and mortgage to bear. This is partly due to the slower growth, caution, and temperamental traits of the people; it is also partly due to the more equitable distribution of wealth. The creditors are far more numerous proportionally than in the United States. Consequently, in spite of small resources, greater dependence on foreign commerce, and many other unfavorable factors, the economic depression in Europe is much milder than in the United States, and the fall in prices not so precipitous. Although taxation is heavy in Europe, they have comparatively less want and despair than in the United States, which has been accustomed to high standards of living and larger number of opportunities for enterprise, profit, and enjoyment of life.

RELIEF FROM DEBT

The urgent need is that the population be pulled out of what is, for all practical purposes, a calamitous insolvency. If things continue on the present basis, it will be insolvency equally for the creditors, for the title to all property in the United States will be of little value when buyers are scarce and returns are inadequate. As a leading manufacturer stated recently, values of manufacturing property tend to be determined more by earning power, potential and actual, than by book value. Only when the debt burden is lifted in a reasonable measure can the bulk of the people be afforded the means to work, produce, purchase, and sell. There will be relief from depression and revival of prosperity only when men and women are assured that they will be permitted to enjoy at least a moiety of the fruits of their labor, accumulate a competence which they can hold and pass on to their heirs, and not pay all they earn from the sweat of their brows in taxes, interest, and amortization on bonds and mortgages.

What, in sum, is prosperity? High money returns, high wages, and high prices of goods. The average individual does not think in terms of the purchasing power of money, although there is prosperity only when the purchasing power of the money is low; then everybody is engaged in producing, consuming, and saving whenever possible. "It would be an extremely good sign," says Sir Arthur Salter, "if gold prices, as a result of these measures, begin to rise. If the improvement so begins in America quickly, the collapse of central Europe might be averted." Sir Arthur Salter evidently forgets that gold prices must rise if disaster is to be averted within the United States—which will mean, of course, disaster for the whole world.

Numerous methods for raising prices have been proposed. There is a fallacious idea, however, widely prevalent, that flooding the country with currency, on any and all pretext, will induce prosperity. How piling on more debt on the present unbearable debt is going to help, God alone knows. Again, what is the use of increasing the mechanism of credit, if the individual and industry can not be given credit because, again, of present excessive indebtedness of various kinds?

HOW TO REDUCE DEBT

An individual can obtain relief from debt, which is honestly contracted, by taking advantage of the bankruptcy court. A nation can not. Of course, we have the machinery of the moratorium; but moratorium only postpones the date of payment and furnishes no permanent relief. It disorganizes the economic life of the country that uses it as a weapon for temporary relief. Individual agreements are, of course, out of the question in a national affair. So, whatever measures are adopted should make no alterations in the contractual relations between the debtors and creditors. It should involve little or no change in the economic life of the people. It must be proved to the satisfaction of debtor and creditor in the country itself, as well as those in foreign countries whose good will is necessary, that whatever measure is advocated will redound to the benefit of all concerned. It must be a simple enough measure and effected with the minimum of machinery, without compulsion.

REDUCE GOLD CONTENT OF DOLLAR

We can lift ourselves out of the morass of the present depression, and bring about a revival of prosperity—for the whole world—by the very simple process of reducing the gold equivalent of the dollar. I am convinced that nothing else will do, and that nothing else will be a fraction as beneficial to the United States and the world. The change proposed specifically is to modify the act of March 4, 1900. The dollar, instead of being the equivalent of 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine, as established by section 3511 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be the equivalent of 12.9 grains of gold nine-tenths fine. This latter weight will be the unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity of value with the standard.

This change will, indeed, cause a minimum disturbance in the affairs of the people, as I will show later on. No doubt there will be some injustices and unfairness. Such, however, will affect far fewer people than any other measure or than are suffering from the depression to-day. No one can devise a program that is absolutely just to all. Before proceeding further I will explain why I propose the reduction of 50 per cent in the gold content. Prices generally show approximately a reduction of 50 per cent as compared with 1926, which was the last normal year. General property and other values also show about the same ratio of decline. If by the devaluation of the dollar we take it to the 1926 level, it will be a good point to start from. It will be easier to bring about a social equilibrium in that manner.

It may be asked that, if once we start devaluing the money of the country whenever there is heavy decline in prices, there will be no security for property and possessions. I will answer that: First of all, the present situation is extraordinary in many respects; it needs a drastic action. One has to choose between evils on occasions of emergency. A cure for the paralysis of the Nation is urgent. In all statecraft, especially in a democracy, it is admitted that the doctrine of Jeremy Bentham—the greatest good of the greatest number—must prevail.

RIGHT TO PAYMENT IN GOLD

I can imagine myriads shouting with horror at this blasphemous proposal, which will be forthwith dubbed as repudiation of sacred contracts. Almost any bond, public or private, is, on the face of the document, payable "in gold coin of the United States of America, or equal to the standard weight and fineness as it existed" on the date of the issuance of the bond. It will be argued that, even when not so expressed in the bond, it is implied by common consent. The bonds are payable in dollars weighing 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine; what else is it but repudiation to ask the bondholder to take a lesser weight in gold?

I am not equipped to discuss the question from the point of view of technical or legalistic casuistry. But I may point out certain well-known facts. Not the tiniest part of the subscriptions to the bonds extant in the United States was paid in in gold. Whatever may be in the letter of the contract, neither the Government or other debtors, nor the bondholders and other creditors, ever intended to receive, or pay, in gold. They knew without a shadow of a doubt that there was not enough gold to pay for the minute fraction of the sums involved in the bonds and instruments extant in the country. This knowledge itself should vitiate the provision of making payment or payments in gold. They also knew what was implied tacitly; that is, by gold was meant what gold could buy—the purchasing power of gold expressed in terms of the dollar, or value in the shape of consumable goods or title to property, right, and easement. The bond and mortgage holders may indeed interpret the letter of the contract like Shylock and his pound of flesh, but equity and justice is bound to uphold the interpretation of Portia.

After all, what is the plain truth? The great majority of the indebtedness of the country was incurred since 1917. At no time during the period between that date and 1929, when the depression commenced, has the purchasing power of gold been more than one-half of to-day. In fact, the bond and mortgage holders did not expect to receive more than 50 per cent of what they could obtain to-day in the shape of services and goods. If the whirligig of time had favored them without causing infinite harm to the bulk of their fellow countrymen, they might be permitted to have their own way—that is, if Shylock could have had the pound of flesh without spilling a drop of blood and killing Antonio, he was welcome to have it. But a technicality should not be permitted to override the interests of a whole nation—in fact, the whole world.

CREDITORS WILL GAIN BY DEVALUATION

In reality, the bond and mortgage holders stand to gain by the devaluation of the dollar. Those who are conversant with the real situation are fully aware of the fact that, in spite of the urging of the debtors, the creditors are afraid to foreclose and thus destroy the value of properties. No country that has a majority with little or no equity can ever be prosperous. Even the equity of the bond and mortgage holders is becoming of less and less value as the depression is allowed to drag on. With the progress of time there will be fewer and fewer buyers, until there will be no buyers at all. Naturally there will be little or no return from plant and property. Like the farmers who are land poor, the bond and mortgage owners will be property poor and just as much in want as the rest of the people who are dispossessed. But if the dollar is devaluated, they have all to gain and nothing to lose. They can then preserve and retain values. The holder of the equity will then have surplus over and above the liabilities; labor and the rest of the population will have the wherewithal to consume with.

STATUS OF BONDS AND MORTGAGES

The change in the gold value of the dollar will make no change in the character or nature of the bonds and mortgages. The contractual obligations, except with reference to gold—which, as I have shown, is meaningless—will remain unchanged. The same amount of dollars will have to be paid as is written on the bond; there will be no alteration in the interest rate or the terms and conditions of these instruments. The holders will notice the effect of the change only owing to the fact—which is outside of the domain of these instruments—that price will be high and that the rest of the population will be affluent. It ought to be pleasant to wealthy men and institutions to have an increase in their kind.

These bonds to-day are held in large volume by banks and banking institutions, insurance companies, and savings banks.

They are considered as reserve, the Government bonds leading as the prime reserves. The obligations of these institutions are in dollars on the standard established by the Government at any time. It matters little, so far as they are concerned, whether the dollar is worth 25.8 grains or 12.9 grains of gold. However, their loans to individuals or corporations will have added security in that the prices of everything would have moved up. The position of banking and other institutions would be doubly strengthened, and naturally they could expand their credit. Their customers of to-day will no longer have their credit at a low ebb, for the securities would have gone up in value likewise. The savings banks, which are heavily tied up in real estate, which has now depreciated beyond measure, will then be placed in a particularly strong position. The loans of the insurance companies, which amount probably to 30 to 40 per cent of their resources, will be made more secure than ever.

In a sense the devaluation of the dollar will be a boon to all our credit institutions.

EFFECT OF DEVALUATION

The effect of the change on various national and international activities will be as follows:

1. Money and currency: There will be no change in the status of the money or currency in the hands of the people, banks, and institutions, except with regard to gold, of which there is to-day about $400,000,000 in circulation and in the tills of the banks. The Federal reserve and other notes will be redeemable on the basis of the new standard in gold, but there will be no change in the notes themselves. The silver and subsidiary coins will be subsidiary coins of the new dollar. Silver is low enough not to necessitate any change in the weight or fineness of even the silver dollars. The gold coins will no longer be legal tender, but will be sold as gold metal to the Treasury at the rate of $2 for the present $1. Legislation will include provision for the substitution of the new dollar for the old for redemption of old certificates. The present holders of currency will lose only in so far as they will have to pay increased prices for commodities and services. It is a comparatively small matter, compensated in much larger measure by the opportunities that will arrive with the advance in prices and general prosperity.

2. Individual obligations: These will be paid in the same amounts as stipulated in the contract, but with new dollars instead of the old. The creditors will have the disability of increased prices of commodities, which, as I have stated above, will give new opportunities for all, both creditors and debtors. The amount of injustice arising out of this will be comparatively slight.

3. Bank balances and bank accounts: They will be carried in the new dollar instead of the old, but in the same number of dollars, with no change in the amounts or bookkeeping. Banks might have a slight advantage, i. e., increase in funds, because of their possession of gold coins and gold. All bank loans will be better secured. Those that have credit balances could use their funds to better advantage.

4. Balances of United States citizens in foreign countries: These are kept in the currencies of the countries concerned. When remitted to the United States they will be in the basis of new dollars, and the holder will receive twice the amount of dollars that he will receive to-day. This is, therefore, no problem.

5. Foreign balances in the United States: When this plan is discussed there might be a rush to withdraw foreign balances from the United States. This may be avoided by making the decision overnight, as was done by Great Britain; but the gain that may accrue thereby is not worth the loss of confidence that may result from adopting such a course. It may be worth while to state beforehand that foreign balances here—only those in the shape of short-term balances in banks and banking institutions—will be readjusted on the basis of two to one, in the same proportion as the reduction in the gold content of the dollar. Building up of foreign balances might as well be discouraged, particularly as under the gold-exchanged standard foreign holders might ask for gold for their exchange at any time and embarrass the country. As long as the present trade position continues, however, there will be little increase in foreign balances in the United States.

6. Investments of foreigners in United States: There may be some selling, particularly of securities, but as prices are bound to advance and adjust themselves on the basis of the new dollar, there will be no haste to sell securities and withdraw funds.

7. Investments of United States citizens in foreign countries: These will benefit, for at the same dollar value it will be less in foreign currencies. There will be incentive for the foreign owners who are indebted to America to work to earn profits, especially as this change will mean nothing else but writing down the capital of the foreigners, while that of the local owners will remain unchanged. The alternative for American investors is either one of losing all or of getting a large part. In any case the change will bring about improvement.

6. Loans of United States citizens and corporations (in dollars) in foreign countries: Paradoxical as it may seem, this will benefit them immensely. It is useless to ignore the fact that most of them are now frozen. Even under the most favorable conditions few expect the return of more than a small fraction of the amounts so invested. The devaluation of the dollar is the best method of compounding the debts; the debtor has every incentive to find means to pay.

7. Loans to foreign governments: The confidence in such loans, especially to South American countries, is reflected by the current market quotations at 29.6 per cent of their par value. Cutting down the dollar is the only means of insuring payment. Loans by United States constitute the major part of the indebtedness of the South American countries. The moment they are reduced, their financial position will be automatically improved. At present it takes the whole revenue of some of the States to pay interest on the foreign loans—i. e., when they pay, of course. It will indeed be an incentive to all-round economic activity in South America.

8. Interallied debts and reparation problems: If the dollar is devaluated, we can find the best and only solution for the interallied debt and reparations problems. A great weight will be lifted off the weary shoulders of the earth. The allied nations have stated that they can pay the United States just what they receive from Germany. Germany can not, and will not, pay astronomical figures any longer. But if the allies paid $300,000,000 new dollars (or $150,000,000 present value) to America per year, and the allies agreed to cut down Germany's payment to that total, there will be universal recovery.

9. The farm and farmers: When the dollar is revalued, the immediate effect will be the rise in prices of all commodities, especially farm products. Therefore, it will increase the purchasing power of the 27,000,000 farmers, who are now in the worst position they have been in in the history of the United States. The 27,000,000 farmers who have been able to buy little or nothing during the past five years—even before the depression started—will be able to start buying toward attaining a better standard of living. For the hogs, cattle, wheat, cotton, and potatoes they sell, they will receive a larger number of dollars than they have received for some years. Their prospects will be brighter, because they will pay on mortgages the same number of dollars that they have been paying up to date—that is, when they had the money. The rise in farm values will make loans to farmers more secure for country banks; there will be immediate stoppage of foreclosures. It will be an important gain, because no recovery which does not start with the farmer will ever be successful in any country. There will be no need for the wasteful and artificial bolstering up of values of farm products, like wheat and cotton, by governmental agencies.

In this connection, there is little use in being blind to the fact that there will be a lag in some of the products that are overburdened with heavy stocks, and which are mainly export products like wheat and cotton. Devaluation of the dollar, however, will improve materially the export trade, apart from reducing payments on the indebtedness of the farmer. With the dollar at the new ratio, American wheat should compete very successfully with Australian, Argentine, and Canadian wheat in Europe.

10. Industry: The demand from farmers, which has been at a very low ebb for considerable time, will mean a rush of activity to industrial plants. Industry can keep going at a profit. With the elimination of heavy payments on bond and mortgage principal and interest, it will have a heavy load lifted off its shoulders. As each industry begins to operate, more and more wage earners will have the wherewithal to buy goods. The wage earners themselves will make a good market for the industrial output. When the wheels of industry and agriculture begin to move at a real pace, other wage earners will have opportunities.

11. Real estate: The real-estate market is now in the doldrums, with the worst loss in equities; it is endangering the position of many of our financial institutions. The bond and mortgage holder was the ally of the worst type of speculator in the boom in the real-estate market. Once the burden of mortgages is reduced, values will rise, and there will be a reasonable return on investments.

12. Securities: Of course, all these activities, simultaneous and successive, will reflect themselves in the securities market. In this market, however, all favorable developments will be discounted from the start, although the real rise may have to await more settled conditions. But, the important point is that the bonds will improve just as much as the common stock. The average of bond prices to-day is very low, in spite of the stipulation to pay in gold of weight of the standard established by the Government. It will be found that the bondholders have really lost nothing at all in foregoing a more or less sentimental and imaginary payment in gold.

CONCLUSION

Once again, I repeat that my proposal for the devaluation of the dollar is not a cure-all. It is intended simply and solely as a life-saving measure. It will galvanize and revivify the Nation and make it fit for the great task of readjustment and reconstruction that lies ahead. Measures of a similar nature have had to be adopted on occasions of great emergencies in the past, in the United States as well as other countries. The responsibility of the United States is greater to-day, because, willy-nilly, she leads the world. The revival of prosperity in the world depends upon revival in the United States.

EXPORT TRADE

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a statement issued this morning by Secretary Lamont, of the Department of Commerce, relating to our export trade.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

The importance of our foreign markets to farming, mining, and manufacturing interests in every State of the Union is apparent from the tabulation showing the distribution of exports by States. Even in a year of profound depression and drastic price declines, such as 1931, the value of our domestic exports amounted to $2,377,981,786, to which total every State and Territory contributed its share. Only 6 States had exports valued at less than $1,000,000, while 30 of the States exported merchandise to a value of $10,000,000 or more, and 12 of the latter did an overseas business of more than $60,000,000 each.

The significance of export trade to American labor is clear when one realizes that more than 1,400,000 workers receiving more than one and one-half billion dollars in wages were directly engaged in producing goods for export in 1931. Furthermore, there was probably an equal additional number employed indirectly in service activities and in supplying the needs of those engaged directly.

Many of us do not appreciate the fact that these benefits from foreign trade are by no means confined to the larger eastern seacoast States. Texas, for example, had larger exports than any other State except New York. Its total exports of $324,000,000 represented nearly $200,000,000 in wages paid to labor directly engaged in producing the cotton, petroleum products, wheat, flour, crude sulphur, and other commodities shipped from Texas to foreign countries. As further evidence of the significance of export trade in the economy of this State, it may be noted that the value of her exports last year was more than ten times as large as the total of personal and corporate income taxes paid by Texas to the Federal Government in the last fiscal year, while the profits on trade were in excess of the total of such tax payments.

Indiana, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas, to mention only a few of the States which are not commonly believed to be vitally concerned in foreign trade, had exports of from $10,000,000 to $30,000,000 in the depression year of 1931. In the aggregate these seven States exported goods valued at $141,000,000, the production of which is estimated to have involved the direct labor of more than 80,000 workers receiving $85,000,000 in wages.

Although the value of exports in 1931 was 37 per cent smaller than in 1930, this falling off was due in large part to the drastic price declines during the year. In actual quantity, exports declined 20 per cent, or only slightly more than the decline in domestic business.

Instead of having lost its foreign-trade prestige, as seems to be the impression in many quarters, the United States led the world in exports in 1931.

The following statistics are based upon "States of original shipment" given by shippers in export declarations, which are the only available source of export statistics. While not completely accurate as to the relative export ranking of the various States, they are published to meet the demand for statistics of this kind.

Exports of merchandise from Tennessee were valued at $20,826,417 during 1931 compared with $36,987,374 the previous year, according to statistics made public to-day by the Department of Commerce.

Unmanufactured cotton ranked first in order of value among the State's exports during the 12-month period amounting to $8,235,744 compared with $17,357,582 during 1930 and was followed in order by leaf tobacco, $5,982,533 and $8,608,842; boards, planks, and scantlings, $1,401,863 and $2,276,442; and cotton yarn, thread, and cordage, $819,195 and $1,059,009.

Other leading exports with comparative values for 1930, were: Vegetable fiber, straw, or grass manufactures, $593,413 and $305,542; "other wood manufactures," $449,938 and $662,955; aluminum plates, sheets, bars, strips, etc., $434,474 and $711,443; and "other machinery, vehicles, and parts," $300,790 and $655,711.

Meat products, eggs in the shell, undressed furs, wheat flour, cottonseed meal, refined cottonseed oil, cotton hosiery, rayon hosiery, wood handles, pencil slats, stone, sand, cement, lime, iron and steel manufactures, steam engines and parts, and chemicals and allied products were included among the diversified products sent from the State to foreign countries during the year.

Exports of merchandise from Mississippi were valued at $17,810,203 during 1931 compared with $30,282,003 the previous year, according to statistics made public to-day by the Department of Commerce.

Unmanufactured cotton ranked first in value among the State's exports during the 12-month period amounting to $10,608,605 compared with $17,753,244 during 1930 and was followed in order by southern pine lumber, $2,014,397 and $4,400,832; oak lumber, $1,660,079 and $1,674,908; and sawed timber, $967,837 and $2,645,188.

Other leading exports with comparative values for 1930 when available were: "Other hardwood lumber," $471,136 and $473,515; rosin, $281,464 and $531,658; gum lumber, $256,991 and $367,316; oil cake and oil-cake meal, $231,458, and $278,267; and "other vegetable food products and beverages," $210,910 and $339,753.

Edible animals and animal products, turpentine cooperage staves, nonmetallic minerals, metals, and manufactures, "other wood and paper, machinery and vehicles," "other wood manufactures," and chemicals and related products were included among the diversified products sent from the State to foreign countries during the year.

IOWA'S EXPORT TRADE VALUED AT $17,413,697 DURING 1931

Exports of merchandise from Iowa were valued at $17,413,697 during 1931 compared with $28,738,730 the previous year, according to statistics made public to-day by the Department of Commerce.

Lard, including neutral lard, ranked first in value among the State's exports during the 12-month period amounting to $7,692,502 compared with $10,118,636 the previous year and was followed in order by cured hams and shoulders, $1,883,399 and $3,335,583; oatmeal, flaked and rolled oats, $1,210,348 and $1,142,599; bacon, $919,615 and $2,769,935; electrical machinery and apparatus, $561,269 and $783,142; canned meats, $557,288 and $712,893; "other industrial machinery," $536,718 and $918,060.

Other leading exports with comparative values for 1930, were: Glucose, $466,011 and $835,023; "other meat products," $413,303 and $261,340; oleo oil, $245,019 and $440,800; and wheel tractors, $224,646 and $2,109,964.

Fresh pork, undressed furs, wheat flour, cornstarch and corn flour, textiles, nonmetallic metals, laundry machinery, wood and paper, and metals and manufactures were included among the diversified products sent from the State to foreign countries during the year.

Domestic exports from the United States by States from which shipped during the calendar year 1931, arranged in order of magnitude, with comparative figures for years 1930 and 1929

JEFFERSON DAY ADDRESS BY SENATOR ROBINSON OF ARKANSAS

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the leader of the minority, delivered an address at the Jefferson Day luncheon, on the afternoon of Wednesday, April 13, at the Willard Hotel, in this city, which was broadcast by the Columbia Broadcasting Co. over a nation-wide network. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARMFUL RESULTS OF "NEW ECONOMICS"

The campaign of 1928 was won by the Republicans on the claim that their candidate was an economic genius with a patent formula to insure prosperity.

For instance, Senator BORAH asserted, "Hoover is one of the marvels of the century in his ability to deal with economic problems." Nation-wide propaganda built up the myth that a letter mailed anywhere addressed to the "Miracle Man" would be promptly delivered to Mr. Hoover.

The candidate himself, exaggerating the expansion of our foreign commerce, asserted its growth was not due to chance, and implied that it was attributable to his own efforts. Mr. Hoover's "patent formula" for prosperity was seizure of world markets through foreign loans and mass production, accomplished by replacing men with machines. The Republican nominee declared that neither wages nor domestic prices would be reduced, and that to obtain supremacy in foreign trade we should lend money to nations whose credit was already broken down. Such nations were to pay the loans despite United States tariff laws prohibiting entry of their goods.

Every policy advanced in the campaign by the "economic marvel of the age" is now generally recognized as unsound, and by many regarded as a direct cause of the depression which grips every form of business. Everything that Mr. Hoover said would happen failed to occur. Everything that he promised would not occur has taken place.

When Democrats cried out that the Hoover plan to increase mass and automatic machine production threatened to create unmanageable surplus and to diminish employment, the Republican presidential nominee replied at Newark:

"I have heard voices raised in protest that the effect of this action is to destroy employment. * * * This is a reecho of a century ago. The reason why no danger lies in store is simple enough. * * * As we transfer the burden from the backs of men to machines we increase the wages of workers, we increase buying power, we create demand for new commodities and new service, and expand other industries and create new ones to further employment. * * * It is the road to abolition of poverty."

Democrats stressed the utter fallacy of lending money to backward and crippled nations and then expecting them to pay, if we shut out their goods by prohibitive tariffs. Mr. Hoover's answer was:

"It is an essential part of the sound expansion of our foreign trade that we should interest ourselves in the development of backward or crippled countries by means of loans * * *. Two assertions have been made * * *. The first is that the tariff prevents the import of goods necessary to pay interest and capital on these loans * * *. The second is that these payments must ultimately be paid in goods and some day replace the output of our factories. The whole of the weight of the argument I have applied to the fallacy that the protective tariff ruins our export trade applies equally to this matter. This great prosperity has been one of the greatest blessings that has ever come into the world. It has enabled us from our reservoir of wealth to contribute the power of our capital to * * * reconstruction * * *. But for our aid, South America and many other parts of the world would have been compelled to suspend their development because of lack of capital * * *. Recovery of the world would have been delayed a quarter of a century."

To summarize, Mr. Hoover's replies to warnings invoked the "new economics" and characterized all opposing arguments as "depleted theories." He said:

"This is a reecho of a century ago * * *. That theory was sound enough in the old days of direct barter of goods between nations. The trouble with it is that it has lost its application * * * especially to the American situation. Economic theories must show application to new circumstances."

Chairman Raskob wisely declared:

"In our rapidly increasing industrial efficiency and use of automatic machines we are already threatened with overproduction. We must find increased consumption in new markets. This is the most serious cloud in our immediate business skies * * *. I think Mr. Hoover is wrong on the most important questions before American business to-day. I have seen a fabulously rich and unsuspected domestic market spring up under our very feet by this simple expedient of giving wage and salary earners fair pay and shorter hours * * *. My idea is that careful businesslike administration of our domestic markets will uncover new strata of business prosperity. The search for export business should go on vigorously. We should not follow Mr. Hoover's plan * * *. It will only increase unemployment and in my opinion threaten a human catastrophe in the near future. Our economic system can not withstand a violent shock."

These quotations from Democrats answer the whine of apologists for the administration who say that some malign world influence, rather than unlimited mass production and our own absurd efforts to finance the trade of bankrupt foreign nations, while denying to them through prohibitive tariff rates the only practical means of repayment, is responsible for the accumulation of unmarketable surpluses in this country, the unemployment of 8,000,000 laborers, and the paralysis of every kind of business enterprise.

The record of the last three years establishes the conclusion that the economic policy of the United States, as reflected in extravagant Government expenditures, in loans to bankrupt foreign governments, and in the enactment of tariffs which have well-nigh destroyed our commerce, have been the controlling factors in producing depression in this country and in causing it to extend to other spheres. The "new economics" must be cast into the limbo of exploded heresies.

CERTAIN DEMOCRATIC MEASURES AND POLICIES

When the responsibility of the Republican Party for policies contributing to the depression has been proved, there remains a still more important task to be performed. When it has been made clear that what Candidate Hoover said was the "road to abolition of poverty" was in fact the abyss of ruin, the safe highway must be pointed out.

Democrats must not be content with merely exposing the blunders of their adversaries. Wise methods of correction must be formulated and carried out.

To the extent that laws and partiality in administration have caused or permitted bad conditions, the remedies are plain. There is no magic, patent plan by which the clouds of adversity may be dispelled and the sun of prosperity made to shine. The logical and practical course is to reverse the policies and repeal the statutes which have been the instruments of our undoing.

The creation of temporary and emergency agencies like the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, backed by national credit, can never remove the causes of our troubles. They are palliatives, not cures.

Only fundamental changes in political and economic policies can prove permanently effective; and these, manifestly, can not be placed in operation overnight. To indicate outstanding features of some reforms that may be attempted by Democrats and to review certain efforts already made, let it be said:

First. The miracle man's theory, that the best method of stimulating business is to withdraw capital from home industries for loans to bankrupt foreign borrowers, must be repudiated. Loans to foreign governments or to their nationals, of which repayment is promised only on the theory that the United States will in some mysterious way build up the ability of the borrowers to pay, should not be sought or accepted. It is better to use American capital at home and escape the risks of loss and of political entanglements and complications which must result from such a stupid policy. We feel now pressure for adjustments touching foreign loans, which would have the effect of giving preference to private over public loans in nearly all the spheres of our foreign investments.

Second. This Government should announce a firm purpose not to cancel or readjust obligations due from foreign countries, except upon conditions manifestly to the interest of our own people. The country is being flooded with propaganda for the remission of foreign debts in whole or in part, and all the while the debtor nations are strengthening themselves as our competitors in foreign commerce. Some of them are more prosperous now than the United States. So long as we hold out the express or implied promise that our Treasury will play the part of Santa Claus, the present uncertainty respecting foreign debts will be continued. Just as soon as it is made clear that any readjustments which can be acceptable to the United States must fairly take into account and safeguard the interest of our people, both as taxpayers and as participants in world commerce, stabilization will be assured.

Third. It must be made to appear that the policy of isolation reflected in prohibitive tariffs is to be abandoned, and fair reciprocal tariff arrangements entered into with a view to breaking down and preventing retaliatory measures by other peoples. We should recognize our responsibility for the retaliations which the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act has prompted and quickened.

Democrats in Congress have initiated and passed into conference a measure withdrawing the tariff-making power, delegated in the flexible provisions to the Executive, and restoring it to the Congress, as contemplated by the Constitution.

It is also proposed that a consumers' counsel shall be created to represent the general public interest, in contradistinction to special interests, in proceedings before the Tariff Commission.

Our opponents say that the third important feature of the tariff measure, namely, that looking to a world conference on tariffs, is designed to give foreign governments control over our tariff laws. There is no truth in the declaration. We know that so long as no effort is made to reconcile the forces which make for unbridled rivalry and competition in tariff barriers conditions will grow worse and the return of prosperity will be deferred. If just reciprocal tariffs are contemplated the way may be opened for their adoption only by negotiating with other powers which have interests and rights in the subject that can not be ignored.

Fourth. Laws for the prevention and regulation of monopolies must be enforced. The administrations of Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover have been marked by such feebleness in the enforcement of the antitrust laws as to justify the belief that the statutes are regarded as obsolete and unnecessary. No monopoly or combination exercising or attempting to exercise the power to fix domestic prices in the United States should be sheltered by tariff or other form of protection.

We have witnessed as a part of the "new economics" countless mergers and consolidations during the last few years, many of which have contributed to unemployment, to the creation of surplus products, and to the destruction of independent competitors. Small business can not exist, much less can it prosper, in such an atmosphere.

Fifth. Reduction of the high cost of government is among the most difficult tasks which the Democratic Party will inherit when the administration of President Hoover dies on the 4th of March, 1933. The current annual deficit is approximately $2,000,000,000. The total annual cost of government, including National and State in all subdivisions, approaches $14,000,000,000, of which four billions are allocated to the Federal Budget. The marked divergence between revenues and expenditures threatens the national credit. That credit must be maintained. The people of the United States can not afford and do not desire a $4,000,000,000 Government. Two general processes suggest themselves as practical ways for balancing the Budget. First, the abolition of departments, bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, so as to discontinue duplications in service and activities which may be dispensed with.

The Democratic House and Democratic Senators already are grappling with this problem and are making headway. The cooperation of all parties will be required to reduce the size and number of Federal agencies.

Second, in reestablishing safe relations between revenues and expenditures, additional taxes must be levied. Increased taxation is no remedy for depression. It is the penalty which must be paid for extravagance during prosperous times.

The Congress can not go on recklessly appropriating in response to the demands of groups in our population and at the same time promise reduction in taxes. There is no magic process by which the Federal Treasury can be supplied with resources.

The issuance, as some have proposed, of unsecured, or only partially secured, Treasury notes or currency has been repeatedly tried, and every experiment of this nature known to history has failed. Marked reduction in the size and cost of Government will provoke resentment and arouse storms of protest. Courage will be required to carry the surgical process far enough to reach the roots of the cancer festering in the body politic. Nevertheless the operation must be performed, and the quicker it is done the sooner may recovery be expected.

Sixth. The unparalleled decline in commodity prices, a process which is accelerated by the "new economics" if it did not originate therein is, perhaps, the most difficult obstacle to surmount in attempting to overcome depression. Readjustments must come in domestic production and in commerce before commodity prices will substantially advance. Instead of piling up additional surpluses, existing surpluses must be disposed of in accordance with orderly processes. That is, new domestic markets must be stimulated and foreign markets reached by receiving on more liberal terms those products of foreign countries which can not be economically produced in our own territory.

The Glass-Steagall bill, a Democratic measure, permits a reasonable currency expansion by authorizing the use of Government bonds in place of gold alone for coverage and by making available for rediscount at Federal reserve banks paper not previously eligible. That financial institutions have been slow to avail of the privileges afforded by the Glass-Steagall bill is due to fear, which seems to have paralyzed the brains of those who control the sources of credit.

The surest claim to the confidence of the public which the Democratic Party may assert is patient, painstaking service under the standard raised by Jefferson—the banner of justice and equality of opportunity for every citizen.

OIL PRICES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have in my hand two tables relating to the price of oil in America. It seems that in July, 1931, the declining price of oil reached its low, but since July, 1931, it has steadily increased. This is very significant, because it is one of the few commodities, if not the only one, of which I know which has witnessed an increase in price since that time. I ask that the tables may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables are as follows:

ADVICE ON TAXATION

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD a poem, "Advice on Taxation," by H. A. Goetsch, of Wadena, Minn.

There being no objection, the poem was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

TAXATION

Tax the people, tax with care,
To help the multimillionaire.
Tax the farmer, tax his fowl.
Tax the dog, and tax his howl.
Tax the hen and tax her egg
And let the bloomin' mudsill beg.
Tax the pig and tax his squeal,
Tax his boots, run down at heel;
Tax his horses, tax his lands,
Tax the blisters on his hands.
Tax his plow and tax his clothes,
Tax the rag that wipes his nose;
Tax his house and tax his bed,
Tax the bald spot on his head.
Tax the ox, and tax the ass,
Tax his "Henry," tax the gas;
Tax the road that he must pass,
And make him travel o'er the grass.
Tax his cow, and tax his calf,
Tax him if he dares to laugh;
He is just a common man,
So tax the cuss just all you can.
Tax the laborer—be discreet—
Tax him walking on the street.
Tax his bread and tax his meat;
Tax the shoes clear off his feet.
Tax the pay roll, tax the sale,
Tax his hard-earned paper kale;
Tax his pipe and tax his smoke—
Teach him government is no joke.
Tax their coffins—tax their shrouds,
Tax their souls beyond the clouds.
Tax the farmer, tax his flocks;
Tax the servants, tax their socks.
Tax the living, tax the dead;
Tax the unborn, ere they're fed.
Tax the water, tax the air——
Tax the sunlight if you dare.
Tax them all, and tax them well.
Tax them to the gates of hell!
But close your eyes so you can't see
The coupon-clipper go tax free.

POLICY OF SENATE IN REDUCTION OF APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 197) submitted by Mr. MCKELLAR on the 13th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations, in its consideration of the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, should observe the policy adopted by the Senate in the cases of the Interior Department and the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriations bills, and report the said bill back to the Senate with amendments providing an aggregate reduction of 10 per cent in the amount of the appropriations contained in the bill as received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Senate has before it for consideration the resolution offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] providing for a 10 per cent cut in the appropriations for the Post Office Department and Treasury Department below the House figures. Yesterday there was considerable discussion of the Treasury Department portion of the bill, amounting to $254,311,988, and many interesting points were brought out. To-day I want to discuss the Post Office Department portion of the bill, amounting to $805,586,575.

The Post Office Department appropriation amounts to $800,586,575. The effect of a 10 per cent cut in this amount would be far-reaching and, in my opinion, exceedingly injurious to the Post Office Department in its various branches, and to the American people whom the department serves. It would also be injurious to American industry to a large extent.

I wish to quote a letter written by the Postmaster General to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. JONES], in which some very interesting side lights are given on the possible effect of a 10 per cent reduction. I read:

The indicated reduction amounts to $80,546,617.50, and you ask me for an itemized statement showing under what appropriation heads deductions can be applied which will make up this total. You ask also for an expression of my opinion concerning the effect which such a reduction would have upon the efficiency of the Postal Service.

The original estimates of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1933 were carefully prepared by the department with a view to keeping the postal expenditures for the year at the lowest level consistent with the maintenance of the service on a basis of reasonable efficiency. Notwithstanding this fact, the Bureau of the Budget reduced many items included in the department's estimates, in some instances going far below the amounts judged by the department to be absolutely essential for the maintenance of the service without loss of efficiency. In making up the appropriation bill upon the basis of the Budget estimates, the House of Representatives made still further reductions. Under these circumstances it is probably unnecessary for me to advise you that an arbitrary reduction of more than $80,000,000 below the amount carried in the House bill, as now proposed, can be made only at the risk of a serious impairment of the service.

The department is wholly in sympathy, however, with the purpose of Congress to lighten the burdens which are imposed upon the country for the support of the Federal Government, and, desiring to cooperate fully in any endeavor which Congress may see fit to make to reduce the postal expenditures, it has given careful study to the problem presented by your letter.

Of the total of $805,466,175 carried in the House bill, the sum of $569,881,656, or 71 per cent, is for salaries and wages, leaving $235,584,519 for miscellaneous purposes. Of this latter amount, about $105,000,000 represents compensation payable to the railroads for transporting the mails at rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Some $90,000,000 is to meet the department's obligations to other carriers of the mails, entirely covered by contracts, many of which run for a term of years. Unless the Government is to adopt a policy of repudiating its undertakings no reduction can be made in these amounts. Of the $40,000,000 which remains in the appropriations for miscellaneous purposes, about $23,000,000 is for post-office quarters rented from private owners, very largely upon long-term contracts. Only a small reduction can be made in this item. The remainder of the miscellaneous appropriations—$17,000,000—goes for the supplies and equipment necessary to carry on the service, for travel expenses, and sundry incidental objects. These items have already been cut to the department's barest necessities and can scarcely be reduced further. For these reasons almost the entire amount of the reduction which the Senate requires must be applied against the appropriations which are available for personal service.

As the laws now stand, the department is without authority to reduce wages. It is without authority to change the hours of labor, which Congress saw fit to shorten effective July 1 last. It can not deal in any way with the rates of compensation or the allowances of its personnel. It can, however, reduce its force, not only in Washington but at post offices throughout the country and in the Rural Free Delivery and Railway Mail Services. And it goes without saying that if drastic reductions are carried into the salary appropriations for the fiscal year 1933, without any change in the laws which control the administration of the Postal Service, there will be no escape from a drastic reduction in the numbers of postal workers.

The effect upon the efficiency of the service would, of course, be severe. Large numbers of post-office workers can not be dismissed except at the expense of the service rendered the public. The department performs no service which it can abandon altogether, but it performs no service which it can not restrict within such limits as the action of Congress may necessitate. The reduction of the force which would follow the adoption of the plan which the Senate has in mind would mean, among other things, the curtailment of urban delivery and collection service in both residential and business districts, the abandonment of many postal stations and branches, and the immediate consolidation of thousands of rural routes and the limitation of others to triweekly service. In other words, it would require an almost complete reconstruction of the Nation's system of postal facilities on such a restricted basis as could be improvised to conform to the limits of the reduced funds.

It would, of course, mean also the dismissal of between 30,000 and 40,000 regular civil-service employees, who would be left to join the ranks of the unemployed. The contemplation of this possibility, coupled as it would be with a greatly impaired Postal Service to the entire country, obliges me to make the suggestion that should Congress conclude that the public interests compel the proposed reduction in the appropriations for the Postal Service, it would be desirable at the same time to modify the laws which determine the compensation and allowances and the hours of labor of postal employees, so that instead of dismissing a large number of employees and cutting off their earnings altogether, the department would be put in a position to retain all regular employees on its rolls, but with a reduced schedule of working hours, compensation, and allowances. This would not only make it possible to distribute the hardship proportionately among employees of all classes, but would also make it possible to maintain the present service without radical curtailment. Should Congress decide to pursue this course, it will be necessary to make the following changes in the laws which regulate the employment of the personnel under the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department:

1. A suspension of the 44-hour week as the basis of compensation; and provision for a shortening and staggering of hours of service, with proportionate reduction of pay.
2. A suspension of the extra pay for overtime and night service and compensatory time for Sundays and holidays.
3. A suspension of automatic promotions.
4. A reduction in the amount of annual leave.
5. A reduction in the travel allowances of railway mail clerks.
6. A suspension of the allowance to fourth-class postmasters for rent, light, fuel, and equipment.
7. A reduction of the allowances to third-class postmasters for clerk hire and for rent, light, and fuel.
8. A suspension of the allowance to rural carriers for the maintenance of vehicles.
9. A reduction in the fees to special-delivery messengers.
10. A 10 per cent reduction in all basic compensation schedules, including those applicable to the departmental service in the District of Columbia.

The Postmaster General ends with this statement, which should be carefully noted:

I, of course, do not wish to be understood as advocating these revisions in the law; but if a further reduction of 10 per cent is to be made in the department's appropriation, either the service to the public must be substantially curtailed and many thousands of workers dismissed or the compensation and allowances of postal employees generally must be radically reduced.

Then there follows a statement in detail, which is already in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of April 6, at page 7561.

Mr. President, in the face of the statements I have just read, which were made with a thorough knowledge of conditions and after a very careful study of the operations of the whole Post Office Department, we can not make a 10 per cent cut in the appropriations for that department without doing serious and irreparable damage to the Postal Service, to the personnel of the department, and to the industry of America generally.

Yesterday there was considerable discussion of the unemployment problem; it was gone into in detail. We have had that subject before us constantly. When the present session of Congress opened the principal topic of debate on the floor for some time was on how we could decrease the number of unemployed in this country and how we could furnish employment to the great army of the unemployed. We know there are a number of millions of men unemployed in our country to-day; we know they are going through privations and their families are suffering because of the lack of employment. Has the condition improved since Congress met? I regret to say that it is worse to-day than when Congress met, and there is a heavier obligation on us to-day to relieve the existing situation than there was on the day when Congress met.

How are we proposing to meet and to relieve this situation? Under this resolution it is proposed to do so by cutting the operations of the Post Office Department to a very serious extent, throwing practically 40,000 civil service postal employees out on the street, adding to the ranks of the unemployed to that extent, and even to a greater extent, because for every man who is thrown out of employment to-day corresponding harm will come to the industries of our country.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] yesterday drew a very vivid and accurate picture of the effect of this cut on the farmers of the country. The statement of the Postmaster General, which is correct, shows that if the reduction of appropriations shall be made the rural free delivery system will be curtailed to a very large extent by the consolidation of many thousands of routes and the elimination of others, and that delivery on thousands of rural routes will be changed from daily to triweekly service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Postmaster General will not determine what will be decreased and what will not be decreased. If this measure shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to reduce the appropriations 10 per cent, that committee will determine what items shall be cut and what shall not be cut. It may be very unfortunate for the people of this country that the Postmaster General has not the right to make the decision in the case of the rural free delivery system, but, as a matter of fact, we all know that he is using every effort in his power to break down that very system which the Senator now claims is likely to be imperiled; but, if under the pending resolution the rural free delivery system shall be injured in any way it will be done by the Appropriations Committee, and not by the Postmaster General, nor will he help it.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I will have to differ from my good friend from Tennessee in this particular, that the effect of the proposed 10 per cent cut in the bill will be that the funds for the Post Office Department allowed in the House bill will be reduced more than $80,000,000, and the only place where that reduction can properly be made will be in the item of personal service, to which I referred when I took the floor.

The Postmaster General in his letter says:

> Of the total of $805,466,175 carried in the House bill, the sum of $569,881,656, or 71 per cent, is for salaries and wages, leaving $235,584,519 for miscellaneous purposes. Of this latter amount, about $105,000,000 represents compensation payable to the railroads—

And so on.

Mr. President, if Congress cuts this appropriation to this extent, the Post Office Department will not have the funds with which to continue the services I have mentioned. The cuts will have to be made. They can not be made on the contracts with the various railroad, steamship, and air mail companies, which have been regularly and legally made for carrying the mails. The Government is obligated to fulfill those contracts; it can not repudiate just and legal contracts. The policy form and advisability of some of those contracts might be questioned, but that is not the issue before us to-day. The question now is, Shall this 10 per cent cut be made, and if it shall be made, what will the effect be?

It is shown clearly that practically 40,000 postal clerks, civil-service employees, will be thrown out of office and into the streets to join the army of the unemployed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the amount carried in the bill for the Post Office Department?

Mr. ODDIE. $805,586,575.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Can the Senator inform the Senate what was the amount carried by the similar bill in 1925?

Mr. ODDIE. I have not the figures for that year before me, but I can get them in a few minutes and put them in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the Senator available for us just now figures showing the appropriations made for the Post Office Department in years subsequent to 1925?

Mr. ODDIE. I have not those figures available.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator call attention to them when he procures them?

Mr. ODDIE. I will do so.

Mr. President, the proposed cut of 10 per cent will mean a large reduction in the Rural Free Delivery Service and in the Railway Mail Service. The men engaged in those services are not adequately paid to-day, many of us believe. They have trying ordeals to go through. Most of them have particularly heavy and trying duties to perform, and they are not a well-paid lot of men.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that the Senator has a number of buildings in Nevada that he is interested in?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes; there are a number of buildings in this program.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice by reference to the list that the Senator put in the RECORD on April 6, 1932, that it is proposed to spend $1,120,000 out of this appropriation for public buildings in Nevada, which has a population of about 60,000. That is about $20 for each citizen. I do not want to make invidious comparisons here; but does not the Senator think that with our Treasury in the pitiful, deplorable condition in which it is all of us might forego some of these enormous appropriations for public buildings in our various States? I do not mean to suggest cutting them out at all, but could we not go a little slowly on them? Could we not cut them down to some extent, so as to relieve the Treasury of the awful and unusual burden that it is compelled to bear in these times of depression?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I will admit that there are a number of buildings in Nevada on this list. Nevada has been waiting many years for some public buildings. I do not think it is a fair comparison to cite the population, because there are other factors to consider. Besides, the figures quoted by the Senator are too low, according to the last census.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I realize that; but the Senator's State has been very well looked after by the Federal Government in the matter of roads. There is virtually no State-aid plan on roads in Nevada, because there are so many public lands in the State that there is a different division of road funds when it comes to the public-land States. I am not decrying it. I am merely calling attention to it for the purpose of saying that with forest roads and national-park roads and what we know as Federal-aid roads, and with these enormous appropriations for public buildings for the Senator's State it is by no means unreasonable to cut off 10 per cent in this time of stress and trouble and almost bankruptcy on the part of our Treasury. It seems to me it would be wise even for the Senator and the Senator's State to go just a little slower than usual, and cut off appropriations in a very small way, because 10 per cent is a small percentage when we come to look at it; and I do not believe it will materially injure the Senator's State to postpone some of these appropriations for a short time, until our Treasury is in a better condition.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I think it is very unfair for the Senator from Tennessee to bring a personal matter into this discussion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, it is not a personal matter at all.

Mr. ODDIE. A State matter, then. I do not think the Senator should intimate that I am taking this position because my State is receiving certain benefits to which it is entitled.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator did not do it, I should think he was not doing right by his State. I do not criticize him in the slightest degree. I think it is a worthy position for the Senator to take to get whatever is proper for his State. I do not criticize him. All I am doing is appealing to him, for Heaven's sake, with our Treasury in this condition, not to demand the last dollar.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I am making this statement because of the position that I have the honor to hold as chairman of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the Senate, and chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee which has this bill in hand. I hope I have enough patriotism to treat all of the States equally and fairly in this matter. If I were doing this because of the benefits that might come to my particular State only, I should be very much ashamed of myself, and I should decline to hold the position I occupy to-day. I am trying to help the national situation; and I am speaking just as much for 250 cities in practically all of the States in the Union—and I have done so time and again in the last two weeks on the floor of the Senate—as I am for those in my own State.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Turning now to another question, which I think was brought out by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] just a moment ago, a question was asked as to appropriations.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not the floor.

Mr. ODDIE. I had yielded to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BLAINE. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLAINE. I recall that the Senator from Arkansas the other day rose to a point of order upon the same subject. My point of order is that the Senator can not yield except for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. If there is any objection from anybody, I will take the floor in my own right. I really thought that the Senator from Nevada and all the Senators would prefer to have the figures that were asked for just a few moments ago, namely, the appropriations for the Post Office Department since 1925. I have them before me, and I shall be glad to give them now.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask for a ruling upon my point of order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will withdraw, because I do not want to trespass on the Senator's view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas asked the question to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred. I have just received the information that he desires, as follows:

The appropriations for the Post Office Department, including and since 1925, are as follows:

1925	$629,000,000
1926	651,000,000
1927	842,000,000
1928	755,000,000
1929	776,000,000
1930	842,000,000
1931	840,000,000
1932	844,000,000

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ODDIE. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely desire to ask a question.

Mr. ODDIE. I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator be good enough to read the items just above, which are included but are not paid out of postal revenues?

Mr. ODDIE. That is another item; yes. In addition, there were the following:

1925	$173,000
1926	244,000
1927	31,000
1928	17,000
1929	66,000
1930	27,000
1931	43,000
1932	[1] 54,000

I overlooked that point, Mr. President.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. Has the Senator data showing the total deficit above our receipts from mail matter in the post office for the last year?

Mr. ODDIE. No, Mr. President; I have not those data before me now, and the committee has not gone into them at this session. The House made a suggestion on the subject and has put in their revenue bill an item providing for an increase in first-class postage rates. That is now before the Finance Committee of the Senate, and not before the Post Office Committee. That is a matter to be discussed later.

In that connection I will present this thought, Mr. President: There is a deficit in the Post Office Department to-day. The House has suggested a way of meeting part of that deficit by increasing first-class postage rates. I do not propose to discuss that matter now. That is a matter beside the question before the Senate; but if that goes through, a large increase in postal revenues will result and the department will be more nearly on a self-sustaining basis. The people who will pay the postage will demand the service that that postage is supposed to cover. If the service is curtailed, as this 10 per cent cut will curtail it, the public will not be getting its money's worth, and, in my opinion, will not be treated fairly. It will naturally and rightfully protest.

Mr. HOWELL. Is it not a fact that at the present time, under the present rate of 2 cents, first-class mail matter is paying very much more than its cost?

Mr. ODDIE. That is my understanding.

Mr. HOWELL. And is it not a fact that there are other classes of mail that are paying very much less than their cost?

Mr. ODDIE. I understand that that is the case. I have not given particular attention to that subject recently, but that is my understanding.

Mr. HOWELL. Why, then, should we increase the 2-cent postage to 3 cents when first-class mail matter is already contributing a surplus over and above the cost of the service and when other classes of mail matter are not paying their way?

Mr. ODDIE. That is getting into a very large field, Mr. President, and I should like to have time to go into certain features of it more in detail before I answer the Senator. In a general way, however, I will say that that increase in the first-class rate has been placed in the House bill, and is now before the Finance Committee of the Senate, of which I am not a member. It has not yet come to the floor of the Senate for discussion. On the other classes of mail matter I am not prepared to say at this time just what should or should not be done. I do know, however, that there is much material that comes under the lower classes that is carried in the mails to-day at the existing rates which if raised would divert that business from the mails to other modes of conveyance. That is a very large question, and it will be discussed in due time.

Mr. HOWELL. If that mail matter is carried at a loss now, why should it not be diverted? Why should not the Post Office Department welcome such a course?

[1] In odd numbers

Mr. ODDIE. That is a question of the economics of the Post Office Department. It is a very large problem and should be taken up one class at a time in detail, but not in the appropriation bill.

Mr. HOWELL. Can it be that we are maintaining these rates and sustaining this deficit for the benefit of the railroads?

Mr. ODDIE. I can not say that, Mr. President, because there are different classes of carriers that carry mails—the railroads, the ocean steamship lines, the air mail lines, and the different other agencies for conveying the mails. It is a very large question to answer in a short time. I believe it will come before the Post Office Committee before long.

Now, the question comes up again as to the effect of this 10 per cent cut. I have stated that it will mean throwing practically 40,000 civil-service postal clerks out of employment, disrupting and disintegrating the service to such an extent that it will take years to bring it back to the condition the American people demand of it. It will mean cutting down the rural delivery service to a large extent, crippling the railway mail service, and crippling the urban delivery service. Every city and town will feel it, and to-day we can not afford to take this stand. There is a depression on the country—a serious depression. It is hurting everybody, and especially the millions of men who are out of work and their families. We can not afford to take the pessimistic and destructive course which means throwing more men out of employment, further discouraging the American people and American industry, prolonging this period of distress, and delaying the return of normal times. Much of this destructive and pessimistic thought and action is having a demoralizing and bad effect on the morale of the Federal employees.

As I stated yesterday, and as has been stated on this floor by different Senators, we should take the optimistic view and prevent this destructive action. We should do what we can to put men back to work, and to keep men in employment who are to-day in employment. We can not afford to cripple the Postal Service. The American people will not stand for it. I do not believe that just because there is a deficit in the Treasury to-day, we should take this drastic step and curtail the Government's service, which the American people expect and demand. They have not called for this reduction in service. This is not the way to relieve the deficit.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President———

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I am interested to know whether the Senator is familiar with the amount of subsidies provided in this bill, and whether or not the amount of those subsidies, if taken out of the bill, would constitute the 10 per cent of the total appropriation directed to be cut from the bill?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Senator evidently refers to the amounts heretofore mentioned as going to the various carriers of the mails, the railroads, the ocean steamship companies, and the air mail lines. The Government is under contract to those companies which are carrying the mail, and that has recently been the subject of a great deal of detailed discussion in the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has made an exhaustive study of that question and was responsible for a large amount of valuable and interesting data bearing on that question being included in the hearings of the subcommittee to which I call the Senator's attention. I do not care at this time to go into the merits or demerits of the various contracts. It is too large a question to be handled at this time on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I did not ask the Senator in order to divert his attention; I am really interested to know whether or not, irrespective of contracts, the amount of subsidies provided in this bill constitutes 10 per cent of the total appropriation. I am very frank to state to the Senator that personally I do not favor a decrease in the public-works program of this Nation, but I do heartily favor doing away with the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars given away in subsidies, and I am interested to know whether the amount of the subsidies contained in this bill constitutes 10 per cent of the total appropriation.

Mr. ODDIE. Not if we do not consider the so-called subsidies paid under contract with the Government.

Mr. BLACK. If we considered those under contract and those not under contract, would the amount not constitute 10 per cent of the total appropriations?

Mr. ODDIE. These figures I can give again roughly. The total amount carried in the Post Office bill is $805,000,000. Nearly $570,000,000, or 71 per cent, is for salaries and wages and $235,000,000 for miscellaneous purposes. Of the latter amount, about $105,000,000 represents compensation payable to the railroads for carrying mail at rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. About $90,000,000 is to meet the department's obligations to other carriers of the mails, entirely covered by contracts, many of which run for a term of years.

Of the $40,000,000 which remains for miscellaneous purposes, $23,000,000 is for postal quarters rented from private owners, and so on; $17,000,000 goes for supplies and equipment necessary for the service, for travel expenses, and incidental subjects. So the Senator will see that $195,000,000 plus the items I have read taken from the $235,000,000 will leave very little.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a statement put into the RECORD last year, which could be easily obtainable, shows, for instance, a mail contract which ought to have cost the Government $35, as I remember the figures, but which actually cost the Government about $35,000. There were contracts running up into the millions of that nature and that character.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Figures were given here some time ago showing that under a contract for carrying the mail, I think from San Francisco to some point in South America, in the neighborhood of Argentina or Patagonia, during the year the shipping company carried three letters, at a cost of 6 cents, and 45 pounds of parcel post, which it would have cost about $3 to send, but the Government paid to this shipping company for that supposed service, or alleged service, $102,000.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, referring again to what the Senator from Tennessee has said, I call attention to the hearings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, which were very exhaustive. The Senator from Tennessee spent a great deal of time in bringing out many interesting data in connection with the question of contracts with the railroads, with the air mail companies, and with the ocean steamship companies. Others in the committee brought out many interesting data. The question has been gone into in great detail. I refer the Senate to the hearings. I think a great deal of valuable information will be found in them and much time saved on the floor by a study of them.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. These contracts for subsidies, of course, are all subject to cancellation, are they not?

Mr. ODDIE. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. DILL. They are good for only one year.

Mr. ODDIE. Some of them are 10-year contracts.

Mr. DILL. I know, but they all carry the clause that the Government reserves the right to cancel them. I want to ask the Senator whether he does not think that it would be better to cut down some of these subsidies than to impose the proposed new taxes on industry and on the cost of living to the American people.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, that is a question of policy largely for the Senate to decide.

Mr. DILL. Is not that the question which confronts us right here in this decision, whether we are to go on paying subsidies to the extent to which we are now paying them, or whether we are to cut those subsidies, at a time when the American people are struggling almost beyond endurance to pay the taxes already upon them? And there is the question of putting more taxes on them.

Mr. ODDIE. It is a question of contract. The Government is under contract with these various companies, and I do not understand that those contracts can be broken without the repudiation of the Government's obligations.

Mr. DILL. I am not going to argue that with the Senator, but I know the Senator is wrong.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say that that is one of the real reasons why this resolution ought to pass, and why the committee should be allowed to pass upon all these questions. That will probably be the most actively debated question before the committee if this resolution is passed to-day.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I will again quote from the Postmaster General on this matter:

> One hundred and five million dollars represents compensation payable to the railroads for transporting the mails at rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and some $90,000,000 is to meet the department's obligations to other carriers of the mails, entirely covered by contracts, many of which run for a term of years. Unless the Government is to adopt a policy of repudiating its undertakings no reduction can be made in these amounts.

I do not want to debate all the details of this question now, because I am of the opinion that the Government can not repudiate these contracts, and should not do it. There are a great many questions involved. We would get into the whole shipping question if we took up the controversy in regard to the ocean mail contracts.

Our merchant marine has been built up under a law which Congress passed, and there are many features in that law which might be debatable. Certain features of the law and its operation are questioned by some Members of the Senate. I do not think it is practical for us to get into that at this time. I am pointing out what the department has said to be the fact, and what I believe to be the fact, that the Government can not and must not repudiate contracts already made, and that the money under those contracts when due must be paid. The only other course open, if this resolution is passed, is to reduce the Postal Service, and I do not think it should be reduced.

I will not discuss the question of the post-office appropriations any further. I do not want to take the time of the Senate. But I want to sum up very briefly what was said yesterday in regard to the Treasury Department appropriation part of the bill.

It is pointed out by the Treasury Department, I think accurately, that the only place where the 10 per cent cut could be made without seriously crippling the vital operations of the Treasury Department would be on the public-building program, involving buildings in 250 cities in almost every State of the Union. The 10 per cent cut in the Treasury Department bill would amount to about $25,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury says that the cut can not be made in other branches of the service without seriously crippling them. So it resolves itself into whether or not the public-buildings program for 250 buildings is to be abandoned indefinitely, as the Treasury Department states will be necessary if the cut is made.

If the Treasury can not be assured of this necessary amount of money, it will have to abandon that program. I pointed out yesterday that that would deprive and throw out of employment tens of thousands of men, not only in the building trades, but in the industries which furnish materials of all kinds to these buildings—lumber, brick, cement, tile, various metals, steel, and so on—and that much suffering and privation would result.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Would not a policy of that kind add to the seriousness of the depression and to the unemployment in the country, and thus bring further distress and put more workers upon the charity pay roll who may be employed if this appropriation is made?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Senator is right, and the Senator is earnest in his efforts to relieve the unemployment problem. The unemployment problem in New York is of tremendous proportions. The Senator sees the danger to our country, to industry, and to our people if we curtail this building program and cut the Postal Service, as is contemplated.

We can not afford to do it. We must take the other course of action, be optimistic and prevent throwing men out of employment and onto the streets and try to put others back to work again. As I pointed out yesterday, the people in every one of these 250 cities have been hoping for and expecting these buildings, they have been planning on them, the workingmen in those communities have been counting on that work. They need it, so let us not stop this building program. We can not afford to do it. We all believe in economy. We are trying to practice it in every way possible. Every Member of the Senate is earnest in his efforts for drastic governmental economy and to reduce governmental expenses. I know how hard the members of the Committee on Appropriations have worked. They have held meetings almost every day in this session. There may be a little difference of opinion here and there among the members of the committee as to how a thing may best be done, but the members of the committee are very earnest in their efforts to do the right thing.

Mr. President, no matter how conscientious those who believe in the resolution may be, we have pointed out in the last two days, I believe, that it will be a mistake to pass the resolution which affects the two great departments of our Government. We can not afford to prolong the present existing period of distress. We must do what we can to put men back to work and to help industry generally. I hope the resolution will not pass.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, continuing the discussion of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], I observe that it is not in the nature of legislation. It appears to be a resolution extending the advice of the Senate to the Committee on Appropriations. The bill to which it refers is a bill that is not now before the Senate. The bill has been referred by the Senate to the Committee on Appropriations. Therefore, to me it seems a very strange procedure to be resolving upon something that is not before the Senate. As to myself, and I assume as to many other Members of the Senate, we do not know what are the items in the bill. The bill to which I refer is the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, H. R. 9699.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. JONES. The resolution was introduced by the Senator from Tennessee at the suggestion of the full Committee on Appropriations. Twice the Senate has sent appropriation bills back to the Committee on Appropriations directing it to reduce to the extent of 10 per cent the total amount as recommended by the House. It was thought by the full committee that, before having a subcommittee go to the trouble of writing up the bill and bringing it to the Senate and then having the Senate send it back to the committee, we would ask the Senate for instructions with reference to that point. That is the reason why the resolution was introduced.

I announced on the floor of the Senate when the last appropriation bill was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, where we discussed it for a full day, that if the Senate did decide that it should go back with directions for us to cut the amount 10 per cent I would take that to be the policy adopted by the Senate with reference to future appropriation bills. But the bill to which the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee relates had such important items in it that we felt it was well to bring the matter to the Senate and let the question be submitted to the Senate as to whether the Senate desires a 10 per cent cut made in that bill or not. That is the reason why the Senator from Tennessee introduced his resolution.

Mr. BLAINE. I am quite aware of the reason for the offering of the resolution, but that reason as given by the Senator from Washington, in my opinion, is not entitled to any serious consideration, because the reason itself is not based upon any reason or logic. It is wholly devoid of any reason or logic. The appropriation bill to which it refers is not before the Senate. So far as the Senate is concerned, it has not been informed of the items in the bill except as individual Senators have had the time to study the bill, and I confess that I have not had the time. I have been serving continuously on important committees ever since the bill came over from the House.

I want to suggest that, as I understand it, under the Constitution the jurisdiction of the Senate is to legislate and not to resolve. Committees are appointed to hold hearings upon bills and report those bills back to the Senate for its consideration. But here is a bill which has had no consideration by the Committee on Appropriations except to ask the advice of the Senate as to whether or not the committee shall follow a policy laid down with respect to two other appropriation bills, namely, the Interior Department appropriation bill and the bill which is now the unfinished business of the Senate, making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a further interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOWELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLAINE. I would prefer to make my argument consecutively and without interruption.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

Mr. BLAINE. The bill making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments is therefore before the committee. If the committee is unwilling to consider the bill as it usually considers appropriation bills, obviously then the proper course to pursue is for the committee to report the bill back to the Senate and ask for instructions. The items in the bill upon which instructions have been requested are many. Some of them run into enormous sums. How is any Senator going to come to a conclusion as to whether or not a 10 per cent flat reduction in the aggregate is a reduction that ought to be made? I assume that there are items in the bill which could properly be reduced. There are other items that ought not to be reduced at all.

The bill which is now before the committee is a bill that covers the property of the United States. The Interior Department appropriation bill carried only a small appropriation compared to the amount carried in the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill. The bill which is now the unfinished business of the Senate, carrying appropriations for the Department of State, and so forth, carries only a small appropriation as compared with the Treasury and Post Office Departments bills. Moreover, the two bills to which I have referred and where the reduction was attempted to be made in the aggregate by 10 per cent, to no great extent carried appropriations relating to property of the United States. They carried appropriations relating to services, generally speaking. Only one of those bills carried any item of appreciable consequence. That item consisted of over $11,000,000, and yet I had the vigorous disapproval and opposition of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] when I proposed that the item be stricken from the bill.

In the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill the Congress has a responsibility respecting the property of the Government. That property no doubt runs into millions of dollars in value. The Government has its investment. The investment of the Government in this property ought to be preserved. Any individual corporation or institution would regard it as the height of extravagance, willful extravagance, if you please, if the board of directors of that corporation or those in control of the business permitted the property to be depreciated, to run down, to suffer a great loss in value. Conduct of that kind on the part of the board of directors of a corporation would bring severe criticism from the stockholders. The first duty of trustees and the first duty of those whose obligation it is to preserve the investment of a corporation is jealously to see to it that the investment is preserved intact and that no loss shall come to that property. So with the Congress of the United States. It is our duty to see that property which belongs to the Government of the United States shall be properly preserved, so that the people of the country will not lose a large portion of the investment they have made in their property.

The point I am making is that we can not, by the rule of ten, expect to discharge our trusteeship in the preservation of the property of the Government, and thus of the people of the United States. I do not know what item in the bill is designed for the protection of the property of the Government nor the amount thereof. I have not had the time to ascertain. I voted for the recommitting of the Interior Department appropriation bill and the other bill which is now the unfinished business of the Senate as reported by the Appropriations Committee. I voted for a 10 per cent reduction in the aggregate of each of those bills. But, as I have explained, those bills carried appropriations largely for personal services and for other items which might be deferred during these times. I, however, could have no knowledge presently, without going to individual Senators outside the regular course of procedure in the Senate, to learn what ought to be done respecting a bill that carries the large appropriation that is provided in the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. All that is asked by the resolution is that the bill be sent to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions. I have examined with some degree of care the Interior Department appropriation bill, the State, Labor, Justice, and Commerce appropriation bill, and likewise the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill, which we now have before us, and I believe that the 10 per cent cut can be made as easily and as economically in the appropriations for the two last-named departments as in the appropriations for the other departments, probably more easily, because included in the Treasury and Post Office bill there are a number of subsidies and a number of appropriations without which the Government could be run just as well as with them.

The Senator from Wisconsin is not on the Appropriations Committee, but the Senator usually defers to the judgment of the committee, and all that is proposed here is to send the bill back to the committee and let the committee suggest what items, if any, should be cut.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have great confidence in the judgment of the Senator from Tennessee, but I have an individual responsibility in this situation. I have no right to substitute his judgment for what my judgment ought to be after a consideration of the bill. I can not discharge my responsibility under such circumstances. The bill is not before us; the motion is not to recommit the bill. What the Senate is proposing to do in this respect is to resolve itself into a caucus, and to resolve that a committee of that caucus carry out certain instructions, when the caucus has not even the measure before it upon which the caucus is going to give advice. That is exactly the status in which the Senator from Tennessee proposes to place the Senate of the United States.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. BLAINE. It is exactly, and the Senate can not escape it.

Mr. MCKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me, I think I can explain the situation fully. The truth of the matter is that I was one of those who did not vote for this proposed action; it was taken over my protest, but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], called a meeting of the committee——

Mr. BLAINE. I understand all that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator understands it, of course it is no use for me to discuss it.

Mr. BLAINE. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that I understand all that, and there is no use of repeating it. I do not want to be discourteous, but that information is known, I think, to everyone. However, I make the point that we can not discharge our obligation respecting these appropriations until the bill is before the Senate. When the committee shall report this bill back to the Senate, asking for instructions, then the Senate will have an opportunity to determine whether or not there should be a 10 per cent reduction in the aggregate; whether or not specific items ought to be reduced more than 10 per cent; whether or not specific items should be exempted or excepted from that rule. The Senate has no such opportunity now. We can not vote upon this resolution intelligently; we are absolutely without the information.

So, Mr. President, I submit that while I voted for recommitting the other two bills, that was entirely upon the proposition that the bills were before us. We had studied the items; we understood what they were; in a general way we knew about each item. We had before us specific items; we could pass upon them and we could then exercise our judgment as whether or not a 10 per cent reduction in the aggregate was a proper reduction. I think Members of the Senate ought to have opportunity, when the bill is before the Senate, to suggest amendments to the instructions accompanying the recommittal of the bill. There are some items, perhaps, that ought to be reduced 25 per cent; other items that ought to be reduced 10 per cent; other items, perhaps, that ought not to be reduced at all; but there at least ought to be a consideration of the bill here in the Senate, when the bill is before the Senate, before we resolve to instruct the Appropriations Committee.

It does not seem to me that the committee can disregard its general responsibility under the rules. If the committee does not want to consider the bill, if it is unwilling to take the responsibility, then let us ask that the committee be discharged, so that the bill may be brought back to the Senate; and, if such a motion is in order, Mr. President—and I think it is—I propose now to make a motion to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from the further consideration of House bill 9699. I make that motion in no manner whatever intending to reflect upon the committee—not at all—but I make the motion in the interest of orderly procedure. The committee having indicated that it will not assume the responsibility of reporting the bill to the Senate, then I suggest I am quite certain that the committee can not complain when it is asked to be discharged from the consideration of the bill.

Let the bill come before the Senate in the regular course, under the regular procedure. Then the Senate will have jurisdiction of the bill; the Senate can then determine whether or not the bill shall be recommitted; whether or not certain items shall be exempt from specific reductions, and whether or not specific items may not be reduced considerably more than 10 per cent.

Mr. President, I submit my motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does not the Senator fear that the result of that course will be to increase the amounts carried in the various appropriation bills as they come from the House, and has not that been the experience in the past? I am asking for the Senator's view on the subject.

Mr. BLAINE. My view, Mr. President, is that our past experience has shown that the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate have, in many instances, increased the appropriations made by the House of Representatives; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it not almost the invariable rule?

Mr. BLAINE. I would not accuse the Appropriations Committee of going that far.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me further, I am not accusing the Committee on Appropriations of anything. The pressure here for appropriations, as the Senator knows, is terrific; everybody advocates reductions in the cost of government on every item except the particular one in which he is interested, and then he not only wants that maintained but he wants it increased, so that if we are ever to cut down the total cost of government we must find some process of doing it that is different from the regular ordinary course of procedure. I know, if the Senator will pardon me just one brief further statement, how carefully he studies these measures, and I know what attention he must have given to them; but I fear that the result of the proposal that he is making now will be to increase rather than diminish appropriations; and, as I see it, there is a real necessity of diminishing the cost of government; it is too high.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I must disagree with the Senator from Arkansas. In my opinion, the course I have suggested will not have a tendency to increase the appropriation. Obviously it can not do so, because all my motion involves is that the committee be discharged from the consideration of the bill. The committee, therefore, will make no recommendations whatever, either as to increases or decreases.

I simply want to bring the bill before the Senate, the Senate having the responsibility, then act upon the bill when it is in the Senate, and not resolve ourselves into a caucus and adopt a resolution instructing the Appropriations Committee to do a certain thing. As I said when I made the motion, it should not be regarded in any way as a reflection upon the committee. It is rather assisting the committee out of the hole in which possibly it has put itself. The suggestion goes to the point of bringing the bill before the Senate. The motion which the Senator from Tennessee made respecting the other two appropriation bills could then be made after we consider the bill on the floor of the Senate. Then the Senate would be in a position to ascertain whether or not there should be a 10 per cent reduction or a 15 per cent reduction or a 20 per cent reduction in the aggregate or some reduction in specific items and greater reductions on other specific items, depending entirely upon the viewpoint of a majority of the Senate.

What I am setting forth is that the Senate has nothing before it except a resolution of instructions, after we have resolved ourselves into nothing more nor less than an ordinary caucus. I think it is an undignified performance for the Senate to engage in that sort of thing, when we have a perfectly parliamentary way by which the bill can be brought to the floor of the Senate and here be acted upon as we act upon other bills.

So, Mr. President, I insist on my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the motion may be entered, but it can not be considered at this time except by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I was going to suggest that there is another motion already pending, and I should like to say a word or two with reference to it.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I had not yielded the floor.

Mr. JONES. I thought the Senator had; I beg his pardon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Wisconsin to have concluded.

Mr. BLAINE. I wanted to make a parliamentary inquiry, and then I shall yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLAINE. The motion, as I understand, may be entered under the rules?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It may be entered under the rules.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, will it not come up the following day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would have to lie over one day.

Mr. BLAINE. That, I think, is unfortunate unless we can carry the pending question over until to-morrow or unless unanimous consent can be obtained.

Mr. President, I am not making this as a mere petty objection. I do not want to obstruct progress in the Senate; I want to increase the speed with which we are undertaking legislation; and I think the course I suggest would be in the interest of orderly procedure and in the interest of the conservation of time, and the Senate would then be in a position more fairly and more properly to discharge its obligations, as I know every Senator wants them discharged.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, usually a motion to discharge a committee from the consideration of a bill carries with it the implication that the committee to whom the bill has been referred has been dilatory in acting upon the measure.

Mr. BLAINE. Does not the Senator think that I have made my position clear in that respect?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I know that the Senator from Wisconsin has no such thought in his mind; but it does seem to me, in view of the painstaking efforts which the Appropriations Committee has made and in view of its promptness to act and of its readiness to respond to directions imposed by the Senate, that nothing helpful would be accomplished by agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

For my part, I shall not object to voting on the motion at this time. If the Senator desires to submit a request for unanimous consent, I would not interpose the slightest objection, because, manifestly, the disposition of his motion is essential to progress on the bill; but I would not vote for the motion, because I do not believe it would accomplish the purpose which I am sure the Senator from Wisconsin has in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection——

Mr. BLAINE. Just a moment. I want to make it perfectly clear that my motion carries no implication whatever respecting the Committee on Appropriations. There is no suggestion that it has been dilatory. There is no suggestion that the committee has been negligent or that it has been careless. The committee has been diligent, but the Senate, in the case of two prior bills, has instructed the committee to reduce the aggregate of the appropriations 10 per cent. I can readily understand the position that the committee found itself in and I can readily understand why members of the Committee on Appropriations felt that since the Senate had voted thus twice before, the probabilities were that the Senate would again vote the same way on the bill in question. Therefore I can readily understand how the committee, with the best of intentions, with no thought of shirking its responsibilities or its duties in any degree whatever, should make the request that it has made.

I submit, however, that the orderly way of procedure is the way I have suggested by motion to discharge the committee, and I think we will get farther and make more progress by following that course. Let the bill come before the Senate. Let the Senate have the opportunity to determine what exceptions shall be made, if any exceptions shall be made, and how much the reductions shall be either respecting certain items or respecting the aggregate of the appropriations.

Therefore I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he makes that motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield before making the motion?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. Just for a statement, because I feel very keenly on this matter.

The subcommittee, of which I am the chairman, has been expecting to meet any day to write up this bill. The responsibility for not calling the meeting, to a large extent, has been on me. We have been waiting until the Senate could act on the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee. I do not think it will take the subcommittee long to write up the bill when the resolution is disposed of. Then the full committee must act on it. Then the Senate will have the bill as the committee believes it should be passed under the instructions of the Senate.

There are a great many items in this bill that do not relate particularly to appropriations. There are questions of policy. I have called attention before to the hearings held by the committee. I wish the Senator could study those hearings. They comprise about 1,200 pages. It would be impossible to present the facts in detail before the Senate without taking a long time, and it would take up time of the Senate which should be given to something else.

The committee exists for the purpose of carrying on certain detailed work. It has heard many, many witnesses. Its members have studied these problems. They are almost ready to act. I feel that if the committee is discharged, what it has done will be lost. The advantages the committee has gained by getting opinions and facts from many witnesses will be completely lost.

I think if the bill goes through in the regular way, and if the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee is defeated, as I hope it will be, we shall be able to proceed much more quickly. I know how earnest and anxious the Senator from Wisconsin is to effect adequate savings and economies; but I think he will be saved a vast amount of work, and the Senate will be saved a great deal of work and time, by allowing the matter to go through in the other way.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, it seems inconceivable that the subcommittee has anticipated what the Senate might do. The Senator has suggested that it will not take very long to complete the bill if the Senate will give its instructions, because a great deal of work has been done upon it. We are not pursuing a course that is designed to bring about the proper economy with respect to the items in which there should be economy. That is exactly the situation confronting the Senate with respect to this bill; and I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of my motion at this time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio before the submission of his request?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I understood his motion was a motion to discharge a committee, but I do not know the status of it. Does it refer to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BLAINE. The Committee on Appropriations, so that the bill may come before the Senate, and then we can determine what instructions we will give in recommitting the bill.

Mr. FESS. On the ground that the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to refer the bill back to the committee with a cut of 10 per cent applies to something that has not yet been before the Senate?

Mr. BLAINE. The bill to which the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee applies is not before the Senate. We are undertaking to resolve ourselves into a sort of a caucus, resolving what the Senate's opinion will be on a matter that is not before the Senate.

Mr. FESS. That is the question I wanted to clear up.

Mr. BLAINE. I was anxious to have the bill brought before the Senate, so that the Senate could act upon the bill in some way. Of course, it will be recommitted.

Mr. FESS. Would not that be just simply delaying it?

Mr. BLAINE. In my opinion, it will expedite matters.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. Will not the Senator accomplish exactly what he has in mind if we can succeed, as I hope we can, in defeating the McKellar resolution? Then, as I understand, the bill would be brought to us in the normal way for us to determine for ourselves whether the action of the committee was a wise action in reference to the individual items.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator's suggestion that the resolution will be defeated is accurate, of course, the same thing will be accomplished. I can not vote for the resolution as it is presented, under the circumstances I have outlined, because I think it is entirely improper from a parliamentary standpoint and from a business standpoint.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I take exactly the same view. I think this is a dreadful way to attempt to legislate in appropriation bills. I think the bill should come to the Senate, and that the Senate should assume its fair share of responsibility, as well as making suggestions regarding the formulation of the bill.

Mr. DILL and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, we did that in the case of the Interior Department bill. We wasted a lot of time by going through that procedure. Why not act now? If the Senate wants to cut this appropriation, why not do it now? What is the use of letting the Senate committee go through all this work, bring this bill up here, fight it through, and then send it back to go all over it again?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that this resolution provides for a reduction of 10 per cent exclusive of provisions for building and construction.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it does not, Mr. President.

Mr. BLAINE. That was my understanding.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. I am just as much opposed——

Mr. BLAINE. That is a proposed amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that is a proposed amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. How is the Senate to determine these important matters? This bill is not like the Interior bill or the bill that is now before the Senate dealing with the State, Commerce, and other departments. This bill, as I understand, carries enormous appropriations and many items, running into the tens of millions. It is a bill of entirely different character. The Post Office and Treasury bill relates to property that belongs to the United States. This country has made an investment in those properties. Therefore we can not or should not arbitrarily cut an appropriation where it becomes necessary to preserve the investment that the Government has made. It is of an entirely different character, so far as the projects are concerned, than either of the two bills we have passed upon.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. If I understood the Senator correctly, he read this resolution as if it contained an exemption so far as public buildings are concerned; did he not?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAINE. I understand that that is an amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. COPELAND. It is an amendment that has been proposed, but has not been adopted.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. The resolution offered by the Senator from Tennessee provided for a 10 per cent cut on every item in the bill. The amendment which I offered provides that the provisions for public buildings and construction shall not be included in the 10 per cent cut.

Mr. BLAINE. That is my understanding now. I had the resolution sent to me, and I took it as it appeared. That does not change the situation one bit, in my opinion.

Mr. COPELAND. I agree with the Senator, but, of course, it would help a little bit. I think, however, the wise thing to do, if we have the votes to do it, is to defeat the McKellar resolution. Then the thing that the Senator has in mind, and that the rest of us have in our minds, too, will be accomplished.

Mr. BLAINE. I feel convinced that the procedure I have suggested is the usual and proper and parliamentary procedure, and that it ought to be followed, instead of the Senate resolving itself into a sort of a caucus, and thus, through that method, giving instructions to a committee. It is an unusual thing, an unheard-of thing.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the motion to discharge the committee.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, has the Senator yielded the floor?

Mr. BLAINE. I have.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this seems to be a very peculiar procedure; at least, it appears so to me. It may not appear so to the Senator from Wisconsin. Probably I am very dull in regard to such matters.

The Appropriations Committee recognizes that it is the agent of the Senate. It is the creature of the Senate. It is subject to the instructions and directions of the Senate. Instead of considering this as a sort of a caucus proposition, it seems to me under the circumstances that it is a rather intelligent proceeding.

The Senate twice has sent appropriation bills back to the committee with instructions to cut the aggregate amount carried by them 10 per cent below the amount carried by the House bill. The last one that was recommitted was sent back without considering the different items. We considered only one or two and then the Senate sent the bill back to the committee with these instructions.

I recognize, as the Senator from Wisconsin suggests, that to a certain extent this bill is of a different character than these other bills. It does involve a tremendous sum of money. It involves most important activities of the Government, and yet it has been announced on the floor of the Senate before the last bill was sent back to the committee that the committee would consider that the policy of the Senate if it should be sent back.

Then this bill came up. We considered these phases of it, the character of it, the appropriations carried by it, how it affects the different activities throughout the Government, like the Rural Delivery Service, the rural service, the mail service, and all that sort of thing. We felt that the Senate really ought to tell the committee whether it wanted the committee to apply the 10 per cent rule to a bill of this character—a bill that involves over a billion dollars. A 10 per cent cut would be a cut of over $105,000,000. It did not seem to us that there was any disrespect to the Senate, but we thought we were really acting as the agents of the Senate, and we were glad to have its direction.

So we authorized the Senator from Tennessee to offer this resolution and directed him to do it. Of course, if the Senate does not want to adopt the resolution, they can vote it down and the subcommittee is ready to go to work on the bill. It has had all of its hearings and is ready to go to the items. But with the experience we had with reference to one bill, reporting it to the Senate as the committee thought the bill should be reported, the Senate considering it for a couple of weeks, and then sending it back to the committee with instructions to cut it down 10 per cent, we thought this action would be advisable. We thought it was showing proper respect and proper regard for our creator, the Senate of the United States, to ask for its instructions on an important matter like that, especially as the Senate had sent an appropriation bill back to the committee without considering any of the different items in the bill, directing the committee to cut out 10 per cent. The committee directed the Senator from Tennessee to offer this resolution. The resolution certainly is in order so far as that is concerned.

I am perfectly willing for the Senate to vote on the resolution, which amounts to a motion to discharge the committee. If the Senate thinks that its agent has not been doing its duty, has not shown the Senate proper respect and proper regard and proper consideration, let the Senate discharge the committee from further consideration of the measure, bring the bill back to the floor, and consider it on the floor of the Senate without any recommendation from us.

We feel that we have been showing proper regard for the Senate; that we have shown our desire to treat this bill in the proper kind of way. It is a most important measure; it deals with most important activities of the Government. I am perfectly willing to waive the right to ask that the resolution go over, perfectly willing that the Senate may vote upon it now, discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill, and bring it before the Senate, and let the Senate act upon it just as it sees fit to act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. All I wished to do was to have the Senator from Washington, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, verify the fact that this is not really my resolution. I had nothing to do with it; I did not offer it. The committee was not called at my request at all. I was perfectly willing to accept the statement which the Senator from Washington had made on the floor, that the same course be pursued in regard to this bill that was pursued in regard to the other bill. But I call attention to the fact that the Senator from New York, who is now criticizing me, as I have understood him, for introducing the resolution, was one of the promoters of the resolution before the Committee on Appropriations. I did not even vote for it. I am just doing what the committee instructed me to do.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JONES. In just a moment.

I take all the responsibility for this action. I considered this such an important bill that I did call the committee together to consider whether or not we should follow the policy which had been adopted in regard to two preceding bills and cut the appropriations 10 per cent or whether we should submit that question to the Senate again. The resolution did not originate with the Senator from Tennessee. I am perfectly willing to take all the responsibility for the action, however simple it may have been.

Mr. FESS and Mr. COPELAND addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I am still in the dark about the situation. Is the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to discharge the committee from the consideration of the appropriation bill?

Mr. JONES. The Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill.

Mr. FESS. If the committee should be discharged, what would become of the bill?

Mr. JONES. It would come back to the Senate for consideration here.

Mr. FESS. As I read the resolution offered by the Senator from Tennessee, it seems to be merely an expression of the sense of the Senate as to what the committee should bring in.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is it.

Mr. JONES. That is correct; it is asking for the sense of the Senate on this bill, whether we shall take the same action on this bill we have taken as to two preceding bills.

Mr. FESS. While I am opposed to the resolution and am going to vote against it, it seems to me it is regular to bring it up now.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I wanted to ask the Senator, because I am sure he is informed on the subject, whether or not the construction appropriation provided for in the Treasury appropriation bill refers only to projects which are actually now in the process of construction or whether it provides for new projects? I understand it covers new projects, and that if we cut the appropriation further it will mean not only that we are not going to reemploy anybody now out of employment but that we are actually going to add to unemployment by compelling the further dismissal of employees now upon the pay roll.

Mr. JONES. That is probably true. Only $108,000,000 is included in the bill for construction of public buildings. We do not have to reduce that, even under the 10 per cent proposition of the Senator from Tennessee. We can make our cut somewhere else, or we can cut a million off that, or five millions off it, or any amount we may desire to cut off. It is for the construction of buildings which have already been authorized.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to call attention to the testimony on that subject:

> Mr. MARTIN. Senator, that is the lump-sum appropriation to carry on the work on projects already under contract and projects that will be put under contract during this year.

Mr. JONES. Those which have been authorized.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are 50 of those under the bill.

Mr. BLAINE and Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. I was going to inquire whether the Senator can point to any precedent where the Senate has been asked for instructions by the Committee on Appropriations before they reported a bill?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I can not point to any precedent. Nor can I point to any precedent for the situation which confronts the Senate, or any precedent for the action the Senate has taken in sending back to the Committee on Appropriations appropriation bills with instructions to cut off so many per cent below what the House provided.

Mr. BLAINE. Just one other question. Precedents are numerous to the effect that bills have been recommitted to committees.

Mr. JONES. That is true.

Mr. BLAINE. And therefore the precedent has not been changed or restricted or enlarged by rereferring these appropriation bills to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES. I know that. There is no question about the motion being in order when there is not another motion pending; but it may have to lie over for a day. I make no point on that at all.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I wanted to say this a long time ago, but could not get recognition. I want to say now that I am no promoter of the resolution which is pending before the Senate. The Senator from Tennessee practically served notice on the committee that he intended to offer this resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no, Mr. President. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I refused to vote for it. It was not my suggestion at all. It came from the Senator from Washington, and the Senator will bear me out; and, as I recall distinctly, the Senator from New York was present, and, unless I am greatly mistaken, he voted for the resolution. If I am mistaken about that, I wish to have the Senator from New York correct me, because I would not do him an injustice for anything under heaven, not at all. But my distinct recollection is that the Senator from Washington proposed that I be instructed, and I think the records will show that I was instructed, to offer this resolution. It was not my motion at all. I desired to let the matter go just as the Senator from Washington had left it on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator had announced on the floor of the Senate, during the consideration of the other bill, that he intended to make the same kind of motion with reference to every appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. JONES. I just assumed that he intended to make the motion with reference to this bill, and that is why I called the full committee together. In justice to the Senator, I will say that he did not call the matter up, or suggest it, or anything of the kind, except that he announced on the floor that he intended to make the same motion with reference to every appropriation bill.

Mr. COPELAND. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. I would like to know how I lost the floor a moment ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington has not yielded the floor since he was recognized.

Mr. COPELAND. He yielded the floor to me to make a comment, and in the midst of my comment the Senator from Tennessee interrupted me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hold hereafter that no Senator may yield except for a question.

Mr. JONES. I will yield the floor to the Senator from New York now for such remarks as he cares to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas desired to ask a question.

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desired to ask the Senator from Washington whether it was in his mind, and in the minds of other members of the committee, that instructions in advance would be of assistance to the committee in the performance of its duties?

Mr. JONES. Very decidedly so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I add that I think the committee has been diligent and faithful in the discharge of its duties, and I do not think the Senate ought to discharge the committee from consideration of this bill before it has had the opportunity of performing its functions in connection with the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the Chair is entirely right in enforcing the rule that a Senator may not be interrupted except for a question. I have been a Member of this body for nearly 10 years, and have tried on every occasion to observe strictly the rules, and to show courtesy to my fellow Senators. I have observed, however, to be frank, that one of the effective ways to get the floor is to rise and begin to talk. I refuse to do that. I want to do whatever I have to do in this body in a parliamentary, courteous, brotherly fashion, and when I can not do that any more I will retire from the body.

Mr. President, yesterday I made a plea to the Senate to have culled out from all the appropriation bills those items which deal with expenditures for projects permanent in their nature, for those projects which we call "capital investments."

There is no reason in the world why the taxpayer of this year and of next year should pay his money for the construction of buildings and public works which are to be used for the next 25, 50, or 100 years. It is an absurd thing.

If we had lots of money, if we had a surplus in the Treasury, as we have had during the fat years of the past, it would be all right to take the surplus and apply it toward capital investment. But no prudent man, no corporation, would think of increasing the capital investment, and add its cost on to the current Budget.

Yesterday, to make clear what I have in mind, I asked that certain figures be included in the RECORD. I left the city after I had finished my remarks, and did not have a chance to review the manuscript. I find to my regret that the RECORD does not show the figures which I intended to have presented. I do not blame the official reporters or the Printing Office, because it would be very easy to be confused. A moment ago, in going over the RECORD with the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], it was apparent that the figures were wrong. I have gone to the Committee on Appropriations to make sure whether or not a mistake occurred, and I find that one did occur.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the correct figures, which I have indicated on the paper I have before me, and which I will explain to the reporter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not think it makes any difference how the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee originated. I know and I think I am right in saying it was common knowledge that the Senator intended to present a resolution to have the bill recommitted with directions for a 10 per cent reduction. Therefore the Appropriations Committee, wishing to learn how its work might proceed in an orderly fashion, suggested to the Senator that he present his resolution, and do so at once. But, mind you, he was put on notice by several members of the committee, of whom I was one, that the idea of a 10 per cent reduction on this particular bill did not appeal to us, certainly not to me.

I think it would be an outrageous thing at this time, when we need to have public works going on in our country in order that employment may proceed and in order that starvation may cease to make such a reduction as is proposed. We should go forward with our activities and not stop them.

Further, I can not conceive it possible that the Senate of the United States should force the Appropriations Committee into a position where it may become necessary to recommend a material reduction in the ocean mail contracts. I know we could do it, as I said yesterday. Sovereigns can do anything. But there is a moral and a legal obligation resting upon the Government of the United States to carry out its contracts with the shipping interests of the country. If we wish to put shipping on the rocks, if we wish to put shipping into bankruptcy, if we wish to ruin the American merchant marine, if we wish to undermine the national defense, if we wish to continue to send into bread lines men who want to work, we can proceed with the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee. Its passage will prepare the way for such a reduction in the appropriations for public works and essential services that poverty will increase in the United States and distress will be greater even than it is to-day.

Mr. President, I had not intended to say all that, but I have said it, and I mean it. I beg of Senators that they will not think of passing the resolution when the knowledge is in the heart of each of us that to do it means to increase misery in the United States and to work a failure on the part of the Government to perform a part of its obligation in relieving the distress of our fellow countrymen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin for immediate consideration of his motion to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from further consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, to what bill does the motion relate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill which is now pending before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRATTON. I object.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will not object. Let us vote on the motion. The Senator from Wisconsin insists that he wants the matter to go over until to-morrow unless we can vote on it to-day. If he desires a vote on it, let us have it.

Mr. BRATTON. Unfortunately, I was out of the Chamber when the Senator from Wisconsin submitted his request.

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection and let us vote.

Mr. BRATTON. Very well; in deference to the views just expressed I withdraw my objection.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may the request be stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Wisconsin is that unanimous consent be given for the present consideration of his motion to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from the further consideration of the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to address myself for a few moments to a matter which is directly related to the question involved in the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill.

The select committee for investigation of post-office leases has made a thorough examination of leases which are characterized as the large leases judged by the amount of annual revenue; that is, leases carrying $6,000 or more as an annual rental. I desire to introduce at the close of my remarks a bill to carry out suggestions which I am about to make. Before introducing the bill, however, which I believe will remedy the existing evils and also permit the Government to escape the unconscionable rentals which the Government is paying for these larger leaseholds, I desire to outline briefly a constructive construction program.

The plan for a construction program to house the facilities now located in leased properties in the buildings to be constructed in the next four years is shown by a table which I have prepared and which I desire to have inserted in the RECORD at this point. The table shows the number of leases for each year, the date of their expiration, the annual rentals, and the total rentals for the 292 leases involved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

	Number of properties	Annual rental
All leases expiring during fiscal year ending—
June 30, 1932	24	$394,926.49
June 30, 1933	40	677,088.00
June 30, 1934	48	913,477.02
June 30, 1935	56	979,956.56
June 30, 1936	49	1,071,497.34
June 30, 1937	34	576,357.37
Total	251	4,613,302.78
Expiring subsequent to June 30, 1937, but containing a Government building cancellation clause	41	1,282,332.00
Total	292	5,895,634.78

Mr. BLAINE. An examination of all leases of facilities of every nature whatever of the Post Office Department (embracing all main post offices, branches and stations, garages and railway mail terminals) discloses that as of March 1, 1932, there were 367 leases, for which the rental is $6,000 or more per annum, amounting to an annual rental charge of $7,918,533.12.

An analysis of these leases discloses that 75 of them (or 20 per cent of the total number), carrying an annual rental charge of $2,022,898.37 (or 25 per cent of total rental), expire subsequent to June 30, 1937; and in each and every one of these leases there was eliminated the so-called Government building cancellation clause, providing, in substance, that the lease could be terminated and canceled upon 90 days' notice in writing to the lessor whenever the Post Office Department shall decide to move the facility into a Government-owned building which shall have been provided for it.

This leaves 292 leases (or 80 per cent of total number), carrying an annual rental charge of $5,895,634.78 (or 75 per cent of total rental), which expire on or before June 30, 1937, or which expire subsequent to June 30, 1937; but said leases contain a so-called Government building clause.

If this program shall be adopted, there will be an annual rental reduction or saving in rental after buildings are completed of approximately $6,000,000 a year.

There have been few changes in the leasing situation since June 30, 1930. The rentals on but two large leased properties have been discontinued. The commercial station property at St. Paul, Minn., has been acquired through condemnation by the United States as of November 22, 1929, thereby eliminating the rent charge, which at the rate of $120,000 a year from November 22, 1929, to November 5, 1941, the date of the expiration of the lease, would have amounted to $1,434,666.

The sum paid into the United States district court in payment for this property amounted to $416,178.45, which shows a saving in rentals on that one property alone amounting in round numbers to $1,000,000. Of the sum paid into the United States district court, $325,254.66 represented the amount of the award of the jury rendered on May 10, 1930, as being the fair market value of the property as of November 22, 1929, the date of the award of the board of commissioners, which was in the sum of $317,562; and also $57,166 represented an estimated saving to the Government of seven months' rent of other Government activities occupying leased quarters in St. Paul, it being estimated that the ultimate completion of the new building would be accelerated by seven months under the plan of settlement finally agreed upon; and also $33,557.79 represented interest at 6 per cent, as provided for under the laws of the State of Minnesota, on $382,420.66 from November 22, 1929, to May 12, 1931, the date of the voucher of the Treasury Department.

The only other large lease which has been terminated since June 30, 1930, is that covering the Van Buren Station property at Chicago, which carried an annual rental charge from December 1, 1922, to November 30, 1923, of $545,272; from December 1, 1923, to November 30, 1927, of $500,000, and from December 1, 1927, to November 30, 1942, the date of the expiration of the lease, of $310,000. The purchase of the Van Buren postal facility was embraced in the legislation authorizing an appropriation of $24,725,000 for a new post-office building in Chicago, and it appears that the payment of rental on the Van Buren property was discontinued as of June 29, 1931.

In the original program of the Postmaster General, contained in his special report to the President, it is disclosed that the ratio between the estimated expenditures necessary for the construction of 106 properties to the annual rental of those properties under existing leases is 12.5; that is, it would take a sum equal to twelve and one-half times the annual rental to cover the estimated cost of constructing new buildings; in other words, the sum of $45,000,000 will have to be appropriated to provide for the construction of new buildings to use the postal facilities now located in leased properties carrying an annual rental charge of $3,600,000.

It will be noted that I am citing from the report of the Postmaster General to the President.

However, the records of the committee as to post-office leases disclose that there are 292 properties covered by leases which expire on or before June 30, 1937, or which expire subsequent to that date, but the leases contain the so-called Government building cancellation clause, and that these 292 properties carry an annual rental charge of $5,895,000.

However, Mr. President, it is not necessary that a construction program cover each and every one of these 292 properties for the following reasons:

In some cases, in congested metropolitan centers, it would be more economical to continue to rent quarters for postal facilities even though the annual rental exceeded the sum of $6,000. On this point the Postmaster General in his special report to the President stated:

> There are special conditions to be considered, of course, such as the probable degree of permanence of the need for quarters of a particular kind in a particular location; the high cost of metropolitan properties, and so on; so that it would obviously not follow that the Government should invariably own its own quarters in preference to paying rental in excess of this figure ($6,000).

Then, again, the $700,000,000 general building program, a portion of which, or, for all we know, all of which may be suspended by proposals affecting appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, provides for the construction of some buildings which will house some of the facilities located in leased quarters carrying an annual rental charge of $6,000 or more per annum. This program has had no appreciable effect in reducing rental charges on the major leased properties up to the present time, but this reduction, it is hoped, will be accelerated beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933.

On the other hand, the necessity for additional space to care for the increased business of the Post Office Department will, in the absence of a special construction program, necessitate the leasing of larger quarters in the near future, and even though the rental per square foot may be in some small degree reduced, due to the lower rental conditions prevailing throughout the country, it is believed that the rent charged in the aggregate will of necessity increase from year to year.

Mr. President, if anything like a proportionate increase in space would be necessary generally respecting the 292 properties to which I have heretofore referred in order to provide for the growth of the service, it is obvious that an appropriation of $45,000,000 would be far from adequate to cover the cost of the construction of new buildings to house postal facilities now located in leased quarters carrying a rental charge of $3,600,000 per annum. Therefore, it is clear that the figure of $45,000,000 is in nowise an excessive estimate as an amount which may very properly be spent during the next three years to reduce the rent bill of the Post Office Department. Herein lies a reasonable method by which to bring about economy.

An analysis of the testimony of the Postmaster General before the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee of the House of Representatives clearly demonstrates that it is more advantageous for the Government to authorize expenditures for the construction of new buildings than for the purchase of buildings now occupied under lease. The figures testified to by the Postmaster General concerning the recommendation for the purchase of properties did not take into consideration the necessity for providing additional space to care for the growth of the postal service, though the legislation recommended in his last annual report authorized the Secretary of the Treasury "to enlarge, extend, or remodel any building acquired" under the bill.

Three years hence, at the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, the Government will face three alternatives: First, to continue to lease quarters now occupied under lease, at renewal rates in all probability higher per square foot than now prevailing under existing leases, and because of the necessity for providing for the increased growth of the service to lease larger quarters, thereby increasing the aggregate annual rental. Furthermore, it must be remembered that as of June 30, 1935, many of these leased postal facilities will have been located from 10 to 15 years, while the needs of the service may have materially changed during that time; and yet at the ultimate termination of the leases the Government will have nothing in the way of a fixed investment to show for its expenditures for rent.

Second alternative: To purchase some of the properties now occupied under lease. While this would, over a period of years, materially decrease the cost to the Government, it must be remembered that, as I have stated, in many cases the Government would continue to occupy a building which was located and constructed 10 or 15 years before while the needs of the postal service may have materially changed since that time.

The third alternative is to house all postal facilities, as far as practicable, in Government-owned buildings, effecting, it is conservatively estimated, a saving equivalent to more than one-third of the present annual rental, located according to present needs, constructed in accordance with the latest improvements in design, and possessing all of the advantages resulting from the experience of the past 10 years in the construction of postal facilities, and so constructed as to provide for the increasing needs of the service for the following 10 years.

The purpose, therefore, of the bill I shall introduce is to enter upon a program of construction that will ultimately displace the 292 leaseholds. Post-office leases of the character I am discussing, in practically all of the cases, run from 10 to 20 years. The necessary postal facilities that will displace the leased properties can be constructed out of the rentals paid, on the basis of past experience, in 12½ years.

The question arises, however, as to how the Government will be able to meet the construction cost. The new buildings will be of a permanent character and will undoubtedly serve the Government for the next 50 to 100 years. The investment will be a permanent investment, without rentals. Therefore, analogous to the practice of other governmental agencies—cities, counties, and school districts—throughout the United States, bonds should be issued to cover the construction cost of these permanent buildings as they proceed, such bonds running for a reasonable period of time, or short-term bonds, within which time the savings in rental will retire the bonds and the interest, and the Government will own its own buildings.

The program suggested, therefore, will place no additional burden upon the Treasury of the United States and will not involve the raising of a single dollar by taxation.

I also call attention to the question of whether or not the Government should purchase any of the leased buildings. In view of that question, the Select Committee on Post Office Leases obtained the services of a nationally known and well-organized appraisal company; and out of the 367 leaseholds a detailed appraisal was made of 51. That is a cross-section of the country and of the leases. I find from a study of such appraisals that with perhaps a single exception none of the present properties under leasehold should be purchased at this time. Many of the buildings are unsuitable, the construction inadequate, and altogether they are undesirable for permanent postal facilities.

Moreover, Mr. President, the suggested program of construction will afford employment on scores of building projects distributed all over this country—not wasteful projects but essential projects, where a large amount of material will be used and much labor employed. The bill I shall propose serves a double purpose—economy in the conduct of our Government and employment in constructive and essential public works.

I now introduce the bill, Mr. President, and ask that it be printed in full in the RECORD following my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLAINE introduced a bill (S. 4403) to amend the act of May 25, 1926, entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes," which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1926, as amended, is hereby further amended so as to provide that in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized to be appropriated for public building projects, the sum of $45,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the acquisition, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of sites and the construction of buildings to house the facilities of every nature whatever of the Post Office Department now housed in quarters occupied under leases at a rental of $6,000 or more per annum, and expiring on or before June 30, 1937, or expiring subsequent to June 30, 1937, when said leases contain a provision that said leases can be terminated upon 90 days' notice whenever the Post Office Department shall decide to move said facilities into a a Government-owned building provided therefor: Provided, That under this authorization not more than $15,000,000 shall be expended annually, except that any part of the balance of any appropriation made pursuant to this authorization which may remain unexpended at the end of any fiscal year may be expended in any subsequent fiscal year without reference to this limitation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE].

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE].

The motion was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am going to take a very short time to answer some of the suggestions which have been made by those who are opposed to the pending resolution.

I want first to state to the Senate that this resolution of mine was offered by direction of the Committee on Appropriations. It was not offered at my suggestion or instigation. I am simply carrying out the desire of the committee, and the committee honestly and properly desired the instructions of the Senate, and I was very glad to offer the resolution, after being instructed.

Before I go further, I want to say to my friend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] that in making suggestions about appropriations going to Nevada, I did not intend to take issue with him. The Senator from Nevada is working for his State, and that is perfectly proper and right, and I am not criticizing him. I was just appealing to him, under the circumstances, with our Treasury in the condition in which it is, not to ask for too much at this time. His State is a great State, there are many public lands in it, of course, and I can understand why he makes the request which he does make.

I want to say to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who addressed the Senate yesterday in opposition to the resolution, that he and I do not differ at all about the sale of foreign securities in this country. He and I do not differ at all about the moratorium. I voted with him in that matter, and I thought then I was right, and I have no reason to change my notion about it now and have not changed my notion about it. I agree with the Senator on that proposition.

The only thing about which I differ with the Senator is this: That at such a time as this I think we should all join in working out some systematic plan for the reduction of appropriations. Of course, if Senators are going to object to any plan which would cut down the appropriations for their own States, we could not get anywhere; but it seems to me that in the two appropriation bills which have been before the Senate, one of them the Interior Department appropriation bill and the other the appropriation bill for Commerce, State, Labor, and Justice Departments, we have worked out a 10 per cent reduction on a fair and just and equitable basis. I think the Committee on Appropriations has cooperated in the best of faith, so that those bills have been submitted to the Senate; and one of them has passed. All this resolution asks is that the same rule be applied to the Treasury and Post Office Departments bills as has been applied to the other two bills.

Some seem to think that we must take out certain appropriations; for instance, the appropriation for the Post Office Department; that there is not enough leeway there. I want to say that if we take the bill as a whole, we will find that we can reduce to a greater extent in the Treasury Department appropriation bill, if we so desire, than in the Post Office Department appropriation bill. The pending resolution does not require us to reduce 10 per cent of the postal appropriations and then 10 per cent of the Treasury appropriations. We go through the whole bill, and all we are required to do under the resolution is to reduce the appropriations 10 per cent in the whole bill.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just a moment. Let me assure the Senate that so far from it being more difficult to reduce the appropriations in the Treasury and Post Office bills than in the other two bills, in my humble judgment, there will be less difficulty, because under the Post Office appropriation bill there are enormous subsidies the Government is paying; and, in my judgment, a very considerable saving can be effected by cutting off those subsidies. I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I would like to say to the Senator from Tennessee that the thing which impressed me in what the Senator from California asked the Senator was with reference to the percentage of the Post Office appropriation which had to be paid as salaries. It was stated that 70 per cent of the appropriation would be paid in the way of salaries, and I saw a report which stated that it would be 71 per cent. Those salaries are fixed by law, and it is not possible to reduce them except by legislation unless some employees are dismissed. I understand that they might be dismissed. So that I thought it was a rational conclusion that the 10 per cent cut would have to be made on the 30 per cent or 29 per cent of the appropriations representing expenditures outside of salaries.

Expert reports have been made as to the public buildings contemplated. When one year certain buildings are completed in certain cities, another list is given us, and we are now in the process of the construction of the buildings enumerated in the last list which has been given. If a reduction is to be made, it would be very difficult, it would seem to me, for the department to discriminate against this building or that building, or this city or that city or State. It would be easy for them to say, "If you cut one out, we will just cut them all out."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will indulge me for eight minutes, I believe I can conclusively show to him and to every other Member of the Senate that such things as he fears will not take place.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to an interruption?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I do not want to make a speech; I do not intend to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought perhaps the Senator was about to, and I would be perfectly willing to have him do so.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is informed in regard to this matter, and I want to get his reaction.

It appears to me that the fear to which I have referred is involved in this matter, that instead of discriminating there might be a reduction in the public-building program involving quite a large lump sum.

I thought the Senator from California made a very strong point when he referred to our boasting about expending in the public-building program this year three times as much as we ever expended in any preceding year, that the public-building program is in the interest of taking up the unemployment, that if it was justifiable, as all of us believe it is, it is not, it seems to me, defensible that we go up the hill one day and the next day go down the hill.

If it was right to go into this great public-construction program to provide employment for labor—and I think it was, and the Senator thinks it was—it would be wrong now for us to rescind our action unless there is no other way by which we may effect economies. For that reason I think the Senator is not quite right when he says that we can make the cut by way of cutting out subsidies, because that involves a matter of legislation and would require corrective legislation. It strikes me that this is not a safe procedure to follow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will indulge me for just a few moments so that I may take up in order the points which have been suggested. I did not intend to do that, but I will follow that course.

The Postmaster General has sent in a report that he will have to cut down salaries, I have forgotten how much. To my mind, the Postmaster General is absolutely and entirely mistaken. Why do I say that? I have before me a statement of the appropriations for the Post Office Department since 1925. The Senator from Ohio, and every other Senator, knows that we have not discharged employees during those years in that department. Every Senator knows that we have treated that department fairly, and every Senator here knows that the Post Office Department did more business in the years 1925 and 1926 than it has done this year or than it will probably do next year. We appropriated $629,000,000 for the department in 1925. Employees were not discharged; indeed, salaries were raised about that time. No employees were discharged, no function of the department was done away with because we appropriated only $629,000,000. Now it is proposed, even if a 10 per cent reduction is sustained, to appropriate $730,000,000 for our Post Office Department.

Let us suppose there will be a flat reduction. We will have $730,000,000 as against $629,000,000 in 1925, $651,000,000 in 1926, $842,000,000 in 1927, which was one of the banner years, and $755,000,000 in 1928. We cut down the appropriation in 1928 from the appropriation of 1927 fully as much as it is proposed that we now cut the appropriation. There was no wholesale discharge of employees, no employees were thrown out of employment at all, and I say that if the proposed cut is made now, assuming the committee determines to make a 10 per cent flat reduction, or $80,000,000, leaving $730,000,000 as the amount to be appropriated, that will be ample to run the department.

I digress here long enough to say that any informed man in this country knows that the Post Office Department is not doing as much business now, by a very considerable extent, as it did in 1927 and 1928. The business has been cut down, the work is not there to do, and there is no reason for increasing the appropriation under such circumstances. To my mind it would be the height of extravagance to appropriate the same amount, and that is without regard to the enormous subsidies which are paid out under the proposals of this bill.

We cut from $842,000,000 in 1927 to $755,000,000 in 1928. We appropriated $766,000,000 in 1929, one of the banner years for business. Then we increased it in 1930 to $842,000,000, in 1931 we appropriated $840,000,000, in 1932 increased it to $844,000,000, and now it is proposed to set the figure at $805,000,000.

Senators, we are not getting the profits out of the Postal Service that we have gotten in the past. They are falling behind. That is somewhat due to subsidies. On the other hand, it is largely due to the falling off of business. The business is not there. It is not necessary to expend these vast sums of money for a lesser business than we did for a greater business. All we ask by the resolution is that the bill go back to the committee to work out a 10 per cent reduction such as we have done with the other bills, and under these figures I do not know how it can be gainsaid.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The cuts which the Senator has suggested be made must affect the employment. They are either dismissing employees in the Post Office Department or cutting salaries.

Mr. McKELLAR. They did not do it in previous years with substantially the same money. Why is it necessary? I will tell the Senator why it is necessary. The proposal to cut down 10 per cent in the various departments has been made the subject of a tremendous propaganda that has been sent out by the heads of the departments urging everybody to write letters to Congressmen and Senators protesting against any cut. We all know that every department head and every bureau head is intensely desirous of keeping the appropriations as large as possible.

But in this case the business is not there and they do not need it and they will not have to discharge anyone. The Senator knows and every other Senator knows that through my entire experience and course here I have been extremely generous in regard to the payment of salaries in this department, because I serve on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I take great pride in that department. I know they do a wonderful service there. I am willing to pay them liberally. There is no intent in the resolution to reduce salaries at all, for that matter. They need not be reduced. The only thing about it in my humble judgment is, if the Senator from Ohio wants to know it, that the Postmaster General came to the conclusion that that would be the most popular way to defeat the purpose.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The Senator knows that propaganda has no effect upon him nor upon the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, I do not think it has.

Mr. FESS. If it had any effect at all, it has just the opposite of the desired effect.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is true.

Mr. FESS. It is not that about which I am talking. It is the question of how we are going to reduce in 71 per cent of the appropriations unless we dismiss employees or cut their salaries. I do not see how it can be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. The proof of the pudding is the eating thereof. Here is what has been done in past years. We have not discharged any employees in past years. We have managed these departments so as not to have to discharge them. Instead of that we have increased the number of employees and we have increased their pay. There is no reason, with an appropriation of $725,000,000, if the committee felt that there should be a 10 per cent reduction, why the department can not run as heretofore. Any good business man in the United States can take $725,000,000, with a 10 per cent reduction, and successfully run the department.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the Senator relying entirely upon a cancellation of mail contracts to secure the saving he has in mind?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. I think several of those contracts ought to be canceled; probably every one of the ocean mail contracts ought to be canceled. I am inclined to think they are all void, and I intend to place that matter before the committee. I think it is a poor time, aside from everything else, to be paying these immense subsidies to the great, rich companies which are carrying the mail. I refer again to the United Fruit Co., to which the Government is paying an annual subsidy of $1,200,000—for what? For carrying mail of a negligible quantity. That is the way the vice president of the company stated it. I think he said there were a few pounds on one of the routes and maybe a thousand pounds on another route. He said it was negligible. Another witness spoke of it as "a hatful." We are paying to that company $1,200,000. Are the officers of that company in want? Are they unemployed? Do they need money from the Government?

The vice president of the company testified in answer to a question by me, "Is your company in pretty good condition?" He said, "We are worth from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000, and we do not owe anybody." I said, "You do not have any bonds on your plant or your ships?" "Oh, no; we have no bonds." They have $250,000,000 of assets, and in these distressing times we find our Government giving as a bonus to that one shipping company $1,200,000 a year when the vice president of that company boasted that they owe no debts, that they were paying dividends as usual, that they have no bonds outstanding, that the company's assets are worth $200,000,000 to $250,000,000.

I think the Congress of the United States has a duty to perform. I think that those contracts are absolutely void, as can be shown, and that will be one of the matters I shall submit to the committee. Whether the committee will take that view of it I do not know. Even if the committee did, the Senate might not take that view of it or the House might not take it. I am not prepared to say that it is unanswerable or that the situation is unexplainable. I am giving the facts. I think in equity and good conscience the Congress had better legislate in some way for the 8,000,000 unemployed in the country rather than to be giving large subsidies to great institutions such as I have mentioned, that need no money, that need no dole, that need no subsidy, that need no subvention. We had better give it to those who really need it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think that is a fine speech——

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not a speech. I am stating the facts. The only thing that I am presenting is a statement of facts taken from the record.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I would like to get back to the question I was propounding to the Senator. I am not discussing the merits or demerits of a subvention; neither am I discussing the merits or demerits of the legal responsibility of the Government, if any. I am asking if the Senator relies exclusively on that item to secure the desired 10 per cent reduction?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. I hope I am fair enough, and if I am not I know my fellow members of the committee are fair enough, to take up the bill item by item and go over it in the same painstaking, careful, prudent, businesslike way that we went over the other bills and reach a just conclusion about it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator knows that I have been in entire sympathy with the 10 per cent reduction idea, and still am.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and I thank the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems the Senator is putting the committee in an exceedingly unfortunate position.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was unavoidable. I had nothing to do with passing the resolution. I was in hopes, when the chairman of the committee made his statement on the floor of the Senate two or three weeks ago, when the Interior Department appropriation bill was before the Senate and a 10 per cent cut resolution was adopted, that it would be accepted by the Senate as a policy, and we would simply reduce the Treasury and Post Office Department bill in the same way we had reduced the other two bills. I had hoped that would be done. I am very sorry to have to bring it before the Senate in this way. It is not of my own volition. It is by direction of the committee, and I am simply carrying out the wishes of the committee in doing it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is almost impossible for any Member of the Senate to estimate intelligently for himself whether a 10 per cent reduction is possible until the bill is before the Senate for our consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Theoretically that is correct, but I think that the committee have acted so fairly and so justly in the matter of the other two bills that the Senate should permit the bill to go back to the committee upon the same terms. If the committee makes a mistake, the Senate is here to correct the mistake.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think that may be true, but I think also that the Senator must recognize the fact that the 10 per cent rule may not always prove to be practicable.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree to that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think it is exceedingly unfortunate that we should find ourselves in a position where the only alternative is the 10 per cent rule.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator about that, too.

Now, let me go to the Treasury Department portion of the bill, and there is only one argument to be made about it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before the Senator goes to that, may I ask him a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. My understanding is that the question of ocean mail pay, both as to rates and regularity of contracts, is not involved in the resolution at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will come up when the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely. It is one of 40 or 50 or 100 questions involved in the bill that will come before the committee when we give consideration to the bill in detail.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator from Michigan suggested a while ago that the 10 per cent rule might not be fair. Perhaps that is true; but it seems to me it would be more unfair to single out one or two departments and apply that rule and not apply it concerning the others. We have already applied it to the bill relating to the Interior Department. The committee made the cut, and the Senate sustained it in virtually every case, if not in every case. Having done that, it seems to me that consistency requires that we continue the 10 per cent rule so far as the committee is concerned. Perhaps the Senate might not adhere to the rule in every case, but I think the committee should be directed to follow the precedent established in the Interior Department case so far as subsequent bills are concerned. I do not think that we can consistently apply the rule to one department and not apply it to others.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator for his statement, in all of which I concur. It seems to me it is such a reasonable doctrine to be applied to this case that we all might very easily concur in it, and let the direction for a cut go back to the committee. If the committee is unable to comply, it will report back to the Senate. If we can not make the kind of reductions the Senate thinks ought to be made, the Senator will overrule the committee when we come back with our report.

It seems to me the statement made by the Senator from New Mexico is so fair and so just as to what we ought to do under these circumstances that we should give serious consideration to it. In other words, let us leave it to the committee to work it out and report back with the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield further to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I cordially agree with the sentiment expressed by the Senator from New Mexico, but I am pointing out that there is a different status when we blindly make the order in advance of consideration by the Senate, and therefore when the bill comes back, although I shall vote for the Senator's resolution, I reserve the right to pass judgment upon the situation when the full facts are ultimately disclosed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, the Senator may do it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. While I am opposed to the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee, it is not improper to suggest that this policy has also been applied to four different departments of the Government in another bill and before the bill was passed upon by the Senate. Let me say, in relation to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, that the 10 per cent reduction was applied to four departments before the Senate acted upon the items at all.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield further to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. I adverted to the fact that the committee had applied the rule to the Interior Department bill and that the Senate sustained the committee in that instance. The committee has applied the rule to four other departments without undue difficulty, and in the absence of unexpected occurrences the Senate will ratify those acts in most instances. Why should we depart from that rule in other instances? We should not do it, and the motion now submitted by the Senator from Tennessee does not depart from the procedure adopted in the case of the bill making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. BRATTON. It is the identical procedure.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true, because that bill was recommitted before it was considered by the Senate.

Mr. BRATTON. Exactly, although it is true that we considered the Interior Department appropriation bill before it was recommitted; but that is not so as to the other bill embracing the four departments.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I understood the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to state that the question of ocean subsidies would not be included in this motion.

Mr. McKELLAR. But they are in the bill. I said that I could not state what the committee would do about those subsidies; but I have no hesitancy in saying what I am going to do about them. I am unwilling, with millions of our people out of employment, to vote for any subsidies to great institutions.

Mr. BLACK. May I say to the Senator, just as an example, that I have here before me some data regarding an organization which, it seems, will not come within the purview of the motion, for which motion I expect to vote. I refer to the Export Steamship Corporation, which received last year from the Government $1,486,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The board of directors of that company is composed of some rather well-known gentlemen, including Mr. H. E. Frick.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think that he has ever applied for a dole. I do not recall his having done so.

Mr. BLACK. May I say to the Senator that they are getting a dole?

Mr. McKELLAR. They are not getting a dole, but they are the beneficiaries of the greatest governmental munificence ever known.

Mr. BLACK. The steamships operated by that line cost the Government $42,000,000; they were sold to that company for $1,299,000. After they bought them they secured large loans to operate them. Their operating deficit, they claim, was $315,000; they have a subsidy of $1,400,000, which gives them a dividend on what they receive from the Government of more than 25 per cent annually.

In addition to that, before they get the dividend the president of that company draws $100,000 salary per year out of money supplied from the United States Treasury. Does not the Senator from Tennessee think that it is of exceedingly great importance to do something to stop the expenditure of Government money for the payment of $100,000 salaries under such circumstances?

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator; and I want to say that the more I have examined into some of these contracts, the more convinced am I of the absolute truth of the saying of our Holy Master, Jesus Christ, that—

For he that hath, to him shall be given; and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath.

Mr. BLACK. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that, according to regular rates, the mail carried by this line, which consisted of less than 12 pounds first-class mail, could have been carried for less than $60,000, and yet the Government gave as a subsidy $1,400,000?

May I call the Senator's attention also to the list of directors, including such well-known gentlemen as Vincent Astor and J. P. Morgan, and a few others, who similarly need governmental assistance? Can the Senator not state to the Senate that he will ascertain from these shipping companies which are living off the taxpayers' money what salaries they are paying to those who work for them? Why should we not know what salaries are paid to shipowners and ship magnates and ship directors when they are living off the money of the taxpayers of this Nation? What excuse is there for paying out of the taxpayers' money $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 for the operation of shipping companies when some of them are paying their presidents $100,000 per year? Why should not that be investigated by the committee, so that we may have the information when the bill comes back to this body?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I see the Senator from Alabama is reading from a report that was made under a resolution which I submitted and which the Senate adopted. There is more than that in the report made in response to that resolution. I find in it that, though the law requires these contracts to be let under competitive bidding, 44 of them have been let, and there were competitive bids as to but 4, and 2 of them were let to the highest bidder. Every one of the other bidders got the highest rate the law allowed for carrying the mails, because there was no competitive bidding. In my humble judgment every one of the 44 contracts is fraudulent in law, at any rate, and absolutely void.

Mr. BLACK. Let me just make this one other statement to the Senator, because it is my intention, if the Senate eventually votes to continue these subsidies—which I sincerely hope it will not do—to offer an amendment to the bill providing that where the Government supplies money to operate shipping lines which are incurring deficits no official shall receive a greater salary than the salary of the ordinary Government official. I think we ought to have the information to which I have referred when the bill comes back, in order that we may place a limitation on the salaries of these gentlemen who have been so lavishly favored by the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that we have hearings, covering 1,256 pages, that go fully into every one of those questions; and I should be very happy if the Senator would give it some of his attention, because the Senator is one of the ablest men in this body; he is one of the most active men in this body; and I welcome him on the side of those who favor cutting down expenditures. I do not think there is a more useful or a more aggressive or a better Senator in this body than is the senior Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the Senator. I wanted, however, merely to express the hope that when the bill went back to the committee the Senator would go fully and vigorously into this question in line with the investigation he has already started.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to take just a few moments in reply to the argument against this motion made by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and others. That argument was that by reducing the amount for public buildings we would do a great detriment to labor; that we would throw men out of employment; that we ought not to cut down these appropriations; because if we did, not so many people would be employed. My heavens, Mr. President, at this deplorable time nobody in the world would want to add to unemployment, but I want to show that instead of doing that, if a 10 per cent reduction were made in the appropriations for public buildings, there would be employed more people than ever before were employed on such work by the Government. Why do I say that? I quote from the testimony which has been given, and I read from page 14. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] asked Mr. Martin, who was there, this question:

Senator GLASS. Here is what I should like to know:

On page 34, $108,000,000 is appropriated for the acquisition of additional sites. Are we buying additional sites now?

Mr. MARTIN. Senator, that is the lump-sum appropriation to carry on the construction work on projects already under contract and projects that will be placed under contract during this year. The legislation includes the acquisition of sites—

It includes the acquisition of sites—

There are only, I should say, less than 50 sites that have to be paid for at this time; and nearly all of those have been contracted for and we are simply waiting for the title to come through.

Senator McKELLAR. How much of that contemplates new sites and new buildings?

Mr. MARTIN. How much of the $108,000,000?

Senator McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. My estimate would be, Senator, that less than $1,000,000 would be for sites, because we will have purchased all of the sites before the beginning of the fiscal year 1933.

Senator McKELLAR. How much is for new buildings that you have not yet contracted for?

Now, listen:

How much is for new buildings that you have not yet contracted for?

And this is the answer:

Mr. MARTIN. Practically the entire difference; about $107,000,000.

Senator McKELLAR. In other words, this $108,000,000 is to begin the new projects all over the country, is it, except the $15,000,000 for the individual ones in the District?

Mr. MARTIN. No, sir. The way we operate under this public-buildings program is to secure from Congress specific authorization for projects, permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to contract up to a total limit of cost. We then secure a lump-sum appropriation, which is the department's estimate as to the amount that will be necessary to buy sites or additional land and to pay for projects under contract. The lump-sum appropriation last year was $60,000,000.

Here we are being pilloried because of the suggestion that the appropriations for public buildings be reduced from $108,000,000 to $98,000,000, and yet for the same purpose the department obtained only $60,000,000 in a lump sum last year. It is true that they asked for a deficiency—

In the deficiency bill that went through not long ago we secured $16,800,000 to complete the current fiscal year.

That would make $76,000,000 for the fiscal year ending on June 30 next, as against at least $98,000,000 if we should cut this appropriation 10 per cent. They estimated that $108,000,000 will be necessary during the year 1933. That is the department's estimate; that is the amount now in the bill. How much did they spend last year? We asked them how much they spent, and I have here the answer about how much they spent in the last six months of 1931. As everyone knows, there is more building in the second half of the year than in the first half. The reason for that is that there is better weather during the second half of the year in our country than during the first half of the year; therefore more money is spent on building projects such as these during the latter half of the year. How much was spent? The sum of $42,000,000 was spent during the last six months of the year.

Now let us assume they spend $42,000,000 the last half of the next fiscal year and that they spend also $42,000,000 during the first six months of the next fiscal year; that would only amount to $84,000,000; and, even if the 10 per cent reduction were made, they would have $98,000,000 as against $84,000,000 or $85,000,000. I doubt very much if we should appropriate all this money, if we should appropriate the whole $108,000,000, that they would spend it. I do not see how they could spend it. There is included in this appropriation $15,000,000 for the District of Columbia. I understand that it is proposed to remodel the State, War, and Navy Building at a cost of about $4,000,000, but that ought not to be done at such a time as this. It is proposed also to remodel the Post Office Building on Pennsylvania Avenue, but that ought not to be done at a time like this, and I think it is absolutely necessary that it should not be done.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. Is there not in the House bill a provision prohibiting the remodeling of the buildings referred to?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not sure; I remember there was a contest about it. I should have to refer to the bill to ascertain the facts. I think, however, there was a resolution of some kind offered in the Senate. The department was so anxious to remodel the State, War, and Navy Building at an expense of about $4,000,000 that I think that some resolution was adopted about it. However, what I want to point out is that these are enormous sums of money. We may not look upon them in that way, as we are dealing with Government business, but these are enormous sums of money. The difference between $108,000,000 and $98,000,000 is not so great, and the latter sum would appear to be ample, especially when we consider that during the last six months of last year, when everything was steamed up, when we were making appropriations in order to put men to work, when we were more active in building construction than ever before in our history, and when more buildings were constructed, the Government spent only $42,000,000. Now, why might not some cut be made on the building program?

I think it not only can be done but should be done. After all, Senators, we do not require it to be done, if in our good judgment it should not be done, when the bill is reported back here, or if, in the judgment of the committee, it should not be done.

Suppose the committee reports back the bill cutting down the total without changing the item of public buildings, leaving it as it is. Suppose the committee even increases that item, if it has enough money. It is all for us to pass on. We will have to pass on it again. Surely the committee ought to pass on it first. That is what we have been doing all this time. I am merely asking that the same course be pursued with reference to this bill that we have asked as to the other five; and I hope the Senate will adopt this resolution.

Before I close, let me say a word on the question of throwing men out of employment. Much has been said on that subject. As I said before, while I may be mistaken about the matter, as I look at it the only argument against this resolution is that men will be thrown out of employment if we do not pass these building bills just as we are asked to pass them.

Yesterday afternoon I sent to the department and asked for a list of the names of the contractors on the projects. There are 75 completed projects. There are 151 incomplete projects; and I had some curiosity to know how much probable help to local people out of employment is represented in these bills.

I find, from the list that has been furnished me, that 251 contracts have been let. I find that one contractor has received 26 of those contracts. Out of all the contractors in this country, one contractor has received one-tenth of all these enormous contracts made by the Government. That was the same contractor that had the contract in a city in my State where the men were counted, and, as I remember, only six local people were employed under that contract, and from the very beginning we were fighting to get the contractor to pay his men a living wage. Telegram after telegram came from Memphis to Washington asking the Veterans' Bureau to aid in requiring the contractor to stand by the gentlemen's agreement he had made to pay a living wage to the men who were working under him, and that very contractor has 26 of these great contracts out of the 251 that have been advertised. Another contractor has 13. Another one has 12.

I ask that this list, giving the names and addresses of the various contractors, and the projects which they have, be published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, at the close of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. McKELLAR. When Senators come to look at this list to-morrow, I think they will form the conclusion I have formed, that the contractors are more interested in this bill than the unemployed.

I appeal to the Senate to pass this resolution and turn over this matter to the Appropriations Committee. I speak for myself, and I speak for the chairman, and I think I speak for every member of the committee when I say that we are going to try our level best to report back a bill that will be fair and just, that will destroy no necessary function of the two departments, that will not injure the service of either one of the departments, that will not throw men out of employment, that will not reduce salaries or cut off salaries, but will so reduce these appropriations that we can balance the Budget.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is not my intention to enter upon a prolongued discussion of this resolution. I shall vote for it in the belief that unless the resolution be agreed to its failure may result in defeating the very persistent efforts that are being made here to find some process by which the high cost of government may be diminished.

I realize that the subject has been fully discussed from almost every standpoint. It does not, therefore, seem to me appropriate for me to prolong the discussion.

Out of order, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement concerning the status of the independent offices appropriation bill, particularly in its relation to the Federal Trade Commission, and a comparison of appropriations for certain boards, bureaus, and commissions carried in the bill (H. R. 10022) making appropriations for the executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, and so forth. I ask also that the data supplied be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in order that the subcommittee in charge of the independent offices appropriation bill may have the facts set forth in the two statements I am having printed in connection with their work on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the statements will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT CONCERNING THE STATUS OF THE SUPPLY BILL FOR THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, FISCAL YEAR 1932–33

The commission's total appropriation for the current fiscal year (1931–32) amounted to $1,781,766.

The commission's total estimate of funds for the next fiscal year (1932–33) amounted to $1,656,518.

This was a voluntary reduction of $105,148.

The Bureau of the Budget allowed for all purposes the amount of $1,266,500.

This constituted a reduction of $515,266, or 29.4 per cent from the current year appropriation, and which constituted a reduction of $390,018, or 24.75 per cent below the commission's estimate.

It is thus shown that the reduction of the commission's appropriation is far above those of any of the other commissions or boards as shown by the table herewith annexed. The appropriation bill passed by the House allows precisely the sum recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, $1,266,500; and of this sum the House had bracketed $60,000 to cover a deficiency for the current year, and made the same immediately available. The House had also bracketed the sum of $300,000 as funds to be used for continuation of the so-called "power and chain-store investigations." The sums thus bracketed are not in addition to the total appropriation indicated above, but were included therein.

It is estimated that if the total allowance remains as it is now in the bill it will be necessary for the commission to discharge from 175 to 200 of its employees in order to bring the expenses down to the level of the appropriation.

The two investigations mentioned above are being conducted largely with temporary employees brought in for that special work, and if the sum of $300,000 be dedicated solely to the prosecution of those investigations it will necessitate the discharge of a very large number of the commission's permanent employees who are engaged in work imposed upon the commission by statute.

It is believed that it is essential to the work of the commission for the ensuing fiscal year that the total allowance in the House bill should be augmented by the sum of $300,000 to be used in the two investigations named, and also by the sum of $60,000 as a deficiency fund to be made immediately available.

Composition of appropriations for salaries and related personal-service expenses only (as far as they are segregated in 20 individual cases[1]) for 1932 and as proposed for 1933 in H. R. 10022 as reported to House, arranged in order from proposed largest percentage decrease to proposed largest percentage increase

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have stated my purpose to vote for this resolution. It is imperative that I be absent from the Chamber for probably a half-hour, but I desire to be recorded in favor of the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, because——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, before the Senator does that I should like to say just a word.

Mr. McKELLAR. I withhold the suggestion for the present.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have only a few words to say. I do not wish the quorum to be called for before I make the few remarks I desire to make, because when Senators are brought here they will want to vote, if possible, on the resolution.

As the Senator from Arkansas says, practically all the arguments pro and con have already been offered. Even if this resolution should be voted down, the committee, in my judgment, will profit by the bills we have already acted upon under instructions from the Senate; and we shall bring the appropriations to the very lowest point that we feel we possibly can.

I desire to call to the attention of the Senate these facts, which rather appeal to me:

This bill carries a little over one billion fifty-odd millions of dollars. That means that if this 10 per cent cut is carried, the bill must be cut by the committee $105,000,000 below the amount carried by the House bill. The House cut $22,000,000 from the Budget estimates. As I said before, the Budget has taken unusual care with its estimates and has cut them down to the lowest possible point that it deems best for the interest of the Government. The House, in its wisdom, cut down those estimates, as I say, $22,000,000.

The action of the House was very carefully taken. It is the custom of the House committee to examine every item of the bill, whether it is a post office bill or what sort of a bill it is. It examines every item, hears testimony on each of them, and then frames its bill. It has cut the estimates of the Budget by $22,000,000, in round numbers. Now, what are we asked to do? We are asked to cut five times as much as the House cut, and we are asked to do it without any special investigation of the different items.

Does that look businesslike? Does it look wise for the Senate to direct its committee, without any special investigation of the different items, to cut five times the amount that the other body has cut after careful study and careful investigation?

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. ODDIE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. In a moment. In cutting this $105,000,000, I want to say that, of course, the committee will give most careful study and careful investigation, if it is directed to do so, so as to make this cut just as wisely as possible.

I now yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator says that the Senate committee has made no investigation. There are 1,246 pages in the volume of Senate committee hearings that I have before me. Virtually every item—certainly every item of any importance that was not known to be correct—has been examined by the Senate committee. Under the chairmanship of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], one of the most painstaking investigations that has ever been made of any bill since I have been in the Congress, of which I have had any knowledge, has been made in this case.

Mr. JONES. Perhaps I should have said—this is, I think, the fact—that the hearings of the subcommittee have all been had with reference to the different items in the bill. My recollection is that the great part of those hearings was devoted to the shipping item, about which there has been considerable discussion. No painstaking investigatiton or study of the different items of the bill has yet been made by the subcommittee in the way that the House committee investigates, but there have been hearings. The hearings were long; they were painstaking; they were careful. Now the subcommittee is ready to write up the bill—that is, to consider the items one by one as they may see fit to do it—and if this resolution should be adopted they will be directed to cut off, in round figures, $105,000,000, or five times the amount by which the House reduced the Budget estimate after the most painstaking consideration of each particular item.

Now I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I think it might be well at this point to state that the bill as it came from the House is nearly $45,000,000 less than the 1932 appropriations.

Mr. JONES. That is true. At any rate, it is $22,000,000 less than the Budget estimate, in round numbers.

Does the Senate want to direct a cut of five times the amount of the cut made by the House of Representatives? That, of course, is for us to decide on this vote.

It has been suggested here that there will be a reduction of employees. We can not reduce the wages of the employees in this bill; that is not our province; it is not within our province under the rules. But we will have to reduce the number of employees, and we can not get around that. By this cut we must add to the unemployment in this country.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not think proper emphasis has been put upon one other phase of this matter—that is, the public-building program. Of course, it would be an easy matter if we could simply go into a subcommittee and lop off so many millions of dollars on the public-building program. But buildings having been authorized, many of the contracts having been let, in many of the cases the specifications having been agreed upon, and in practically all of them the sites already secured, if we lop off the major portion of this 10 per cent in that particular item, we will be contributing to the distress now prevalent by making it impossible to buy materials and to employ labor. It is my hope that if we are instructed to take the bill back to the subcommittee we certainly will not find the subcommittee in such a frame of mind that they will want to eliminate the public-buildings item, or reduce it more than its pro rata share of the 10 per cent cut.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I had intended to later, but I might suggest now, that we could, without putting any employees out of work, without adding to the unemployment in this country, make the $105,000,000 cut in this bill, which we have to make, by cutting $105,000,000 out of the $108.-000,000 provided for public buildings. We could make that cut in that item. That would affect the unemployment situation, of course, all over the country, but it would not add in numbers to the unemployed by providing for the discharge of Government employees. I think I may say that the committee certainly will not do that. If we make any cut in the public-building item, it will be nothing more than possibly a proportional cut, which, of course, would not be nearly so heavy. We can not cut the amount of money that is not fixed by contract without cutting off employees.

I do not believe the Government is prepared to violate its contracts. This Government has contracted to pay for the transportation of mails about $105,000,000 or $110,000,-000, as fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Of course, we can refuse to carry out the contracts if we are ready not to comply with them.

Then there is about $90,000,000 of additional money that is paid for other transportation of mails, that is practically under contract, some of it running 6, 7, 8, to 10 years. Do we want to cut from that? Are we ready to do that? Are we ready to put the Government on the plane of repudiating its contracts? There are some of these other contracts with reference to shipping which have been discussed very clearly. They are contracts of the Government, they are made under law, made after careful consideration by this body. Are we going to annul them?

Of course, my friend the Senator from Tennessee suggests that they are illegal contracts. If they are, that is a matter to be determined. They have been solemnly entered into, entered into pursuant to laws enacted by the Congress, and the question is whether or not we are prepared to annul those contracts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator remembers that there was a very notable precedent of the annulment of a contract. It had to be done by the Supreme Court, but it was done. I refer to the Teapot Dome.

Mr. JONES. I always accept the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States when it declares that a thing is not legal. I hold that it was not legal from the beginning. Of course, these matters may be illegal; I do not say they are not. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee is sincere in his belief in regard to them. But shall we assume to declare them illegal? We probably can do it, and we can not be held accountable in any forum that is effective.

About three hundred and thirty or three hundred and forty million dollars in this bill are bound up in those different ways. That leaves some six or seven hundred million dollars, assuming we are not going to violate those contracts, out of which to cut a hundred and five million dollars. We can not find where to cut without cutting employees off the rolls of the Government of the United States. That will add thousands to the unemployed of this country. Are we prepared to do that? That is the question we have to pass on in voting on this resolution.

That is about all I care to say about the matter. We have followed this policy in regard to a couple of other bills. I am inclined to think that the pending appropriation bill should be considered in a little different light from the other appropriation bills. There were no great contracts involved in those bills under which the Government was obligated and bound as there are in this. There were no contracts affecting all the people of the country in connection with rural delivery, rural routes, and all that sort of thing which will be turned inside out, we might say, by the passage of such a resolution as this. I think it is quite a different proposition from the one involved even in connection with the other two bills; and while I opposed the 10 per cent cuts as to those two bills, I think there is far more justification for the Senate voting against a 10 per cent cut in this bill than as to the other two bills.

As I said in the beginning, I say now, even if the resolution is voted down, I think I can say for the committee that it will act as far as it feels justified in acting along the lines on which it has acted under the direction of the Senate in handling the other bills, and will make every possible cut it feels it can make in the interest of economy, because we all feel that these are times which demand economy upon the part of the Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I hope that I will not be considered presumptuous, after something better than four months in this Chamber, if I undertake at this time to make some observations upon the subject of the present posture of the legislation here, in view of the condition of the country.

The dilemma in which we find ourselves at this moment is illustrative of the situation, and in this way: We feel ourselves under the greatest necessity for a program of retrenchment in public expenditures and also for a program of economy in the administration of the departments of the Government. But when we proceed to act in response to the impulses which move us in the direction of retrenchment, and which counsel us to a policy of economy, we are confronted with the fact that such a program inevitably makes an existing confusion worse confounded and magnifies a disaster which, in other circumstances, it would be difficult to magnify.

Retrenchment and economy, as predicated here in the 10 per cent cut, imply, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has just said, a deliberate act by way of adding to the number of unemployed in a land in which we are told the number of unemployed already is from seven to ten million men and women, who heretofore have been gainfully employed. None of us wishes to move in that direction. I might go farther and say, none of us in the possession of his senses would dare to move in that direction.

The other horn of the dilemma is this, that if we do not institute the policy of retrenchment and economy—and I make a distinction between the two—we are under the necessity of levying new taxes upon the American people to the extent of at least a billion dollars in addition to the sum raised under the existing act, and that neither the commerce, the agriculture, nor the domestic life of the American people can bear.

Mr. President, that dilemma brings to the Senate of the United States in almost a sentence the crucial, and, I may say, weighing my words, the almost indescribably grave condition of the country, which, to a very great extent, at any rate, has been trusted by the people to our care and our keeping.

I have wondered as I have heard this debate, and have tried to find my way through it to some conclusion satisfactory to myself, what must be the thoughts in the minds of the others of the one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five millions of men, women, and children who constitute this Republic, while they hear us, in the midst of a situation so grave, discussing matters apparently so superficial and so trivial, and so passing the hours and the days away. while in their hearts they know, and we likewise know, by every word that history ever wrote, that this country stumbles and staggers on the edge of an abyss into which if it falls not a human being on earth can foresee the outcome? I have sometimes thought, as I have heard our little talk about 10 per cent cuts and retrenching here a little and there a little, that we were like physicians who are undertaking to cure a man of pneumonia by removing a wart from his nose.

Mr. President, I heard on yesterday from the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] a very careful and a very full elaboration of the inducements and the considerations which moved the President of the United States a little less than a year ago to call upon the Members of the Congress to authorize him informally to agree to a moratorium with respect to the indebtedness of certain foreign nations to this country.

The explanation was that the moving consideration to the moratorium was not the benefits to be received by Great Britain or France or Belgium or the other debtor nations, not benefits to be received by Germany and Austria, but benefits to be received by the American people by way of averting a crisis in Europe which threatened to shake civilization itself to its foundations. I assented to the President's request and I thank the Senator from Ohio for his elaborate explanation of the inducements to it. I say in all deliberation that this country is confronted at the present moment with a crisis more serious and more fraught with indescribable consequences than the crisis which was threatened abroad and in the interest of averting which the President of the United States made the overture to the Congress and got the consent of the Members in their individual capacities to the moratorium.

I would not for my life utter a word that would make bad matters worse. I would prefer infinitely a policy of silence lest anyone should charge me, and lest I should suspect myself, of giving utterance to sentiments calculated in any other direction than the direction of averting for ourselves, as we undertook less than a year ago to avert for the whole world, the grave and indescribably distressing prospects of debacle, of ruin, of chaos.

What is the situation, Mr. President? It has been detailed here, but it will do no harm to undertake to detail it again.

Now, for months, even beyond 12 months, somewhere we do not know, but somewhere between 7,000,000 and 10,000,000 of men and women hitherto gainfully employed have been unemployed. The lapse of time has brought them to the point where the succor of friends and kin, where the relief of communities and cities and States, has reached the point of exhaustion. So far from the lapse of time diminishing that great army of helplessness, of fear, and of unrest, there is every evidence that that great army in the United States is increasing.

The papers bring us every day the news of mills that close and of new workers in despair. Look to the agricultural sections. We are told that the number of agricultural producers in our land, people living on the land by means of farming—men, women, and children—is somewhere around 33,000,000 of human beings. For three years in succession they have gone forth to sow, and in the day of the harvest they have reaped nothing save a harvest of tears and despair.

I am not indicting anybody. I am not making any charge of a political nature. I am arraying before the Senate of the United States the solemnest facts of a reality which we can not evade and which we ought not to undertake to avoid. The news from every State in the Republic is news of homesteaders and landowners, hitherto happy and secure, driven from the land under the power of the foreclosure of mortgages and taxes which they could not meet. I am no demagog. This is a statement of a solemn truth, and men with the care and the keeping of the land entrusted to them have got to confront it.

But that is not all. The circulation of money in the United States has been absolutely paralyzed for a period of five months. We passed our Glass-Steagall Act, and we provided the means of credit, but the money did not flow because the means of using the money was not at hand. Accusations have been made here against the bankers for not lending the money. I judge that if the bankers cared to defend, they would defend on the ground that useful and profitable enterprise and the expansion of business in the United States has not demanded the loaning of a dollar.

I go farther. Here is the country itself on the first day of April, and now in the final quarter of the fiscal year, raising taxes only sufficient in a year to pay the amount of the debt service plus the amount provided for the veterans, $2,000,000,000. Here is the record before every one of us, that the present deficit in the Treasury of the United States is in excess of $2,000,000,000, the greatest deficit that ever fell upon a country in all the annals of human history in time of peace.

We are told that we now have to go and find new sources of taxation to the extent of another billion dollars, and every one of us knows that every new tax we levy will be a further handicap upon business and a further difficulty in the way of any hope or any plan of recovery. That is what new taxes mean. On the other hand, we know that if we do not raise them we have got to go down to the Departments here and open the doors and turn out a new army of the unemployed. We have got to go to the public constructions authorized and have the contractors give orders to carpenters and bricklayers and all the remainder of their men that they are to take their places in the ranks of those who now for more than 12 months have with great courage, with an infinite and a beautiful patience, borne with a situation to which I would not myself claim to be equal.

Mr. President, I have heard some talk here as to whether there is starvation in the United States. I know it has been denied. I do not intend to paint the picture in other colors than the picture actually is. But is it conceivable, when the official authorities in our towns and cities tell us that they are allotting from 50 cents to $1 a week in what they call relief, that men, women, and children are not slowly dying? That is what starvation means. Is it conceivable that such as you and I, vested with the honor and the trust of a great office and a great responsibility, pass by on the other side and say that our engagement here is a matter of debate as to whether an appropriation shall be cut 10 per cent or 15 per cent, or whether it shall be $25,000,000 or $10,000,000?

Mr. President, these facts have come home to me not at once. I am sure that every Senator here is as well acquainted with them as I am. I would not on any account take to myself any greater sensitiveness to human need than I would accord to any other human being. But I am here to say that if these facts are facts, if these are the realities of the situation—and they are—there is a responsibility here, and we must meet it. There is a responsibility in the White House, and we may leave that to the President. There is a responsibility in the House of Representatives, and we may leave that there. There is a responsibility in the Senate of the United States, and you and I have got to meet it.

I do not claim to have the capacity to make a program, and I suspect I would be charged—and I would not say that I would not be justly charged—with an undue degree of presumption if I undertook to state a program. I believe that I will be acquitted of presumption if I simply say what I have to say by way of humble suggestion.

I am not sure, Mr. President, that we can balance the Budget under any circumstances. I deeply suspect that the higher we raise our taxes and the farther we reach after them the more difficulty we shall find in getting them. But I do say that the interests of the American people demand that before we undertake to appropriate any more money, before we enter into a sort of a blind slash at the situation, into these engagements as to what per cent we shall reduce appropriations, it would be infinitely better for the American Congress to ascertain what taxes are reasonably available without destroying the business fabric of this country and further shaking and shocking it, and then proceed to cut the cloth to suit the garment.

My difficulty here, Mr. President and Senators, is that I do not know what money is going to be available; I do not know how far we may appropriate money, but I can state a principle of action. I am in favor of cutting the expenses of administration, but I am not in favor of cutting off appropriations for public works, and I think we can draw the distinction there.

I might go a little further. We have got to meet this situation as best we can; and whether it seems for the moment an undue burden on us, once we get something of definiteness and a determination of policy with respect to the revenue act, let us then, Mr. President, either by a bond issue or some other means, provide funds for public construction in this land that will provide during the next 6 or 10 months for the employment of a million men. How else are we going to afford them employment?

Last night I looked over the appropriations of the States for public works. I find they have exhausted their capacity and that their appropriations for last year, 1931, were $115,000,000 less than they were for the previous year. However, the United States Government does have need of buildings; the United States Government does have a justification in national defense and in commerce and in postal communications for public roads; and the United States can in some measure meet the demands of an army of unemployed by way of reducing that army, to some extent at any rate, by a well-conceived system of public works, to be paid for not out of annual revenue but to be paid for in the process of time by bonds to become due in the future and to be amortized from year to year.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. We have tried our palliatives. We enacted the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, and there has been some good response to it. We have arrested to some degree the breaking of banks; we have relieved, to some degree, the frozen condition of credit. We instituted an expansion of the Federal reserve system, and that, I will grant, has been a source of more or less confidence; but, after all, as we sit here at this hour we know that the situation to-day is worse than it was on the first of January last; and there is every prospect that it will grow still worse.

I have heard many statements as to what was wrong with our country; as to what was the basis of this depression; and there have been so many people undertaking to explain it who knew nothing about it, that it has come to be a matter more or less of laughter. I will not run the risk of ridicule by myself undertaking to make a diagnosis, but I will submit to the Senate a fact. I heard it stated on the floor of the Senate some weeks ago by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that the indebtedness of the people of this country, including the national debt, State debts, and the debts of the counties, the cities, the corporations and of individuals, amounted to the sum of $200,000,000,000. I think that is an exaggeration, with all due respect; but I have an authoritative statement in detail, which I shall read into the RECORD at the proper time, showing that the indebtedness of the people of the United States, including the National Government and all the political subdivisions, is, at any rate, $100,000,000,000.

Now, hear me for a moment. If it were that amount and nothing more, the burden of it would be more than this civilization in its present condition could possibly bear; it would be in the literal sense of the word intolerable; but that is not the whole fact. The fact about that indebtedness of $100,000,000,000 is that when it is paid under present conditions, it is payable in $3 of value for every dollar of value obtained at the time of contracting the debt; and that is not only an impossibility but it is an economic monstrosity, and it is a social crime.

Let me take an illustration from the stock market. The man who bought 100 shares of United States steel on credit at $150 a share when he comes now to pay his debt with Steel stock at $30 a share has to pay five times as many shares of Steel for his debt as the number of shares he bought when he contracted the debt. So, too, the man who bought his little home or his little farm in the days when he received for his wheat a dollar and thirty cents a bushel, or for his tobacco 30 cents a pound, or for his cotton from 20 to 25 cents a pound, must now for what he received for 1 bushel in value pay 4 bushels; for what he received for 1 bale of cotton in value he must pay 4 bales; for what he received for 1 pound of tobacco he must pay, in order to discharge his debt, 4 pounds.

I say to the Senate, in all deliberation and not without some sense of the consequences, that to demand that cities, counties, States, the Nation, corporations, human beings, insurance companies, trust companies, banks, and what not, shall discharge their obligations on terms like those is to provide the moral ground for repudiation—and I am not a repudiationist.

I lay it down as a principle of economics that the man who owns land is entitled to the unearned increment of the land, but the man who owns money is not entitled to the unearned increment of money. If he gets 6 per cent, that is earned; if he gets 8 per cent, that is earned; but when he tells me that I must pay him a dollar and sixty cents for every dollar I got from him, while I may not be able to resist him in the courts, I can stand in the moral realm, and I think I can stand at the bar of God, and justify my answer, "I will pay my debt, I will pay it honestly, but I will not submit myself to the extortion of an economic system or an economic twist or an economic breakdown that compels me to do what neither men nor angels nor gods nor demigods are capable of doing."

That is the situation in America to-day. That is a thing that is rocking the foundations of the financial structure. Hear me: It is not merely the problem of the poor fellow down yonder on a North Carolina farm; it is just as serious to the corporation that owes $500,000,000; it is just as serious to the Pennsylvania Railroad or the Wabash Railroad which have issued their bonds. By the same measure that the humble debtor in the little town is being ground to powder, foreclosed, and destroyed and his home and everything that makes for life and hope and happiness snatched away from him, by the same measure, in this present hour when we stand at the end of some 15 or 20 years, a period when debt was the fashion throughout this land, corporations which issued their bonds are in the same plight with the humble debtor.

That is the situation in this country; that is the thing that is striking at the foundations of the financial structure; that is the thing that is sending the financiers of Wall Street to their beds in despair, and is breaking the hearts of mothers and fathers in the little homes. It is the same process precisely.

I do not hesitate to say what that predicates. The Congress of the United States never did have any great number of powers; and I judge—I say this with more or less caution—that the Congress of the United States may at times have appeared, at any rate, to exercise more powers than possibly it had. But there is one power which it will not exercise, and that is an absolutely fixed, expressed, clear, and unequivocal power: It is written in the Constitution that the Congress shall have power to regulate the value of money.

I will take my seat with one remark: We will not get out of this situation, we will not solve our appropriation question, we will not raise our taxes, we will die in a blind alley unless the Congress of the United States exercises that power, and exercises it, in the name of God, without delay.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate just a moment.

In the course of his address the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]—who, by the way, has made a very able address—asked the question, "What are the people back home thinking about this matter?"

I happen to have a letter from a very dear friend, one of the most successful business men in Memphis, and I am going to read an excerpt or two from his letter before we have this vote. He is a perfectly splendid man. I do not agree with all he says by any manner of means; but his letter shows what the people back home are thinking, because he is the kind of man who says just exactly what he knows and believes and is not afraid to say it:

DEAR SENATOR: I am somewhat under the impression that there is no depression and no sign of a general collapse to be found in Washington, as everyone there is drawing his salary as usual and business is probably proceeding along normal lines, the only difference being that the people receiving the same war-time salaries are now able to buy three or four times as much goods with the same amount of money, and which, to all intent and purpose, has advanced their salaries to that extent.

I am afraid if you do not get out of Washington and go over the situation where the people are really in terrible distress that you can not get a true picture of the situation. Of course, I do not know what picture you have in your mind, but I do read in the daily press and the statements made by the other Members of Congress wherein they evidently think there is an untouched amount of wealth upon which they can draw and continue the extravagances of the past 15 years, but I want to say to you that such is not true.

Outside of Government bonds, every person who had a fortune invested in anything else has about lost that fortune; and if he has not lost it and conditions do not improve, he will soon lose it. I do not think it makes any difference what tax you place in the higher brackets, as, outside of the salaries of Government officials, cooperatives, etc., there will be no one in those higher brackets.

As you know, I was against the $2,000,000,000 Finance Corporation appropriation. I am also very much opposed to the $2,000,000,000 appropriation for the soldiers. It is nothing in the world except a raid upon the Treasury.

Speaking of the Finance Corporation, I observed this morning that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has returned to fancy advertising in the paper and state they are advertising all over the country; this costs a lot of money, and I do not believe adds one passenger or one ton of freight to the railroads. I think it is entirely an endeavor to sell sympathy for the railroads to the voting and nonshipping public. I could not help but think it was possibly part of the Government money they were spending.

Of course the lumber business here is a thing of the past. The yards and plants are rotting away. The cotton business is entirely a Government institution, and the few left who are competing with the Government are about on their last legs. Our business is still continuing, although the thought of making any money with $6 and $8 cottonseed is out of the question. I would venture to say that 50 per cent of the merchants on Main Street are paying no rent, and the balance of them are paying, say, one-half of their rent. The courthouse steps are crowded every day with trustees selling property. Last week I was in Cleveland, Miss., and in the courthouse they were selling about 100,000 acres in Bolivar County for State taxes.

The time has not yet arrived but is not very far off when some people are going to run for political office on an economy platform, and they are going to be elected, as it is unthinkable to believe that we can have a well-paid Government crew when the people themselves are about starving. If any of the political experts believe that by taxation they can provide jobs and doles for the citizens of the country they have another guess coming, because there is no way in which the taxes can be collected. The Government now, through their farm-loan banks, intermediate credit banks, the Farm Board, and the co-ops, already own a large part of the agricultural element of the country; and when you add to this the mortgages held by the life insurance companies, you have about taken care of all of the property; and as far as I can see the situation, Russia has very little on us in so far as communism is concerned; that is, if a centralized dictatorial government represents communism.

At some time in the near future we are going to return to the method of thinking that prevailed 25 or 30 years ago when there was some sanity displayed in the analysis and disposal of various questions, and there was no fallacy that the Government was greater than the people. It is entirely possible that within the next two years you will see a general repudiation through inability to pay bonds issued by road and drainage districts, villages, and cities, and possibly by some of the States, and I am quite sure that with a continuation of $2,000,000,000 bond issue on the part of the Federal Government that we will see their securities quoted at a very low price.

The object of this letter is not to tell you how to think or vote, or anything of the kind. I am simply trying to tell you what is prevailing, and let you use your good, common sense and to base your actions upon those events that are daily presenting themselves, and to adopt yourself to represent the best for the people of the State.

With kind regards, I am, sincerely yours,

HUGH HUMPHREYS.

I have read that letter into the RECORD because, while I do not believe in all that the writer states in it, he states some truths that are undeniable; and one of these is that this Government had better let up on extravagant expenditures.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LEWIS. Gladly.

Mr. WAGNER. I think this is an appropriate time to have read at the desk two telegrams that I have received. They are very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the telegrams will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BALTIMORE, MD., April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER.

The social justice commission of the Central Conference of American Rabbis reiterates the stand it has consistently taken in indorsement of your unemployment relief and construction bill. You are at liberty to use our indorsement publicly as you desire.

RABBI EDWARD L. ISRAEL, Chairman.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Hon. Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.:

The members of Lithographers Union have indorsed your bill for unemployment relief. Most urgent need.

A. E. CASTRO, President.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I regret that an illness of late rather limits my physical capacity to extend observations what I feel needed at this time to clarify darkened situations which are confused and not justly appraised. From voice, from press, from public meetings, and private conference come the Cassandra forebodings of dismal destiny to the Nation.

I can not agree that this Nation of ours is in such deplorable state—in its finances or its political status—as to stupefy the senses of the intelligent or demoralize the confidence of the prudent. We are proceeding, however, in every department of the Government—in each legislative Chamber—from time to time, to advertise to the world that this great American Nation has reached the point where its leaders are in desolation, its legislators in desperation, its citizens discouraged, its future all disaster irremediable. We seem to herald to our friends at home and to our opponents abroad that there is nothing left for ourselves but a self-decree of immediate dissolution.

We are moping as a Hamlet, muttering "To be, or not to be; that is the question."

I am unable to understand the philosophy of those who find consoling occupation in presenting so doleful a picture of their country as would alarm the rising generation to believe that we are in a state of decadence and destruction. The picture so often presented by calculating financiers and conspiring politicians would impress viewing mankind that only a petition in bankruptcy and judgment of foreclosure by the court of civilization is the fateful end.

Now, for a moment, let us ask ourselves the question, What is this United States of America from the material point of view? Sirs, $400,000,000,000 is conceded at this hour to be the material worth of the United States of America. She has debts that all in all will not surpass 10 per cent of her assets. She has credits due equaling all her obligations now due and payable. Also, it is true that we have never drawn to the full extent of the present credit of the people, ever ready to respond to their country, nor have we exacted from the Treasury and its assets anything comparable to that which it is in the privilege of our Nation to command. So at this point of recital let us recall what is the comparison of the true conditions and the real capacity to meet them, to serve them, and to overcome them.

The eminent Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], in his address you have just heard—one of much philosophy and great pathos; and I may add, one in form of forensic oratory that does credit to his historic State. The Senator draws our attention to a condition of the American citizenry that all of us concede unhappily exists. The industrious Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] oftentimes reminds us, in flaming speech, of the multiplying parallels. The Senators on both sides of this Chamber reproduce the panorama in furious and fiery hue. But I fear the specters frighten the reflection from dwelling upon our capacity to meet and repair these circumstances. We forget that we have always met the emergencies or crises, however they arose. We omit to note that in meeting them now, we really make no unwarranted strain either upon the righteous credit of the country or put to test the proven patriotism of the citizen.

Let us compare for a second the situation of our own America with that of other lands which we regard a just parallel. I name countries which were in straits similar to ours, yet with but the least part of our resource, or power of survival. We speak of the war-blistered lands—the trinity we named as our Allies.

England has been going through distresses of nature similar to these described as our affliction. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in a captivating address of commanding eloquence, at the time of the discussion of the bill known as the La Follette-Costigan bill, called attention to the insolvent situation of England, and the manner in which she sought restoration. We measure results from that time to this. But a month has elapsed since the disclosures, yet that Government, England, with assets nothing to compare with the assets of the United States of America, has recovered herself to the extent that she announces through her officials of the exchequer that she has balanced what she calls her budget; and reports this morning the equivalent of one billion in American money to her credit. In the meantime, the system by which she has produced this result is announced before the world, clearly defined and closely pursued.

We contemplate France. A short while past she was proclaimed by her statesmen as in a state of debt of nation and poverty of people that was hopeless of remedy. I deplore to say that many of her people were inclined always to present her in a very dark aspect, as entitled to the sympathy and contributions of the world. She chose to stand as a constant weeping "Niobe"—all tears. The fact remains, however, that now we have it, that France has not only gathered herself together but—while yet with some increasing unemployment in special lines—yet she has lately lent eleven billions of money to the five different countries with which she is allied, called "the Litte Entente." She was able to expend this money through the aid of American gold, which she in some way was able to manipulate, and in some form of financial mesmerism to control—as against the interests of the United States. This proud and superior people can now exclaim with glory, "Vive la France."

Italy, but a short while ago presumed to be severely, heavily burdened, and in the depths as a result of her war obligations and the condition of her people, has in the last two weeks negotiated a loan of millions and millions without asking one penny of the outside world. She financed that loan from her own people in the interior, showing the condition to which her people have really risen, and, by industry, art, and governmental devices, exhibited a supremacy to be envied by all rivals.

Shall it be said, Mr. President, with these inspiring examples about us, that this United States, this the master nation of all nations, has no method by which it can recover itself? Has it no courage? Has the capacity of finance, which once was the boast of the Secretaries of the Treasury, the ministers of finance, all departed? Has capacity vanished? Has originality buried itself beyond the hope of resurrection? Is there nothing of construction in the United States of America to be applied by its officials—that has genius of invention, strength of trial, and ability to execute—that will provide a remedy for the situation such as we all concede exists? Have we reached the point where we confess before the earth that this great country, without parallel in riches, in resource, on the part of her competitors, is hopeless in her necessity, and before the world surrenders in despair, as lacking the quality and capacity to maintain herself in independence of citizenship and honor of nation?

I do not adopt the thought that for the purpose of garnering resources we descend so low that we strike from the humble toiler the wages of the oppressed poor, and take the crumbs of bread of the little loaf feeding the child, or the bottle of milk from the famishing baby. We are not reaching the point where the small salary, the little wages, of the humble and miserable are to be seized by the hand of force, and by the theory of our great Government in all its capacity wring from them in the hour of their distress and their need the little they get in this day of hunger and despair. Oh, there speaks through the ages the warning of the Jehovah saying through the prophet:

> I will come as a swift witness against those that oppress the laborer in his wage.

Mr. President, you will remember in Richelieu, where there comes the story revealing that there is an assault upon a young innocent, when the great cardinal rises and exclaims:

> Can this be true? That the little helpless one is to be chosen for sacrifice. Oh, I did not believe that in all this world there was a wind so cruel as would war against a violet.

Is it possible that a great government like ours would, in an hour like this, with its capacities undiminished and unlimited, confess before all the civilization of earth—that is turning its eyes to us as a model—that at this moment we run our hands through the pockets where rest the last pennies of the poor. Or that we extract the earnings of the humble toiler who suffered during the severe days of the very high prices because of the small pay by comparison on which he or they had lived, and that from hand to mouth, rearing his little children, sending them to school, maintaining them with hardship, covering himself with the shelter increasing ever in price while his pay grew less and less with the prices growing higher and higher. Is it true that now we turn upon them, after they have endured all those severe seasons that could have afflicted them; and sentenced these, who are the least able to defend themselves, as victims to maintain a great government in its establishment and structure with their little mite, while the great pillars which we could erect to sustain the structure we withhold? I answer and say no—and in the voice of the scriptural father cry out:

> Is thy servant a dog that he should do such thing?

Mr. President, I do not understand these official financial statements which go out from official sources to the country. Here is the country, with its vast credit power. Here in the Treasury is its command of four billions of gold. Here is its money and its capacity thirty-two times beyond the need of the present circulation of money for the people. Here is its bonding capacity to $100,000,000,000. These bonds could be paid in the future days, not levied upon the present generation. Mr. President, I assert that the equity of the hour is that they who fought the war and have had to bear the burdens of its results ought not be forced to pay for it; but they who are never to bear its heat and burden—on field or tent—and who will enjoy its benefits, should be those who should pay for it, as the righteous consideration of their inheritance.

Therefore, Mr. President, what means it that some of the officials of our Government in its finance department give it out by public statement that if this United States shall issue bonds, to obtain credit in order to give employment to thousands and millions of needy, to add further credit that we may increase the circulation, to give credit to the Nation and money to the citizen, that if we increase the present existing bonds we take from the present bonds their value?

How do these eminent officers of the Treasury find it justifiable to send out these reports when, sir, we are now compelled to reply to them by confronting them with their created parallel? The public press announces that the eminent head of the Treasury has said that if we issue bonds it will mean the dropping of the value of the bonds that are outstanding. That we will affect their credit disastrously; that there will not be bids for new bonds issued for the needs of public work; and that there will be no resources of America to which an appeal could be made to cash those bonds. Yet, sir, on the very next day, in an official address to the financiers, he tells the country that in a call for $300,000,000 of credit there were the demands so far exceeding the sum as to reach three billions of amount in demands.

In the meantime, behold the other testimony. The voice of authority went out to the country that the reduction in price of the bonds now existing would follow any effort on the part of the Government to issue more for public works and the restoration of the country. Yet in one day, the next morning, the country is told by the same source how these Government bonds have risen far beyond par, and commending them to the country as the best of security, as the Treasury issued more securities to obtain cash and recaptured millions by the demand.

The time has come when something should be commanded by which these agencies should give to the country the truth and cease playing in such manner as accommodates the hour for purposes which may be hidden from view, but which everyone must concede exist or we could not account for this "paltering with us in a double sense" in every hour of a public announcement from the public officials of the Treasury.

Mr. President, I can not agree with the gentlemen of either side, or anywhere, who hold up the United States as to-day being unable to protect its future welfare by any system of finance it selects. This country's credit is secure, her vast assets illimitable, her patriotism knows no bounds, the splendor of her people is undimmed. The world waits to purchase her securities. Her poor are unhappy; her miserable, we know, are oppressed. What is needed? That there may be for them all some spirit looking to restore them, some particular movement on the part of this Government for their restoration that is something else than bemoaning morning, noon, and night, crying out the desperate strait they contend the Nation is in—as excuse for the say-everything-and-do-nothing policy that has directed the administration policy since the assembling of this Congress.

The honorable Secretary of the Treasury is reported this morning as having said to the country that when the honorable representatives of the Senate sought to obtain information from him along some definite step as to what was desired by the Treasury as a Treasury policy, the reply is that these who are called Democrats making the demand are "jockeying."

The Democrats, Mr. President, are seeking to have from the Secretary of the Treasury a mere announcement of what the administration desires, what is the amount it requires, "Upon what things do you ask that the levy be made?" All of this requested with the mere object that we might comply with the request of the Treasury, that we might sustain the President, support the Government, principally, sir, to start the Nation on the road to some form of prosperity, with the combined aid of the patriotic spirit on both sides of the legislative chambers. Yet it is evident that the plan of the administration party masters seems to be that if the matter of schedules shall go through in such array that it shall gain the approval of the public, it can be cried forth, as is the present policy of the political traveling salesmen of the party of the White House, "Behold an administration measure." But if something in the way of an item or some feature of a bill disclose that some of the methods which may be adopted shall provoke here and there some dissent, some spirit of dissatisfaction; the cry can go forth, "That is a Democratic measure. It came from the Democratic House and is the offspring christened and adopted by the Democrats of the Senate."

Mr. President, let it be known that such playfulness of party politics is not the offense of either side of the Senate. It is the tin horn tooted and petty drum beaten by those in other offices of the Government. The conduct ought to be enjoined by presidential advice to save us all from being made ridiculous before mankind. Sir, while we "tickle the ears of the groundlings we are making the judicious grieve." But more serious, sir, than that, we are being held up before the humble poor, who are now crying for some relief; as being those who play with them with words that are false, deceiving, or unmeaning.

We need action. Now, sir, I invite you, where is there this great offense in these public undertakings which I have—which the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has put before the Senate from time to time? Or by the Senators on the other side of the aisle? Where is there in this demand that which justifies the eminent officials at the head of this Government the statement that if this shall be attempted it means the violation of every form of prudence and economy? Do they forget that the distinguished President of the United States made the recommendation for these public undertakings? Shall we forget that just two months and a half ago the President, in a message, told America that these undertakings would be entered upon? He designated them as public works. He called them by name. He gave the localities of the country where they would arise. He encouraged the people to believe that everything was going to be done now, and these poor, helpless unemployed put to work.

If it was right then to announce the fitting design, as it was, where has it become heresy now? What has become of the spirit which inspired it then and sent it forth to the country for applause and approval, and which now says it is deplorable to undertake and dangerous to assume?

What we need just now in government is a little of the straightforward path and less of those mutations of affairs which serve the hypocrisy of politics.

Since this is the hour when it is not so important what the large financier thinks of us, it is not so very important how that individual who conceives in his own conceit that he is important to civilization or humanity regards us, but it is important that these vast millions of poor and ignorant, who know nothing of the systems of to-morrow and see no hope beyond, shall be informed that this Congress is intending to come to their aid. That Congress will not play day by day, month by month, with the fates of misfortune and leave them helpless in their disaster and hopeless in their prayers.

We can not play, sir, with the fate that may awaken these to resentment upon the theory that the country has abandoned them and that would leave them desolate and helpless. This is the state that brought revolution and anarchy in countries now in revolution and anarchy. Our American will not descend to such disloyalty. Therefore the time has come when we should gravely and bravely point out that this Nation instead of unjustly taxing those citizens of the day who have property and possessions honestly obtained, our Nation should issue appropriate securities, payable at proper times, after which the money should at once be expended for the public improvements which the President himself has recommended and asked of the Congress to sustain, and that we provide they be paid for by the usual method of government after the precedents of the past.

After the Civil War that eminent patriot and great soldier from the State I have the honor to represent in part, President Grant—recommended in a message to this honorable body the very theory which is being presented at this particular time by those on both sides of the Chamber who seek relief for the miserable and to give inspiration to those who seem desperate, hoping against hope deferred.

Will we forget that after the Napoleonic war it was the method we suggest that England adopted, and for 47 years she was able to maintain a supremacy in her own people by which she became the workshop of the earth? Can we neglect to recall that France, even after 1872, in all the desolation of defeat—the surrender at Sedan—turned to the same method we describe, and so successful was she that her securities found the markets of all the world, and she builded her a large balance that gave independence and prosperity to her people within the cities who bought from the small farmers in the lesser communities, and gave a new advance to that dejected land in the defeat of war and offers to us a new and appropriate parallel?

Mr. President, my purpose in returning suddenly to the subject was to say that I can not concur in this general atmosphere of depression in assuming that America is helpless, that her credit has gone to the ground, that her securities are worthless, that her citizens are hopeless, that patriotism has vanished. I will not indorse the intimations that all capacity of invention is dead and the ability to restore our country has been lost. I say to those croaking critics on the outer rims that within the intelligence of statesmen of the United States serving in the Senate or of the House of Representatives there is recourse and refuge. This country is great. Her power is without limit. Her patriotism is unqualified. All her citizens join in this just eulogy of their national mother. We need only to move forward to the undertaking, which we are able to execute, and, doing so, we will inspire the admiration of the world, awaken the confidence of our fellow citizens, and continue ourselves the first true great republic on earth. In these efforts we offer no political party cry, but fulfill the aphorism of the spirit from Marshfield as we catch the last faint echo of the great Webster, exclaiming as we proclaim, "Our country, our whole country, and everything for our country."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I find myself almost in full accord with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. It is not with the thought he has in mind that I present the resolution which I am about to present, but yesterday and again to-day I spoke about the items in the pending appropriation bill which represent capital investment. It was suggested that these might be taken care of by some sort of securities. I have prepared the resolution which I offer and which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 198), as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that in order to finance those items in the annual appropriation bills which relate to public works of a permanent nature, there shall be issued securities of the Government in such form as the Treasury may determine; and that for the guidance of the Senate, the Appropriations Committee is directed to prepare a schedule of items it determines may be regarded as desirable capital investment.

Resolved further, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations should continue its efforts to reduce appropriations to the very lowest point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be received, printed, and lie upon the table.

Mr. COPELAND. That is entirely satisfactory to me. That is what I had in mind. A number of Senators have approached me to-day expressing approval of the thought now contained in the resolution. I hope it may be read and considered by the Members of the Senate before we meet again and that in due time it may receive such consideration as it deserves.

Further, Mr. President, I have noticed various references in the New York papers to a letter which was written to my colleague and me by Phillip J. Roosevelt which consists largely, apparently, of a criticism of the Interstate Commerce Commission and is a series of questions relating to that commission. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK, April 4, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: A committee of the Senate, headed by Senator JOHNSON (California), recently investigated the flotation of foreign bonds in the United States. This committee brought out the fact that no governmental agency in this field has protected American investors. Is it not pretty nearly time to investigate a governmental agency, which costs taxpayers about $9,000,000 a year, to find out whether or not it has been swindling investors and whether the $9,000,000 is worth spending. The agency referred to is an agency of the Congress—the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Is it true that the Interstate Commerce Commission is supposed to function under the transportation act?

Is it true that the intention of the Congress in passing this act is correctly set forth by the Senate committee's report on the bill which said that the purpose of passing it was:

"First. By prescribing a basis of return upon the value of the railway property, to give such assurance to investors as will incline them to look with favor upon railway securities; that is to say, by making a moderate return reasonably certain to establish credit for the carriers."

Is it true that since the passage of the act neither the railways as a whole nor the railways in any region have earned the prescribed "fair return"?

Is it true that the Interstate Commerce Commission has, nevertheless, and in spite of its knowledge of this failure to earn, repeatedly authorized the sale to investors at prices close to par of hundreds of millions of bonds now selling at from 15 to 60 per cent of the price prescribed by the commission?

Is it true that the commission, in spite of known insufficient and unsatisfactory earnings, repeatedly increased the price which investors were compelled to pay for railroad bonds to prices higher than the bankers thought were justified?

Is it true that now the commission in approving loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation demands double and more security than it felt was fair that investors should receive?

If any or all of these questions merit an affirmative answer does not the question arise as to what the Congress is getting in return for the $9,000,000 a year it is spending on the commission?

If the transportation act has failed "to give such assurance to investors as will incline them to look with favor upon railway securities," is it not time to do something about it?

Furthermore, is it true that this swindle is striking at one of the main supporting beams of the entire financial structure? Is it true that recently 49 per cent of all the bond and stock investments by life-insurance companies and 44 per cent of all bond investments of the savings banks in your State—New York—were in railroad bonds?

Were these bonds bought upon faith in the assurances of the Congress as expressed in the transporation act?

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP J. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Dale	Logan	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dickinson	McGill	Schall
Bankhead	Fletcher	McKellar	Sheppard
Barbour	Frazier	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Bingham	Goldsborough	Morrison	Townsend
Blaine	Hale	Moses	Tydings
Borah	Hayden	Neely	Vandenberg
Bratton	Hebert	Norbeck	Wagner
Bulow	Johnson	Norris	Walcott
Byrnes	Jones	Nye	Watson
Capper	Kean	Oddie
Copeland	Kendrick	Patterson
Cutting	Lewis	Robinson, Ark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, April 18, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 15, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Accept our deep gratitude, O God, for Thy truth, for its ageless validity, and for Thy everyday mercy. In all our ways may we acknowledge Thee. There are many questions of duty clear to our reason as the light of day. O may we not disregard the strongest and the best persuasions of our understanding. Reveal unto us the highest laws in the universe; namely, the laws of humanity and service. May they plead eloquently and persistently against all forms of selfishness, which is the secret of many woes, and render the emulations of the social order so bitter and destructive. In all things keep us temperate and in alliance with those manly virtues that live and can not die. We would of Thee, our Father, not a flash of feeling, but a disposition; not a mood, but a character; not a moment of personal exaltation, but a life, good and strong and abiding. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2405. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims of the Eastern or Emigrant and the Western or Old Settler Cherokee Indians against the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 3569. An act to amend the act of May 27, 1930, authorizing an appropriation for the reconstruction and improvement of a road on the Shoshone Indian Reservation, Wyo.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I believe in the most rigid Federal retrenchment consistent with real economy. It is not economy, however, either National or State, to disrupt the program of our public schools and thus deprive 1,250,000 boys and girls of the opportunity to complete their vocational courses. We all know that educational opportunity for the masses had been the unrealized dream for centuries until the discovery of America. It is also well known to every one of us that it is the aspiration of every father and mother that their children shall have every opportunity for educational advancement which parental sacrifice can bestow. Prior to the discovery of this country every child abroad was doomed to remain in that station in life to which he had been born. Relieved from that bondage, the chief concern of the colonists was to give to their children in this land of promise every educational opportunity within their means. It became a firmly fixed belief in the minds of the early settlers that education was the "open sesame" to cultural and professional distinction. The encouragement of schools soon became a governmental practice and a fixed policy.

Impressed with the fundamental importance of education as a contributing factor to the general welfare of the Colonies the principle of Federal grants in support of schools was embodied in the ordinance of 1787 for the future government of the Northwest Territory. This ideal was expressed in the words:

> Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged.

Daniel Webster, referring to this ordinance, said:

> I doubt whether one single law of any law giver, ancient or modern, has produced effects of a more distinct, marked, and lasting character than the ordinance of 1787.

Prior to 1787, in fact, as early as 1685, one of the most effective means adopted to stimulate and promote education was by means of the donation of land. Federal aid to encourage and stimulate education was the policy and the practice of America throughout its colonial history, and it has been our national policy ever since the adoption of the Constitution. This policy has been steadfastly adhered to for nearly 300 years.

In more recent years our Federal Government has sought to stimulate and encourage vocational education. Recent grants for this purpose have been in money to the States to assist them in the field of vocational education. The encouragement given by the Federal Government has caused the States and local communities throughout the Nation to promote vocational education. Boys and girls whose creative power finds highest expression through vocational activities have manifested an ever-increasing interest in this type of school training. Thousands of boys and girls who could hardly hope to enter a college or university have turned to the vocational school as a means within their reach to prepare themselves for future usefulness.

Based upon the promise of the Federal Government to assist in this branch of education, the States have set up programs for vocational education. These plans are now in full operation. As a result of the encouragement by the States and Federal Government, the local communities have likewise set up programs to meet local vocational-education needs. Parents have planned and sacrificed to give to their children a vocational education. As I have said, 1,250,000 children will be thrown out of the vocational schools, heartbroken, discouraged, and embittered because of this alleged scheme to practice economy. It is the most stupendous waste that can be imagined; it is not economy; it means throwing out of work 25,000 teachers. A large portion of the 1,250,000 children who will thus be thrown out of school have not completed their courses. Such a nation-wide dislocation in our school system will be a calamity not only to the children and the parents but to the social well-being of the country. It means that all the time and sacrifice of the parents who assisted their children to obtain a useful education will be scrapped on the pretense of national economy.

Is it economy to stunt and stifle a generation of children and send them out into the world under an educational handicap? It is not economy; it is hysteria; it is cruel and inexcusable; it is unworthy of this Government, and I feel sure that such a policy can never be approved by the masses who would prefer to make almost any sacrifice rather than have this injustice done to their children.

Talk about economy. What about the $110,000,000 just appropriated for mountain roads and trails in our national parks? What about the $8,000,000 item in the rivers and harbors bill for new projects which if omitted from the appropriation bill will not interfere with the maintenance of a single harbor in the United States? It would require more time than I have at my disposal to enumerate the useless items in some of the appropriation bills that could be eliminated rather than visit this calamity upon the children of this Nation. I want to see every boy and girl in this land of ours have a fair chance to obtain an education. This is not the time to turn ambitious boys and girls out of school to drift aimlessly until it is too late for them to prepare for life's work. [Applause.]

This telegram from Frank Pierrepont Graves, commissioner of education for the State of New York, is typical of the havoc which this proposal of the Economy Committee would bring about:

ALBANY, N. Y., April 14, 1932.

Hon. DANIEL A. REED,
House of Representatives:

Vigorously protest Economy Committee proposal to suspend Federal aid to States for vocational education, which would create crisis in New York. Legislature has adjourned, so have no available means to continue vocational-education program if aid withdrawn. Request you urge committee to continue aid. Letter follows.

FRANK PIERREPONT GRAVES.

The figures which I now respectfully submit are typical of the highly constructive character of the work now being carried on in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent.

LIST OF HIGH SCHOOLS WITH DEPARTMENTS OF VOCATIONAL AGRICULTURE IN FORTY-THIRD CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, NEW YORK

Chautauqua County: Cassadaga, Chautauqua, Cherry Creek, Ellington, Forestville, Sherman, Sinclairville, Westfield.

Cattaraugus County: Cattaraugus, East Otto, Franklinville, Little Valley, Machias, Portville, Randolph, South Dayton.

Allegany County: Almond, Alfred, Wellsville. In addition, there are 10 unit course centers conducted by itinerant teachers.

The average enrollment in these schools is about 20 farm boys, or 380 boys. In addition, a number of these schools conducted part-time classes for young men on farms.

Trade and industrial vocational education in the forty-third congressional district, New York State

	Enrolled	Instructors	Federal aid
Dunkirk:
Evening apprentice classes	44	3	$120.00
Part-time classes	433	5	862.39
Jamestown:
Evening apprentice classes	158	10	959.25
Part-time classes	249	6	1,630.96
All-day classes	40	3	1,241.66
Olean: Part-time classes	239	6	912.16
Total	1,163	33	5,726.42

NOTE.—Of this total enrollment, 672 are employed boys and girls returning to school for at least 4 hours a week; 202 of this enrollment are adult workers from factories.

HOME ECONOMICS EDUCATION—VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS IN THE FORTY-THIRD CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT IN NEW YORK STATE

I do not have specific data for home economics classes, but they are organized in practically all high schools of my district. There are approximately 30 day vocational departments in the three counties, with about 1,600 pupils enrolled.

In addition, 124 women were enrolled last year in evening classes for adults in Jamestown and Dunkirk, in Chautauqua County.

This proposal of the Economy Committee to destroy the educational program throughout the country will not reduce local taxes. It will increase them. It will place a large and unexpected burden upon the local communities. The tax burden upon rural communities will be made intolerable by the proposal and will, if carried out, stifle the public-school program in the small towns.

The burden of local taxes for schools is heavy enough now without adding to it by increasing the load, as proposed by the Economy Committee. Take farm sections where vocational agricultural schools are active, so far as the taxes are concerned, the tax burden is from local taxes, not Federal taxes. Less than $10,000,000 of the total of something like $1,500,000,000 of taxes paid by farmers in 1924–25 represent Federal income-tax payments. The farmers' tax burden takes the form of State and local taxes or general property taxes, of which more than 90 per cent are for local purposes. The State tax amounts to about 10 per cent.

The indefensible suggestion is now made by the Economy Committee to add to this local tax burden of the farmer, and in doing so blight the educational prospects of his children. I do not believe that the people of America will approve of any such attempt to impair the efficiency of the public schools of the Nation, especially when it will increase local taxation instead of decreasing it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, word has just come of a proposal to discontinue Federal aid to schools, and I take the first opportunity to enter a vigorous protest against any such shortsighted policy. I earnestly hope that the administration and the committee on the part of the House engaged in formulating the economy bill will reconsider any conclusion they may have reached which in any way involves the suspension of the allotment of Federal funds for vocational education.

No one could be more impressed than I am with the need for economy and the importance of retrenching expenditures. But, Mr. Speaker, this is a false economy. It will cost more eventually through reduced revenues from agriculture than it will save. The advantages accruing from this investment in the education of the next generation far outweigh the comparatively insignificant amount to be saved by such cheese-paring parsimony.

To strike down Federal cooperation would mean the discontinuance of departments of vocational agriculture in the high schools of every State in the Union. It would necessitate the abandonment of educational activities which through long trial and actual experience have demonstrated a worth many times in excess of the amount required for their maintenance. It would effectually destroy the entire vocational program acknowledged to be one of the most important and successful developments in modern education.

I can not believe the joint conference in charge of the economy bill fully appreciates the effect of such a policy. I can not believe they will be willing to sacrifice this magnificent system of training the youth of the land for the sake of having a little more money to spend on another battleship, or another commission, or even on another marble building in Washington.

Mr. Speaker, no law of this character passed in recent times has been productive of more beneficial results or more immediate advantages to the country at large. One of the crying needs of agriculture to-day is for trained leadership. There is a dearth of leaders and executives in every department of agricultural production and distribution. We need them in the development of efficient farm management, in the field of scientific research, in every branch of cooperative marketing, in the formulation of State and National legislation, and in the correlation of all the activities of this most important of all industries. These courses in vocational education established through Federal cooperation with the States offer the only opportunity for the average boy or girl to secure such training. The vast majority of rural students can never hope to enjoy the advantages of college or university courses. If they are to receive this indispensable training, it must be supplied through the high schools, and the high schools are unable to support vocational courses without Federal aid.

The benefits of no law are more widely distributed. In my own State alone 3,487 boys are enrolled in vocational agriculture classes, and the number of girls in similar classes is almost as large. In every State, and in practically every county, in the Union the foundation of the future prosperity of both city and country is being laid in the training supplied by these courses. Hundreds of thousands of children in these schools are to-day preparing for future service to their communities and to the Nation to an extent undreamed of before Federal aid to such instruction was made available. Nothing is adding so much to country life. No contribution of our times is proving of such permanent and practical value in proportion to its cost. It is turning the tide back to the farm and is the greatest guaranty of a cultured, contented, constructive citizenship that can be provided.

The advantages of these courses are not confined to high-school students. Evening schools for adult farmers and their wives are supported by aid provided from these funds, and with the growing migration from the city back to the farm this is of ever-growing importance. In many counties without extension agents, the vocational instructors in the high schools supply this service and are in receipt of constant calls from farmers seeking advice in the solution of their farm problems. Instructors in these schools are rendering practical service almost daily in culling poultry, in judging and testing livestock for tuberculosis and other contagious diseases, in superintending the pruning and spraying of fruit, in the introduction of new varieties and crops, in the utilization of limestone in the determination of proper fertilizers, in controlling erosion, and in all branches of practical agriculture. The service rendered by trained teachers provided through these funds is invaluable, not only in the schools but throughout the entire community. They are teaching not only agricultural courses but credits, finance, economics, and other related subjects as well.

To interfere with this service at this critical time threatens the entire system. The likelihood is that once discontinued it will never be resumed. We can not afford to take that risk. The cost is infinitesimal in comparison with the results achieved. Let us economize in any other department. Let us curtail expenditures in preparation for war, in providing ship subsidies, in support of surplus bureaus—or in any other governmental activity—before we abandon this priceless investment in the young citizenship and future prosperity of America.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS—LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent that that committee be granted the privilege of sitting during the session of the House to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry, if it be proper, and I do not know for sure that it is a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we were informed that there was being held in the White House and coming up soon a report from the President with reference to his own program for reducing salaries or curtailing the expenses of the Government. Has the Speaker any information as to whether or not that will come up to-day?

The SPEAKER. While that is not a parliamentary inquiry, a number of Members have asked the Chair when we would probably consider the so-called Economy Committee's report. It is the present hope, the Chair thinks, of that committee to continue with the legislative appropriation bill on Tuesday next. It all depends, however, upon when the President sends up his report. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] is here and he can give more information than the Chair can on that subject.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I say to the gentleman that it was originally suggested by the President in our last conference that he could have his program ready in 48 hours. That would mean it would come up this afternoon. However, the rumor is now to the effect that it will be Monday before the President's program can be submitted. I do not know how true that is. I know, however, that it is quite difficult to whip into orderly fashion the various bills or items within a general omnibus bill if the committee sees fit to report a general omnibus bill. We have not the President's views or suggestions in detail this morning. Frankly I do not know when they will come up here. Colonel Roop has just called for a part of our legislative drafting service and we have sent them down in order that we may not hinder or impede progress being made by the President.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman inform the House if we could have 24 hours' notice, or know a day in advance, when the gentleman's committee will bring any matter before the House?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I think the gentleman will probably have that much notice; certainly.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That is all we ask.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I might ask the minority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], if he has any information as to when the President's plan will be submitted to the committee. Probably he has been in communication with the White House.

Mr. SNELL. I am not on the Economy Committee and do not pretend to speak for it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. We would like to have the gentleman on the committee.

Mr. SNELL. I am thankful that that is one thing I am not on. My understanding is that the program which has been talked over by the committee and the President will be ready some time to-night. That is the last understanding I have had in regard to it. I might say also that I think it is very important that it should be up here as soon as possible, because the House must have one or two days in which to consider it before it can be considered on the floor.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The committee certainly should have a little time to look it over.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I mean.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. When it does come it will not be a secret, will it?

Mr. SNELL. I do not know of any secret.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I was just asking the leader on the Republican side a question. When the President's program is submitted here, it will not be a secret, will it? We will know about it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The business of the Economy Committee is the public business of the United States and nothing is secret in that committee. When the President's program gets in there it is not a secret. We do not do business secretly.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. CULLEN. Are we to understand that when the Economy Committee brings in its report and has it ready for consideration in the House, the membership of the House will receive at least 24 hours' notice before it is taken up on the floor for consideration?

Mr. McDUFFIE. As far as I am personally concerned, that is entirely agreeable to me, but the gentleman must realize that it will take some time for the committee to go over this program, the program of the committee and that of the President, and put it in the shape of one bill, if the committee decides upon one bill.

Involved in the entire situation, of course, is the question of the legislative appropriation bill, and when it will come before the House for consideration again. Suppose our committee were ready to-night, for instance, and the legislative appropriation bill were on the calendar next day, undoubtedly the committee, if it is going to carry out the original thought, would have to proceed with that bill on the legislative appropriation bill. Therefore, I am hardly able to answer with certainty as to what the committee can do, in the way of giving definite notice of 24 hours.

Mr. CULLEN. Pursuing the question a little farther, is it reasonable to ask that the chairman of the Economy Committee will, before taking it up, at least give the House some notice in regard to when it is going to take it up, provided it fits in with the legislative appropriation bill, which is not to be taken up before next Tuesday?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes. I will give the House notice.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, in a few weeks the public schools of America will engage in that inspiring ceremony of awarding certificates of merit to those students who have completed their regular high-school work. It will be a season of joy. Ambitions will be realized and hopes brightened.

Weary teachers and impatient students are anxiously looking forward to the day of days when there will come the welcome conclusion of another year's work. Already class historians and valedictorians are agonizing over the task assigned to them in this ceremony. In all respects commencement day will be a milestone along the path of life.

In the congressional district which I have the honor to represent it is estimated that there will be something like 2,000 boys and girls who will complete their high-school work and receive the coveted certificate of merit.

We are living in an age that calls for trained intellect and clear thinking, and for a complete understanding of the fundamental problems of government and the duty of citizenship. It seems to me that it is a heartening sign that these young men and women have realized the importance of equipping themselves mentally to take their places as leaders in the social, business, and economic life of their several communities.

I think, therefore, that it is not amiss to extend congratulations to these young people, felicitations to their instructors, and a word of encouragement and hope to those who shall follow after.

IMPORTANCE OF MENTAL TRAINING

More and more we are realizing the importance of at least giving our children an elementary education. That this need is realized may be seen from the generous way in which both State and Federal Governments contribute to this cause, as well as the countless sectarian and private schools that are engaged in this crusade against illiteracy.

Out of a total population of 122,775,046 there were enrolled in public elementary and high schools, 25,678,015 pupils in 1930, with an average attendance of 20,608,353. A total number of 854,265 teachers were required to equip 247,289 schools. The total value of the school property was $6,211,327,040. The total cost of this stupendous system was $2,316,790,384.

Our own State of Virginia spent in 1931 the sum of $27,518,017.21 for public-school education. The value of school property was $68,781,653, to house a school population of something like a million and a quarter pupils.

Virginia is making splendid progress. The stress of the times may for a season cause us to forego advancement as rapidly as we might like, but there is an abundance of evidence of a healthy growth and expansion.

THOMAS JEFFERSON AND EDUCATION

It was the wish of Thomas Jefferson that his name and memory be enshrined in the hearts of his people because of what he considered the three outstanding accomplishments of his life, and on his monument at Monticello is the following inscription:

Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of American Independence, the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and founder of the University of Virginia.

One of the accomplishments of Thomas Jefferson, and for which he desired to be remembered was the establishment of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. Jefferson believed in the education of the masses of the people, and his creed upon this subject can not be more eloquently stated than in his own language:

If a nation expects to be ignorant and free in a state of civilization, it expects what never was and never will be.

And yet, again, writing to George Wythe from Paris:

Preach, my dear sir, a crusade against ignorance. Establish and improve the law for educating the common people.

And yet, again, he said:

Every government degenerates when left to the rulers of the people alone. The people themselves are its only safe repository. And to render even them safe, their minds must be improved to a certain degree.

Education with Thomas Jefferson was the handmaiden of democracy. He believed therefore that education must not be monopolized by the rich and well born, but that it should become the common property of all who will avail themselves of it, and should therefore be placed, by the common sacrifice of all, within the reach of all.

Realizing therefore that democracy must rest upon the education of the masses, Jefferson formulated a complete system of public schools from the primary grade on up to the State university. He was far in advance of his time. His plans could not be put into full operation, but he sowed the seed that would afterwards bear an abundant and glorious harvest.

How happy would be the heart of Thomas Jefferson if he could know what splendid progress his beloved Southland and his own Virginia had made in providing for public-school education. If he could see his own native State, her hillsides dotted with splendid school buildings, equipped and manned by self-sacrificing teachers, giving of their time and talent that the youth of America may be the better fitted for the problems of self-government.

UNCROWNED HEROES

Too much can not be said in commendation of the spirit of self-sacrifice and service that actuates the splendid body of school-teachers, who daily give their talent and strength to this divine calling. I say give their time and strength advisedly. No money, certainly the small and inadequate salaries now paid, can compensate the conscientious teacher for his or her labors.

The education of the youth of America, the training of their minds, bodies, and hearts for the duties of citizenship is one of the highest functions of organized society.

The very perpetuity of our free institutions depends upon an enlightened and intelligent citizenship.

Those forces which frame the economic policies of a people are of great importance. But what trains the minds and hearts of a people, what builds character and manhood and womanhood strikes at the very soul of national existence.

All honor to the public-school teacher. May the citizens and the parents ever stand ready to cooperate and support them in their great labor of sacrifice and service.

So, Mr. Speaker, I desire to express this simple word of appreciation to these young folks, and congratulations to the army of men and women who through years of patient effort have led them on to this, one of life's greatest moments.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11361) making appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1933, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11361, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. LANHAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], on page 17 of the bill.

Without objection, for the information of the committee, the Clerk will again report the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this provision does not provide for building or construction of any character, and I trust the gentleman from Wisconsin is this morning disposed to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on the amendment.

The proposed amendment is to save in expenditure through the next fiscal year the sum of over $1,000,000 for the purchase of land for a municipal center.

As the members of the committee know, this is a $21,900,000 project. Six million dollars have been authorized for the purchase of land. All of the Members of the House are acquainted, by visual observation, with the land or a portion of the land that has been acquired.

Toward the close of the session last night it was brought out in the colloquy that the commissioners want $1,000,000 more to purchase additional land, not for immediate need but to complete the whole project. As I read the hearings, 91 per cent of all the land embodied in the municipal center has been purchased. Some land has not been purchased, because, following the policy of some of the lot holders, they have placed such exorbitant prices on the land that the District Commissioners have been obliged to either condemn or refuse to enter into negotiations.

The position I take is that this is no time to purchase real estate in the District of Columbia just to have it lie fallow until the District Commissioners are ready to proceed with the building of a municipal center. The municipal government has a municipal building to-day, adequate for all its purposes, with the addition of the Ford Building, which it has purchased and which the District Commissioners intend to utilize entirely presently, as soon as the Ford Motor Co. gives up the use of the ground floor for display purposes.

We have been purchasing land too freely in the District of Columbia. The claim is made that this does not come out of the Treasury of the United States. It does come out of the Treasury of the United States, proportionally to the amount that the United States contributes to the support of the government.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. In just a moment.

We hear continually criticisms of the Congress of the United States because of our wasteful imposition of burdens upon the District. I challenge anyone here whether there is a common council in the country which to-day, with the conditions confronting the District of Columbia taxpayers, would favor purchasing additional land which is not necessary to the extent of $1,200,000, just for the accommodation of the landowners who have heretofore held up the prices of their land.

All persons in the country are willing to sell their lands to-day. The District Commissioners claim that to-day is a good time to purchase land. I take the position that this land will not be improved in the next year or the next two years. I have read the hearings, and there is absolutely no showing that this land is needed for the construction program. There is nothing of that sort shown.

I am acting to-day as a common councilman, the same as I would if I were a member of the common council in my home city, and I protest against the needless expenditure of over a million dollars for the purchase of land that can not be used for two years or for three years.

The status of the appropriation for the civic center is that plans have not been drawn. No buildings will be required until the District gives up the Municipal Building at Fourteenth Street and the Avenue, which is adequate for the needs of the District at this time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are we sincere in our efforts to safeguard the interests of the taxpayers of the District? They claim they have no voice here. I claim I am attempting to protect them from the policy of the commissioners in seeking to burden them with higher and higher taxes, and I say the time has come to call a halt.

Remember, there are no isolated tracts of land involved in this proposal. They have all the land to-day that is necessary if they would go ahead with their building program, but it is not proposed to go ahead. If we are consistent, we will not add ammunition to the claims of local persons, who say that the Congress gives no heed to the clamor of the District for economy. We should be consistent and vote to strike this out of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman know whether this is to pay for land which has already been bought or whether it is to buy new land that is not under contract?

Mr. STAFFORD. According to the hearings, there is available to-day $600,000 of unexpended funds for the purchase of additional land. The hearings disclose that it is for the purpose of purchasing land which is not under contract, but it is for the purpose of negotiating with those persons who have held up the District by asking exorbitant prices for their land.

The District Commissioners were not willing to pay those exorbitant prices, and this is for the purpose of condemning those lands. The greedy real-estate owners who have refused in the past to accept the reasonable offers of the District for their land should be compelled to wait another year or two. Then they will be out more and more, but the District will be in more and more, because those owners will be required to pay the taxes on their land.

I do not see how anyone can escape the logic of the position I take. We have been buying altogether too much land in the District of Columbia for national purposes. We have spent millions and millions for the purchase of land in the triangle simply for the aggrandizement of the property owners here. It is time for the Congress to show that it is against this policy, a policy which no common council of the country would follow if it were responsive to the will of the people.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman knows it is a fundamental economic proposition that the prices of real estate are the last to advance. If this money is to pay for new real estate, the gentleman is absolutely right that we should not provide this appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have carefully read the hearings, and I have not offered this amendment without the support of the hearings. I give great heed to the opinion that has been expressed that conditions are going to continue as they are for another year or 18 months. I will venture my opinion from my observation of conditions throughout the country that real-estate values in the District will not go up and that to delay this appropriation will be in the interest of the taxpayers of the District.

You may vote me down, but I have done my duty toward the taxpayers of the District in seeking to prevent the commissioners from further outraging the taxpayers of the District by purchasing land at this time which is not needed at this time.

Mr. SEGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SEGER. If what the gentleman has said is true, irrespective of whether real estate goes up or down, the District can proceed by condemnation and secure this land more cheaply a year or two years from now.

Mr. STAFFORD. They will be able to buy it more cheaply and thus punish these real-estate owners who have refused to accept a fair price for their land. They want to get ready money so that they can buy undervalued bonds. Every one of these persons who has gotten money out of the Treasury has benefited by reason of the fact that values of investment securities to-day are low. I believe it is no more than right that we should postpone this appropriation for another year or two.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am so frequently in accord with the gentleman from Wisconsin on the program of economy that it seems rather strange that his arguments do not appeal to me in this particular instance. It is such arguments as we have just heard that have cost the Nation and the District of Columbia untold millions of dollars.

As I had some part and was the originator of the idea of purchasing enough property on the north side of the Avenue to complete the 20-year program presented to Congress by the District Commissioners, I feel impelled to defend the position I took at that time and retain at this time.

I asked the commissioners when they came before the committee of which I was a member with a bill to purchase part of this property at once, how much they supposed would be the natural increase in the value of the remainder of the property required in 10 years, and they said, undoubtedly, it would double, if not treble, in value. I think the estimate was correct. I then figured for them the amount it would cost to borrow the money to purchase this land, and it would cost them only about $1,800,000 interest if they purchased the land and borrowed the money. So the bill was amended and the District Commissioners advised and provided for the purchase of all the property necessary to complete the municipal group and provide for future requirements.

With reference to the triangle, if the suggestion which I made for its purchase in 1923 or the bill which I introduced and which actually passed the House in 1925 had been passed by the Senate for an appropriation of $15,000,000, this Government would have saved something like $30,000,000 on the purchase of the triangle alone. But it went over and went over and the price of land increased to such a degree that it cost an additional $30,000,000 before final action by Congress.

It is not a wise policy to develop and improve the south side of the Avenue and thereby add to the value of property on the north side of the Avenue, wait two years after such improvement for or by the District, and then go into the market and try to purchase this land. The present price would be increased, undoubtedly, 50 per cent, if not 100 per cent or possibly 200 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any proposal in the improvement of the triangle on the south side of the Avenue as to the property between Sixth Street and Third Street, which is the property set aside for the Municipal Center on the opposite side?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes; the entire south side of the Avenue, from the foot of the Capitol, including the Botanic Gardens, and extending to the White House or the Ellipse, is to be improved, and practically all of it has been secured by the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suggest there is not any substantive proposal whatsoever that has been enacted into law or recommended by the department for the improvement of the south side of the Avenue from Seventh Street to the Botanic Garden, and this item of the bill refers to the property between Sixth and Third Streets.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It makes no difference, Mr. Chairman, whether it immediately abuts the property; it is adjacent to it, and everybody knows that when Congress appropriated $15,000,000 for the Memorial Bridge across the Potomac, the value of land 2 to 12 blocks away increased 100 to 200 per cent. The assessors recognized this and increased the value of the property in assessing the whole triangle area $3,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, it is poor policy and is not economy to put off the purchase of land in Washington. It is growing more and more in demand and is becoming more and more valuable. You can not simply go out and demand that the owners of this property must take a certain fair price. I agree with the gentleman that property owners in Washington have certainly thrown the hooks into the National Government and into the District government and always will. I would be glad to see their assessments increased to the prices demanded and taxes levied accordingly.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the attitude taken by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I want to emphasize again the reply which he made to the argument that we are administering District funds. District funds are joint funds. Twenty-three cents out of every dollar spent is a Federal contribution, and only 77 cents has been contributed from the District revenues. And, Mr. Chairman, we feel it is just as incumbent upon the committee to economize and reduce the burden of taxation in the District as it is to reduce the burden of the taxpayers of the Federal Government. One of the principal objectives of the committee in writing this bill was to avoid any increase in the real-estate tax rate in the District.

As to this specific amendment, Mr. Chairman, it is not intended to buy land at inflated prices. We have now acquired all land that could be secured through negotiation. The lots we have not been able to buy, comprising about 17 per cent of the area, have been held at exorbitant prices by the owners. The purpose in appropriating this money is to place the commission in a position to bargain with the owners if any of them change their minds and indicate a disposition to take a reasonable price for their property; and in view of the fact that there will be a long wait if they do not deal with the commissioners now, we believe that most of the remaining owners in the District will be willing during the coming year to listen to reason; and with that in view, we think this money should be available. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. There is available for the purchase of this land $564,000. About 82 per cent of all the land has been purchased, and it is estimated that $336,000 additional will be needed.

I think the commissioners have made a good record in this matter. They have come nearer buying within the original appropriation than the Government has ever been able to do. In reality there is only $336,000 for purchasing land involved here.

The general plan is that with $336,000, in addition to the $564,000 that is now available, the purchase of the land will be completed.

In this paragraph there is $600,000 for putting in the underground work. When the underground work has been completed the land will be ready for constructing the main building.

The committee thought that by purchasing the land and doing the underground work there would not be any serious delay in completing the building.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact that the Government owns all the land necessary to complete the first two units of the municipal center?

Mr. HOLADAY. No; that is not true—they have purchased 82 per cent, and they can not go ahead with the underground work until they have completed the purchase.

Mr. STAFFORD. The hearings disclose that they have land enough now to enable them to complete the first two units.

Mr. HOLADAY. You can not complete a building on a square where there are intermediate lots that you do not own.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the hearings disclose that they own enough land to complete the first two units.

Mr. HOLADAY. It is necessary to purchase the remainder of the land if they are to go on with the underground work. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For paving, repaving, and surfacing, including curbing and gutters where necessary, the following:

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been watching these appropriations and have been listening to the speeches in reference to raising the money to do these things we have been talking about. I have just gone through a campaign, as gentlemen know, and have talked over these matters in my district. I have been urging my people out home, especially the farmers, to stand behind the bill known as the O'Connor-Hull bill, to legalize 2.75 per cent beer by weight, which is actually 3.46 per cent beer by volume. If we legalize beer, we can raise $500,000,000 a year, which will relieve the financial situation more than anything I know of. I am sincere in everything I say in reference to this. We have a petition on the Clerk's desk to-day, and we are now being confronted with these terrible appropriations. I think that we should sign up that petition and make it possible to bring the beer bill on the floor of the House and pass it. If we do so, it will do more to stabilize conditions in the country, in my judgment, that anything we can do here now.

A number of us who are in favor of this bill met on the steps this morning and received a petition signed by 5,000,000 persons asking us to present it to Congress. It is from the Modification League and is presented through Mrs. Lorraine Catlin Brower, of New York City, vice president of the organization. This petition, calling for the modification of the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture and sale of beer, contains the signatures of approximately 5,000,000 American citizens who are residents of 35 States and voters in 319 congressional districts. The signatures were obtained during the past three years by the organizers of the league and each name was attached voluntarily by the signer. The league is a voluntary organization without capital, indebtedness, bonded or otherwise, and is a nonprofit corporation, organized under the laws of the District of Columbia. The league is maintained through the dues, $1 a year, paid by members, of whom there are approximately 250,000. The organizers of the league are still actively engaged in extending the canvass, and each week finds many thousands of names added to the petition.

What I say is not for the purpose of trying to foist on this House something that will be detrimental to the Members of the House, but all I ask you to do is to study the proposition. If we could pass a bill legalizing beer at 2.75 per cent by weight, I am sure that the prohibitionists and the modificationists and even the wets would all be satisfied. Some say they would not; they say that the wets would not be satisfied, but this is a step in the right direction. I have in my pocket a letter from the largest industrial organization in the United States, which I can not read because it is confidential, but the letter states in so many words that it is a step in the right direction and that it ought to be passed in this term of Congress. I have been out campaigning, as you all know. It is true that I was defeated, but not on the wet question. My opponent and I are both wet, although he stated he was a little wetter than I was. When you gentlemen go back to campaign, as I have gone back, you will find in many of your districts the same condition existing that I tell you about now. The farmers have commenced to change their minds, the people in the churches have commenced to change their minds, and they realize that we must have some kind of income here instead of paying out continually for the same purpose. There are 35,000,000 barrels of beer being sold in this country to-day surreptitiously, without a cent of tax being paid upon it.

Just think it over. It is very important for the whole country. Do not let your prejudices keep you away from it; do not have the fear that if you do this you are going to ruin yourself in your district. There are some districts that might be that way, but you think of the farming districts and all of the western part of the country. You are going to find out that within six months' time there will be such a reaction against doing the things that we are doing, spending money, when we could by passing this bill be raising money, that it will surprise you. I believe that the President will sign the bill if it is passed, and you will relieve the situation more than anything else that you can do. I entreat you to give it your consideration. I ask you to sign this petition and bring this bill on the floor, and let us all stand up like men and bring back this nonintoxicating liquor to the people and collect the money on it and do away with bad liquor. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $1,671,100, to be immediately available, to be disbursed and accounted for as "Gasoline tax, road and street improvements," and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That assessments in accordance with existing law shall be made for paving and repaving roadways where such roadways are paved or repaved with funds derived from the collection of the tax on motor-vehicle fuels and accretions by repayment of assessments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I direct inquiry as to the recommendation of the Budget proposal, which the committee did not allow, of $126,000 for the widening and repaving of Constitution Avenue. In the independent offices appropriation bill we authorized the Public Buildings and Lands Commission an appropriation of some $360,000, partly for the purpose of the improvement of Constitution Avenue. That provision would throw the entire burden on the National Government. This recommendation of the budgetary officer, if allowed, would throw the burden chiefly upon the District government. Will the gentleman inform the committee as to what the plan is for the apportionment of costs in the maintenance of thoroughfares through the Mall, such as Constitution Avenue?

Mr. CANNON. This is a meritorious item, but the committee followed the tacit instructions given by the House in amending the independent offices appropriation bill. The House struck from that bill the portion of this appropriation which was to have been paid by the Federal Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that on the floor of the House a motion was made to strike out the appropriation involving, as I recall, $1,200,000, in which was included an appropriation of some $320,000 for the improvement of Constitution Avenue.

At the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], later in consideration of the bill, the committee gave unanimous consent for the incorporation of the $320,000 appropriation for the specific purpose of improving the ways on the other side of Memorial Bridge, and also, as I understood from his statement, the improvement of Constitution Avenue, widening it, changing its route and changing its general size from the width it now has.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is correct in his statement that the Bureau of the Budget recommended the expenditure, and that the Committee on Appropriations reported it to the House. But the House struck it out, and so we felt that by that act we were practically under instructions to eliminate provision for the District's share of the amount recommended by the Budget for the purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I am calling the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the House, at the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], upon receiving information from the Director of Public Buildings and Grounds, restored the item to the extent of $320,000, upon the statement that it was for the purpose of improving Constitution Avenue. Now, I am seeking information. How much of that $320,000 will be borne by the District government, if any, or is it all borne by the National Government, as far as the improvement of Constitution Avenue is concerned?

Mr. HOLADAY. Perhaps I can give the gentleman the information he desires. The amounts for the improvement of Constitution Avenue from the Capitol down to the bridge, the bridge, and on the other side of the bridge have been carried under the same plan, part paid under the independent offices appropriation bill and part paid under the District of Columbia appropriation bill. In the House that part for the widening of Constitution Avenue from the river to the Capitol carried in the independent offices appropriation bill was stricken out. The amount that was put in that bill is all to be used on the other side of the river—at the entrance to the cemetery and some other places over there. Since in the independent offices appropriation bill the House struck out all work on Constitution Avenue on this side of the river, the committee thinks it will be a wise thing if the bill is left as it is reported. There will be no work done on Constitution Avenue between the Capitol and the river this coming year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman, then, is certain in his position, because I received a different impression following the discussions on the floor of the House, and the explanation made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] that part of it was for the improvement of Constitution Avenue on this side of the river, up to the Capitol.

Mr. HOLADAY. No. It is my understanding, and I think I am correct, that there will be no work done on Constitution Avenue on this side of the river.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Supplementing what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] has said, the street is to-day, for all practical purposes, just as serviceable as it ever will be. The only thing to be secured from this additional expenditure is the enhanced beauty of the avenue.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I understand it is the policy of the Government that one-half the cost of all these thoroughfares running through the Mall will be borne by the District Government?

Mr. HOLADAY. The provision in this bill, the inclusion or exclusion of this amount, will not have anything to do with the proportionate shares. We are simply stopped from work for the year on Constitution Avenue.

Mr. STAFFORD. But it is the policy of the Government always to charge one-half the cost of all thoroughfares in the Mall to the District government.

Mr. HOLADAY. Well, I can not answer as to that.

Mr. CANNON. As the gentleman doubtless knows, we do this work on a 60-40 basis. Failure to include the appropriation in this item in no way changes that proportion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who pays the 60 and who pays the 40 per cent?

Mr. CANNON. The Federal Government pays 40 per cent and the District government 60 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words, and I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL] made a very interesting suggestion. It is quite in conformity with a great number of other suggestions on the same situation. It is to the effect that the President of the United States would approve of the beer bill if passed.

Well, now, Calvin Coolidge had one spokesman—a great, invisible spokesman called the White House spokesman. Mr. Hoover has replaced the White House spokesman by anybody who may care to speak in behalf of Mr. Hoover. In spite of the fact that these men who speak for Mr. Hoover have the greatest courage in the world, they do not seem to have a veracity that measures up to their courage, because no one in this country has yet been definitely able to find out just how Mr. Hoover feels on the beer bill, and it is high time the country heard from the President of the United States on this great issue. Up to date he is the leading dry of the country. He is so dry he is supernaturally dry, because when the Wickersham Commission, which was his creature, went out and looked the country over and they came in with individual reports, this supernatural dry rose to the status of a miracle man and by one wave of his hand over their troubled heads he made these wets sign a joint dry statement, which was in absolute contravention of the facts they found. Since then we have had no positive declaration from Mr. Hoover on this question. On that record up to this time he is judged.

Now, to pass the beer bill, to relieve the country from all kinds of distress, to restore sanity, to get a decent source of revenue, to eliminate crime, and to help balance the Budget all we need to-day is one word from the President of the United States that he would sign a beer bill, a constitutional beer bill. That is all we need. For the elimination of major crime, of organized crime, for the elimination of heavy taxation, and for the salvation of the Budget all we need is a word from the President of the United States, the leader of the country, who, in this crisis, has not done anything, but some gentlemen who assume to be leaders in the House are suggesting that he might do it. Well, that is not enough. This is a time for straightforward declarations on his part.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Does not the gentleman think it would be better if we would all sign this petition, get the bill on the floor and pass it, and then see if the President would sign it?

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the gentleman that the reason I am making this statement is because of the statement the gentleman made—which was calculated to deceive the people—that the President would sign the bill. The gentleman made the statement on the floor that he believed the President would sign the bill. He has the ear of the President. I have not the ear of the President. If the gentleman will state to the House just what he knows about the President, what the President has said to him, and what he has said to the President, then he will advance his cause; but he will not advance his cause by idly saying he believes it. That is the reason I brought up this subject, because the gentleman had already mentioned it. We would not need any pay cuts or furloughs if the President will just say, "I will sign the bill."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. The furlough we will have will be that we will give the Anti-Saloon League a furlough. We will give the organized racketeer a furlough. The pay cuts we will have will be these: We will give the Anti-Saloon League and the professional dry lecturers a pay cut; we will give the organized racketeers a pay cut, if this bill is signed. It only needs, as I say, a declaration by the President himself. Will the White House speak in this time of trial on this important measure? Hoover himself, not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL], not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], but the White House, speaking officially through the President of the United States. That is the only way it can be done.

The gentleman from Illinois spoke about the farmer and prohibition. For 10 years on the floor of this House I have been trying to call the attention of the men from farming regions to the effect of prohibition on their constituents and on their voting backgrounds.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I think I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask our friend, who is an eminent lawyer, what he would think of the President of the United States, who is the Chief Executive upon whose shoulders rests the responsibility of upholding the law, if he would come out and say he would sign a beer bill?

Mr. BLACK. Even I would think better of him.

Mr. BLANTON. The rest of the people of the United States would ask that he be immediately retired.

Mr. BLACK. If he got a concession from me, he would accomplish something. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIROVICH. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. During the last 14 periods of economic depression which our country has suffered we had some little conflagration that brought prosperity back. Does not the gentleman think that if the President would go on record to the effect he would sign this bill this would be a spark that would bring prosperity immediately back?

Mr. BLACK. That is just my idea. Get the country well lit up. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. That would be the last straw that would break the camel's back.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. McGUGIN. What alcoholic content would the gentleman think was appropriate in the beer bill?

Mr. BLACK. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Ruppert against Claffey said that Congress, in order to enforce the eighteenth amendment, might make a definition of an intoxicant, a definition by alcoholic content, and the court said that in order to enforce the eighteenth amendment it might go so far as to declare a nonintoxicant an intoxicant. It happened in that case that 2.75 beer was before the court. The court said, with the admission of the Attorney General, that 2.75 beer was not intoxicating, but that even so Congress could say it was intoxicating for the purpose of enforcing the eighteenth amendment. Therefore, it naturally follows that in the course of congressional experience with this act, if it does not enforce the law or if it can not have the law enforced by the present definition, Congress can broaden its definition to the point that Congress determines what is an actual intoxicant.

I rather think if we all voted on personal experience with intoxicants we would be rather broad minded about what the alcoholic content would be, and I am satisfied that under the Ruppert against Claffey case we can accept 2.75 beer at least as nonintoxicating, because that is plainly the inference from the decision and is plainly the statement of the Attorney General before the court.

Mr. McGUGIN. There is no doubt in the gentleman's mind but what, in fact, 2.75 beer is intoxicating.

Mr. BLACK. I am not going to enter into that scientific argument.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In reply to the gentleman from Kansas, I have in my cellar at home some beer brewed under the war-time prohibition act of 2.75 per cent, and I vouch personally, because I have no alcohol in my system whatsoever, that 2.75 per cent beer is not intoxicating. Upon my word as a Representative I state that and I vouch for the statement.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, and I shall not object, I hope the gentleman will conclude in the five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] is one of the commonest questions asked about this beer bill, for which a petition is now at the desk, and which bill makes the legislative declaration that such beer is not intoxicating in fact, which has been determined, and there is judicial and scientific authority for that. The judicial authority is found in the Ruppert case, and our scientific authority is contained in the thousand or more pages of hearings held before the Judiciary Committee of the House in 1930; and if the gentleman from Kansas will read them, he will find that well-known scientists and doctors and outstanding men who have made a study of the question came before the Judiciary Committee and stated, from their scientific knowledge, that 2.75 per cent beer is not intoxicating in fact.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is before the House—the District bill or the beer bill?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has promised to close this discussion at the end of the five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. This is the most important issue before the country. It involves the salvation of the country.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly; the gentleman secured me this extra time.

Mr. BLANTON. Why hesitate and camouflage; why not propose that you have real beer of 5 per cent—beer that would satisfy the gentleman from New York and the distinguished scientist from New York? Why call it 2.75 when you know full well they would fudge up to 5 per cent?

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL and Mr. SIROVICH rose.

Mr. BLACK. It is not important what satisfies me. I am satisfied with one-half of 1 per cent. Let some of the other gentlemen answer as to what would satisfy them. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL].

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. I want to answer my friend BLANTON on that question—2.75 beer by weight is 3.46 by volume, and 3.46 per cent beer by volume has been decreed nonintoxicating by all the scientists that have ever given it any thought.

Mr. BLANTON. Then surely it is of no account to those who drink beer for its intoxicating effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is of much account.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. All accept it as nonintoxicating. You never had in your life more than 4 per cent beer; and when you talk about 5 per cent beer, you are away beyond the pale, because 4 per cent was the highest.

Mr. BLANTON. Then 4 per cent is intoxicating, because the old beer intoxicated hundreds of thousands.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I can not yield any further until I get my program here.

I am about to abdicate my leadership, however.

Mr. DELANEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. DELANEY. As a matter of fact, the gentleman from New York who is now talking is a teetotaler, is he not?

Mr. BLACK. I confess; yes.

Mr. SIROVICH, Mr. HOLADAY, and Mr. PARKS rose.

Mr. PARKS. I would like to ask which one of these gentlemen has the floor.

Mr. HOLADAY. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. HOLADAY. We are anxious to go ahead with the pending bill, and I wonder what the gentleman from New York would think of the plan of allowing the leading dry from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to repair to the cellar of the gentleman from Wisconsin and test out this beer?

Mr. STAFFORD. I extend that invitation now to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I have already passed on the question. I believe it is intoxicating, else the gentleman would not have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. When and where—not on this good Milwaukee beer.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not want any fight in my time. If I were sure the gentleman from Wisconsin would come back and the gentleman from Texas would stay there, it would be all right with me. [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, is it not about time we get to the point where Members address the Chair and that order is maintained so that we may discuss the bill that is before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. Gentlemen seeking recognition should address the Chair in asking the gentleman having the floor to yield.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I had permission to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the gentleman asked unanimous consent to proceed out of order, and the request was granted.

Mr. BLACK. Now, in regard to the farmers, when they came down to Washington they said that prohibition was the farmer's friend; but it turned out to be a boomerang for the farmer, because it put out of business two of his best friends, the brewer and the distiller. Since he has not received the checks from the brewer and the distiller, agriculture has been at a very low estate. If you pass the beer bill you have got the best remedy for agricultural conditions that you can possibly have.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. In answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], let me tell him that pure alcohol is 97 per cent; whisky, gin, rum, cognac, brandy, 47 to 51 per cent; light wines, red wines, champagne, 10 to 17 per cent; porter, ale, and stout, 4 to 6½ per cent; and beer, from one-half to 4 per cent, so the gentleman from New York is right.

Mr. BLANTON. And the more alcohol the beverage contains, the more the drinkers like it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the commissioners to carry out the provisions of existing law governing the collection and disposal of garbage, dead animals, night soil, and miscellaneous refuse and ashes in the District of Columbia, including inspection; fencing of public and private property designated by the commissioners as public dumps; and incidental expenses, $1,000,000, including not to exceed $25,000 for repair and improvement of the garbage-reduction plant, and there is further made available for the purposes of this paragraph not to exceed $72,500 of the unexpended balance of the similar appropriation for the fiscal year 1932: Provided, That any proceeds received from the disposal of city refuse or garbage shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in the manner provided by law: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not be available for collecting ashes or miscellaneous refuse from hotels and places of business or from apartment houses of four or more apartments in which the landlord furnishes heat to tenants.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to get some information as to the disposal of refuse. I notice that the committee has made rather a drastic cut in the recommendation of the budgetary officer. His estimate was $1,115,000, and they have cut it $115,000.

Mr. CANNON. That is because we are providing for the operation of incinerators. We have and are now dumping the refuse of the District and burning it; but we now have under construction two incinerators. It was expected they would be in service about the middle of the year, but we now find they can not be completed until about the 1st of December. It was necessary to provide for the disposal of the garbage between the 1st of July and December.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should have thought the budgetary office would have had that information when they prepared their estimates.

Mr. CANNON. The estimates were prepared last September, and it was impossible at that time to tell when they could be completed.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says that the new incinerators will not be in operation until December. This bill goes into effect on the 1st of July.

Mr. CANNON. That is true. We expected to have to appropriate for the entire fiscal year, but we now find it will be necessary to appropriate only for the period beginning December 1.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then next year, having incinerators, the amount for the fiscal year of 1934 will be less.

Mr. CANNON. It will cost $288,000 a year to dispose of the refuse when the incinerators go into service. Under the present method of operation it costs only $135,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the reason for the additional expenditure?

Mr. CANNON. It simply requires that much more money to man and operate the incinerators than it costs to dispose of the refuse at present. When we learned this, we immediately took steps to see if we could not defer construction of the incinerators, but it was too late. Contracts had already been let and construction had begun.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman takes the position that with one incinerator it would be more economical than with two?

Mr. CANNON. It is cheaper with two incinerators than one. We located them at strategic points, one in the Georgetown area and one in the Southeast area, and the saving is in transportation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the specific increased cost occasioned by the installation of two incinerators against one which the gentleman says will result in an increased expenditure of $153,000 a year?

Mr. CANNON. It costs very little more to operate two incinerators, but the principal item of expense is hauling. The trucks would have to make the haul across town with only one incinerator in operation; but by putting in two we eliminate the long haul and make a material saving.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman states that in the fiscal year 1934 the expense will be still greater, costing $288,000 as against $135,000, the present cost.

Mr. CANNON. That is true, and the longer we delay operation of the incinerators, the more money we save, and the sooner we start operating the incinerators the more money we must appropriate. The Budget Bureau, thinking we would put these incinerators into operation early in the fiscal year, provided for the expense of the entire fiscal year. It now develops they will not be ready until December 1, so that the additional expense from the beginning of the fiscal year to December 1 is thereby eliminated.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may be obtuse in this particular, but I can not follow the logic of the gentleman's argument. The gentleman says there will be a saving by reason of the shortening of the haul.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman misunderstands my statement. I did not say that there would be a saving over our present system. I say that there will be a saving with two incinerators over one incinerator.

Mr. STAFFORD. A saving in having two incinerators which will cost a greater amount to the District.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; it will cost $288,000 a year with two incinerators, and it will cost $135,000 under the present practice of burning on open dumps.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman uses the wrong word when he speaks of a saving.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman should have made his argument when the bill passed this House authorizing these incinerators. I have no doubt that he voted for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am trying to get clear the position of the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I will say frankly that if I were given the option I would not have these incinerators at all. I would continue the old system and save money, but the bill passed the House, and doubtless the gentleman supported it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not subscribe to that ancient stone-age policy and shall take the responsibility here, though I do not recall my vote, of subscribing to the modern method of incinerators rather than burning the stuff on public dumps.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's preference will entail an additional expense of $153,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the modern method, and I do not think we should impose the old method of public dumps on the District. I am in favor of the modern method.

Mr. CANNON. In this instance it will cost the taxpayers of the District exactly $153,000 additional every year to adopt the "modern" method.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the erection of a junior high school building on a site already purchased for that purpose at Nineteenth Street and Minnesota Avenue SE. in Anacostia, $225,000, and the commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building at a cost not to exceed $450,000.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In these distressful times it seems to me that too much loose talk is being put out to the public which serves no purpose other than to inflame the public mind and to lead the people to false conclusions. I did not vote for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation measure, yet I do not think that it is right when we are discussing the reduction of the public expenses for anyone to stand on this floor and say that we had $2,000,000,000 to give to the railroads, the life-insurance companies, and the banks, and that there was no economy needed then. That kind of talk can do nothing except deceive the American people and lead them to false conclusions because it is not true. I am under no personal obligation to defend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or that program, but I am under obligation to the people of the country to insist that they be not deceived. What are the facts? The Finance Corporation is loaning this money to these institutions and has loaned something like $400,000,000 so far. I have very serious doubts that we shall ever raise the $2,000,000,000. However, if the Government does advance the $500,000,000 of capital stock and the corporation raises the additional $1,500,000,000, it will doubtless be done by the sale of bonds on which the Government or the corporation pays something like 4 per cent, and, in turn, loans the money at 6 per cent.

Let us see what the effect is when we loan the money to the railroads, the banks, and the insurance companies. Is it exclusively for the benefit of the owners of those institutions? I do not think so. If we keep the railroads afloat, or an industry afloat, does not that maintain labor? If a railroad company can pay the interest upon its bonds to an insurance company that holds the bonds, it is not alone the insurance company that profits. That money redounds to the benefit of the people who own insurance policies. If the insurance companies do not realize on their investments and in turn fail in their obligations, the widows and orphans will not be able to collect on their insurance policies. In all fairness, it is not right for the people of the country to be given the false impression that Congress gave away $2,000,000,000, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as a justification for not reducing public expenditures or as a justification for increasing public expenses over $2,000,000,000; by that I refer to the payment of the remainder of the soldiers' adjusted-service certificates.

Above all, it is not right for that kind of information to go out from the floor of this House. Certainly we are under obligation to play the game squarely with the people of this country, and the first obligation of squareness is to give the truth to the people.

There is one other thing I want to discuss. We hear the advocates of the beer bill stand on the floor of this House and say that if we will tax beer it will bring in $600,000,000. Now, that is loose talk. It is for the purpose of leading the people of this country to believe they should turn to a beer tax to get out from under their tax burden at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. In just a moment, please.

Now, if it brought in $600,000,000, on the basis of 3 cents a pint, it would mean that the people of this country would have to consume, at the price of 15 cents per pint, $3,000,000,000 worth of beer, which is $25 per capita. In this time of distress if there is $3,000,000,000 taken away from the homes of this country for beer instead of for food and clothing, what, then, is our situation? In the first place, it was loose talk to say it would bring in $600,000,000, because I do not believe the people of this country would spend $3,000,000,000 for beer at this time; but if they could and if they would, what could we do here that would spread more despair and human suffering in this country than to divert $3,000,000,000 from groceries, clothing, furniture, school books, and other necessities to beer?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes; I will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have been interested in the gentleman's remarks, and I am sure the committee is interested in them. We realize, however, that we have a long bill ahead of us to complete to-day.

Mr. McGUGIN. I am through, but I should like to have time to extend the courtesy of answering my colleague's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. The admission of the prohibition enforcement officer is that there are 35,000,000 barrels of beer to-day being bootlegged, for which the Government gets no revenue whatsoever.

Mr. KELLER. Where does the gentleman get that information?

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means. The fact is also that the public pays 20 cents a glass for this bootleg beer. It is generally estimated that if we had legalized, nonintoxicating beer there would be 50,000,000 barrels sold. Three cents a pint would make $9 a barrel. That would equal $450,000,000 as a minimum. It is not taking money away from poor children or families. It is merely taking money away from the Capones, taking it away from unlawful channels, and placing it in the proper channels of the United States Treasury. That is the contention of those who believe seriously and sincerely that 2.75 per cent beer is not intoxicating.

Mr. McGUGIN. My answer to my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin, is that at least those who are buying the beer now are certainly not the same per cent of the poor, struggling class of people that there would be buying it if we undertook to legalize it and put it out on every street corner.

Mr. STAFFORD. We do not attempt to legalize it except where communities permit it. We do not say to you that your affairs will be regulated by the wet districts. We say that you should grant to us who want beer instead of vile whisky the privilege of drinking a nonintoxicating glass of beer.

Mr. McGUGIN. The gentleman will understand I did not arise to become embroiled in a prohibition argument. I only arose to straighten out the figures in the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, in fairness, we sincerely believe that there are 35,000,000 barrels of beer to-day being sold by wildcat, Capone interests, from which the Government gets no return, and that 50,000,000 barrels at $9 a barrel would yield the Government $450,000,000 in revenue.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course, I have never taken any part in this beer argument. I usually leave that part of the parliamentary situation to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and his colleague [Mr. SCHAFER], but with reference to the money, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to this fact, if every grain of wheat grown in America last year had been sold last night at the highest point reached on the market yesterday, and if every grain of corn grown in America last year had been sold last night at the highest point reached on the market yesterday, and if every lock of cotton grown in the United States last year had been sold last night at the highest point reached on the market yesterday, and all of it put together in one pile, it would have amounted to only $1,901,000,000. How in the world they are going to sell over $3,000,000,000 worth of beer in a country whose principal crops bring less than $2,000,000,000, is a mystery to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the preparation of plans and specifications for a new senior high school on a site to be acquired in the Reno section, including the employment of personal services, by contract or otherwise, and without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), or the classification act of 1923, as amended, $50,000.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask a question of the chairman of the subcommittee. On page 45, beginning with line 13 and ending at line 18, there is a paragraph providing for the appropriation of $50,000 for the drawing up of plans and specifications for the Reno High School. As a matter of fact, a site has not been acquired for the Reno High School, yet in the same approximate section of the city a site has already been acquired for the Manor Park High School. Since a site has been acquired for the Manor Park High School there must have been some urgent reason for the acquisition of that site and the early completion of the building on that site, yet that has been ignored by the superintendent of schools and $50,000 set aside instead for the drawing of plans and specifications for a building on a site not yet acquired. Will the chairman of the subcommittee please explain why the Manor Park High School has been stepped over, so to speak, and plans and specifications are going to be prepared for a building on a site not yet acquired?

Mr. CANNON. I appreciate the strength of the gentleman's suggestion; but, as he is doubtless aware, the committee is necessarily governed by the recommendations made by the school authorities and transmitted to the committee through the Budget Bureau on the recommendation of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. No recommendation came to us for any appropriation for the Manor Park High School.

We had no official information on the subject whatever. We received no estimate for such a project and acting on the recommendation of the school authorities, transmitted through the regular channels, we made this provision for the Reno School. As the gentleman understands, it is the policy of the committee and the policy of the House this year not to go outside the Budget.

Mr. ARENTZ. I understand the suggestion has been made that the plans that are to be drawn for the Reno School, as well as the specifications, might be applied to the Manor Park site.

Mr. CANNON. That would be highly desirable.

Mr. ARENTZ. But that can not be done without authorization, because the set-up in the District of Columbia, and I might say in the Federal Government, is such that a gesture could not even be made in that direction unless it should be pointed out in this bill that would be the thing to do. So I would say that if it is contemplated to use the plans and specifications of the Reno High School for the building to be erected on the Manor Park site something should be carried in the bill providing that this $50,000 shall be used for such purpose.

Mr. CANNON. If the matter had been officially called to the attention of the committee, we would have been glad to have passed upon it. But we have had no official information of any character on the project and were, of course, limited by the recommendation of the Budget, which did not include the item.

Mr. ARENTZ. The gentleman sees the force of my argument.

Mr. CANNON. I am impressed with the gentleman's statement. It is a matter of regret that his suggestion could not have been carried out.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOARD OF PUBLIC WELFARE

For personal services, $116,300.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There has been a great deal of concern in the District of Columbia since the District bill has been reported in reference to the welfare work. It is believed that the necessary appropriation to carry on the welfare work in the District is entirely eliminated from the bill. Assuming that there are sufficient funds under present appropriations to take care of the needs during the rest of the fiscal year, Congress will not be in session during the new fiscal year until December, and there is no immediate hope of conditions getting better and employment resumed within that time. Therefore it seems to me that it is rather dangerous economy to leave this fund depleted so that the District authorities would be helpless in affording the relief that may be necessary if economic conditions continue as bad as they are to-day. May I ask the chairman what he has in mind?

Mr. CANNON. I am much in sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman. The committee was anxious to make every necessary provision for such needs, and went into the matter exhaustively. In the first place, while the number of these to be provided for under the proposed item was estimated as high as 20,000, it was found upon investigation that the number was probably nearer 6,000, at least not in excess in any event of 12,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do those figures represent individuals or families?

Mr. CANNON. Individuals. We were also informed that 85 per cent of this number were made up largely of transients, drifters, and floaters who had been in the District less than six months; that a great many of them were, in fact, drawn to Washington by the rumor that easy money was to be obtained here and that a dole was practically in effect. Of the remaining 15 per cent, we found 5 per cent were professionals who had never been self-supporting and who had no intention of ever engaging in a gainful occupation of any character. That left a maximum of 10 per cent who had been in the District long enough to entitle them to consideration and who might possibly need assistance.

We were told there were sufficient opportunities for normal employment in the District to care for this 10 per cent without resorting to "made work" to be supplied by charity.

We found that the principal industry of the District, which is employment in the Government service, had supplied none of the recruits to the ranks of the unemployed; that there have been no dismissals from the Government service except in the exceptional cases of a few who were dismissed from temporary positions in the Census Bureau and who had been advised at the time they took the positions that they were temporary, and a few dismissals at the navy yard. Outside of these there is no appreciable number who had lost employment by dismissal from the Government service.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. We also found that in the amount of public construction, that is, in the number of buildings, roads, and other work in progress in the District of Columbia, the city of Washington ranks first of all the cities in the entire United States. So there is no particular occasion for an abnormal number of workmen engaged in the various trades and occupations required in such construction to be dismissed.

And, last, we discovered that there is on deposit in the banks of the District at this time, subject to check by these agencies asking for the appropriation of this fund, $2,200,000.

In order for the committee to act intelligently on this subject, we then asked those who appeared before us on behalf of this proposition to supply certain essential information. We first asked that the 65 activities to which are allocated appropriations from the community chest supply us with a statement of their overhead, with a list of their personnel, and the amount of salaries paid.

We made this request on March 21, and up to the time the hearings were closed, which was about April 7, or thereafter, only 6 of the 65 charitable organizations in the District had reported. Some, in fact, intimated it was none of our business and told us they would not supply the information. Since the time the bill was closed, after nearly three weeks, we received some sixteen more reports and three came in the morning mail. The rest of the 65 have not reported.

In addition to this, we asked the community chest to give us a list of its contributors; and in order that the request might not be burdensome, we asked for only those who had contributed in excess of $25 to the community chest. They refused this information.

The committee took the position that the purpose of hearings before the committees of the House is to secure information, and unless they gave such information committees are not in a position to pass intelligently upon the subject under consideration; and inasmuch as the information requested has not yet been received, and inasmuch as they have on deposit at this time, subject to check, $2,200,000, the committee was unable to find grounds on which to base a conclusion justifying an appropriation of this character.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman says is almost an unanswerable statement on organized charity. We are not concerned with that. Whether the community chest is well managed in the city of Washington, as legislators we are not particularly concerned with that. If they are paying excessively high salaries, again we are not concerned with that, because it is composed entirely of private institutions. These 65 organizations the gentleman referred to are private institutions, but we are concerned with the 626 little children belonging to 174 families that are destitute and were destitute on February 29 of this year, according to the hearings, who need this help and this assistance.

It seems to me the very reasons given by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], that although there is a fund of $2,000,000, and the custodians of the fund will not respond and will not cooperate—that strikes me as an additional reason why we should appropriate and have the funds necessary to take care of destitute and needy families.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, may I now ask that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] have five minutes, because the gentleman took most of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So what we are concerned with is that all residents of the District of Columbia who may be in need or who may be destitute be properly cared for. We are not concerned with the transient bum, we are not concerned with the loafer; but I say that if a man or woman or child—I do not care where he comes from—is here in the Capital, or is in my city, or is any place in the United States, and is honest, is willing to work and can not find work, I say it is the highest function of government to take care of that man and his family.

We should not abandon it, even if private organizations will not cooperate with Congress. Even that is not a justification for us to neglect them.

Now, the gentleman refers to the $2,000,000 fund; the gentleman knows it is divisible among 65 organizations. Some of these organizations serve a social purpose; others in educational work; but many of them are not engaged in giving direct relief.

What I am appealing for, and what I want the assurance of the gentleman from Missouri, in charge of the bill, is this—we are sitting here as a board of aldermen for the city of Washington—I want the assurance that after we adjourn, if there are destitute families and children in the District of Columbia before we come back, that at some place there will be sufficient public funds to take care of those families in the meantime.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the $600,000 eliminated for the preservation and assistance of these families?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Eliminated entirely.

Mr. CANNON. The position of the gentleman from New York is well taken. It would be a reproach to the city and the Congress if a single child in the District were to go hungry. I will say to the gentleman that the bill makes ample provision for any such case as that to which the gentleman refers. If the gentleman will look at page 912 of the hearings, he will find a schedule of the amounts which the District has paid and is paying. We have a fund from which we have been allocating as high at $133 per month per family, and if the gentleman will look at page 34 of the report he will find that in this bill we provide a fund for the very purpose to which he refers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; that is in the bill. Does the gentleman assure us that that is sufficient to take care and relieve all anticipated family relief which may come up until we get back here next December?

Mr. CANNON. We have been providing these payments for many sessions, and, basing our conclusions on the experience of years and the recommendation of those who administer such funds, we are convinced that every child will be amply provided for.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I would like to get some more information from the chairman of the subcommittee. We have a community chest in Washington. How much was collected this year?

Mr. CANNON. Two million four hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. McCORMACK. How much was appropriated from the public funds for the purpose of assisting deserving families in the District?

Mr. CANNON. In round numbers about $400,000 last year.

Mr. McCORMACK. How much for the next fiscal year?

Mr. CANNON. Approximately $380,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. I presume if the demand increases that provision can be made in a deficiency bill?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. There is no occasion for any child in the District of Columbia to want either food or clothing.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am glad to hear the chairman say that. I knew that he would. It will be interesting to the people of Washington. I myself come from Massachusetts. I come from Boston, a big metropolitan city. It is distasteful to me, as I know it is to other Members of the House, to feel that we must legislate for the people, either in the District of Columbia or the city of Washington.

From the angle of appropriating money for this purpose, we are appropriating it for the people of Washington. We are in the position of the city council of a city appropriating money from the Public Treasury for this deserving purpose. I would dislike very much to have it known throughout the country that the Congress of the United States in its capacity of the legislative body for this city failed to make an appropriation which would take care of our deserving distressed, of performing this responsible duty. In the city of Boston we have a population in excess of 800,000 people. Our metropolitan area comprises a little over 2,000,000 persons. Last year the city of Boston alone appropriated and expended approximately $7,000,000 for this particular purpose. Under normal conditions we would appropriate and spend about $1,500,000.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's city is an industrial city?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And for that reason has felt the depression keenly there through lack of employment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman appreciates the fact that Washington is not an industrial city. Beyond the normal turnover, none of those who are employed here have been deprived of their usual means of livelihood. The gentleman has taken these circumstances into consideration?

Mr. McCORMACK. I hope the gentleman from Missouri does not construe my remarks as any criticism, because the gentleman has frankly stated that so far as his committee and the Congress are concerned, the people of Washington who are in need, either now or in the future, will be taken care of. I am not making any remarks in criticism, but, on the contrary, they are by way of compliment. I am referring to the condition in Boston which must exist throughout the entire country and the fact that in these days of distress there is a responsibility vested in government, State, Federal, or local, to do everything within its power, and that takes into consideration the character of the locality with reference to industry, whether it is rural or urban, and the ability of the people to pay taxes, to do something for deserving families affected by the present conditions. In a general way it has the responsibility to do everything within its power to assist deserving individuals and families. I am glad to hear from the chairman of the subcommittee that, so far as Washington is concerned, that principle will apply not only in theory but also in practice. My purpose was to have specifically inserted in the RECORD evidence which will be conveyed to the people of Washington that the Congress will not only during the current year but during the coming fiscal year perform its duty in this respect. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For groceries, provisions, light, fuel, soap, oil, lamps, candles, clothing, shoes, forage, horseshoeing, medicines, medical attendance, transportation, labor, sewing machines, fixtures, books, magazines, and other supplies which represent greater educational advantages, stationery, horses, vehicles, harness, cows, pigs, fowls, sheds, fences, repairs, typewriting, stenography, and other necessary items, and including compensation not exceeding $1,500 for additional labor or services, for identifying and pursuing escaped inmates and for rewards for their capture, for transportation and other necessary expenses incident to securing suitable homes for paroled or discharged girls, and for maintenance of nonpassenger-carrying motor vehicles, $34,180.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last line. Since the House is talking economy in many ways, I think it might be well to call attention to what it costs to have the hearings in the various committees of the House and Senate each year. It might interest gentlemen here to know that the hearings in the last session of Congress—I mean in the last fiscal year—cost $604,654.05. Dividing it up it runs, for the Senate, $287,674.97, and for the House of Representatives $316,979.08. It is not pleasant to talk to ourselves about our own little petty extravagances, but we have to do that in our own families, around our own dinner tables, and wherever these matters are brought up where we have to pay the bills. I can figure what the hearings cost more or less by the number of pages in the hearing and the character of pages. It might interest gentlemen to know that a page of running reading matter in this book of hearings on the District of Columbia appropriation bill cost a minimum of $5.22 for the printing. Pages that have more or less tabular matter on them cost in the neighborhood of $12, and heavy tables that have lines up and down both ways, justified in various measures, cost $21 each. I have sat in many committee hearings, and I have seen Members talk long and earnestly and ask many questions in order to arrive at one small answer. I have seen very many big documents put into hearings, and I have seen them put in at forty and odd dollars a crack without knowing the cost. I am not petty with my own committee, but I have kept out many documents that might just as well be kept out, because of the cost. I have an idea there is not a man in the House who has the slightest notion of what this book of hearings cost to print. I am not picking out this particular one for any particular reason. I should have made this talk in debate on the legislative appropriation bill the other day, but the House got into such a furore over various economic plans that it seemed rather futile for me to get up and talk about a matter of this kind. Looking at this book of hearings I figured myself by the pages to see that if the rules I have given you would run true, and they do. I asked the Public Printer to tell me what it cost to produce this book.

Mr. KELLER. Tell us what the book is.

Mr. HARDY. It is the book of hearings before the District of Columbia Subcommittee on Appropriations on the bill now under consideration. The Public Printer tells me that this book cost for the printing $8,182.29, but that is not all. We have a high-powered force of reporters for this establishment, who do not get too much money, but who do have to charge what it costs to do that sort of work.

The stenographic report of committee hearings costs from $1 to $1.50 per printed page. I have that from the people who have that work in hand. So we can figure that the running pages of reading matter in 10-point type costs not less than $6.50 to $7 a page, and the heavy tables cost from $12 to $22 a page, making up the expense of this book very fast.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. How many in an edition?

Mr. HARDY. A thousand copies may be ordered, but 500 is usually enough. I leave it to you; how many of you ever get a copy of the House or Senate hearings to study? How can we economize on it? We could economize if those who have to do with the production of the books would edit them more. In some of the committees which I have attended it has sometimes required two pages to find out what the Member was asking the expert about. We could save some money by cutting out a lot of reports and figures that not many people read and not many people can understand. A lot of pages are made up of conversations that could well be left out or abbreviated. Communications from the outside could often be left out or briefed. I am quite sure that if some of the committee hearings were cut down to half the number of pages the Congress or the country would not suffer.

I am not talking of Appropriations Committee hearings alone. Many of the committees produce voluminous books of their hearings, and put all together they cost a lot of money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I am glad the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HARDY] has called attention to this subject. I have been contending for several years that the printing of these hearings should be either entirely eliminated or very much reduced. As a members of this committee for several years, I have urged that much of the hearings be not printed and that the printing of hearings be curtailed. This year I urged every member of the committee to revise his remarks and eliminate all that was not essential. But here is the situation: The beneficiaries of this bill are in close proximity to the Capitol. They are right here on our doorstep. They insist on being heard. When we call attention to the fact that we are restricted by directions from the House and by the restrictions imposed by the Bureau of the Budget and that we can not under any circumstances grant their request, however much we may desire to do so, they still insist that they should be heard. When we suggested it is useless they say in effect, "You are spending our money and you are unwilling even to hear us; to permit us to present the merits of our case." We have no choice but to hear them. That accounts for no small part of the hearings on every District of Columbia bill. In reports of hearings on routine matters I personally went through the reporter's notes and arbitrarily eliminated a great deal of matter. Frequently we proceeded for hours off the record in order to economize in this respect. We made every effort to hold the reported hearing within bounds. But, Mr. Chairman, it has always been my contention—and I am convinced of it more as time goes by—that we could get along without printing a large part of these hearings. Any man who has an important statement to make or important statistics to submit for the attention of the committee could submit such matter for printing, and the salient points of supplementary testimony could be preserved by the members of the committee in notes. I see no imperative need for printing everything that is said, especially when some of it goes far afield and is not especially material.

Of course, there is a demand for some of the hearings, and that is true of the hearings on the District of Columbia bill, in which there is a great deal of local interest. But I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the committee having charge of the legislative bill will look into the matter and give some attention to the possibility of adopting some arrangement whereby we can substitute the printing of brief, concise statements instead of the voluminous reports of everything said during the hearings. Undoubtedly it would result in a material reduction in expenditure.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am in perfect sympathy with the gentleman in his remarks about economies in the printing bill. I can not agree with the gentleman, however, that no hearings be printed at all. It is possible they might be reduced, but has the gentleman looked into the question of the divers and sundry publications which the departments issue every year and almost unlimited number of these pamphlets on various subjects that fall into the wastebaskets and garbage cans? Has the gentleman thought along that line? Some committees, of which I have been a member, have been giving special attention to these numerous publications which the different departments, the War Department and the various other departments, have issued, many of which are useless. Perhaps 20 copies will be circulated and a thousand or more will be printed. They ultimately find their way into the garbage can and the wastebaskets. Has the gentleman thought along that line about reducing expenditures?

Mr. CANNON. I am familiar with the character of document to which the gentleman refers. There are tons of them flowing from the presses which no one but the proofreader ever reads. You can go to the vaults under the Capitol and find acres of them which must eventually be sold as waste paper. I believe there is no place where we can practice economy to more effect than in restricting the volume of publications which we are turning out every year in an ever-increasing stream.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Could we not decide first to eliminate as much as we could from the hearings and then not have so many copies printed?

Mr. CANNON. The number of copies printed is very small. Only 500 copies are printed, as a rule.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. What is the use of having 500? We probably would not use 100.

Mr. CANNON. It costs about as much to print 500 as it does to print 100. The great cost of printing is in the reporter's notes and in the composition and press work.

Practically the only difference in the cost of printing 1 copy and 500 copies is the amount of paper and ink used, and those costs are inconsiderable items in the total expense of publication. The remedy is to restrict the printed hearing to the essentials.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. There is a great deal in what the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman from Missouri have said, if we were a Nation of illiterates and we had a dictatorship form of government.

The committee work and the hearings did not arbitrarily spring up overnight, but, as the gentleman from Missouri knows—because he is one of our best authorities on parliamentary history—the committee work developed gradually, and with the committee work public hearings developed. Then the hearings were made matters of public record.

The gentleman from Missouri, who has written volumes on the parliamentary history of this body, knows that there was a time when no one in the House knew anything about a bill but the appointed chairman of a particular committee, and he was appointed by the Speaker. I am sure the gentleman will bear me out in that. Sometimes a committee held hearings and sometimes it did not. Then a change was brought about through the protests of the American people, and committees were formed. Then the House took that power of appointment away from the Speaker. Star-chamber proceedings were abolished and public hearings established.

Any student of legislation knows that the history, purposes, and basis of a bill proposing appropriations or legislations are meaningless unless one has access to the information upon which the appropriations or the legislation are based.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Do not think for a single minute that I propose doing away with hearings. I am merely suggesting that perhaps 600 or 700 pages would answer instead of 1,200 pages.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is quite true.

Mr. HARDY. Do not think for a minute that anybody proposes doing away with hearings.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am glad the gentleman stated that, because I think it clarifies the situation.

It has been suggested that people have a desire to appear before a committee. Is not that a fine thing, that an American citizen knows he has the right and the privilege of appearing before a legislative committee and have his day there for or against the proposition then under consideration?

I have not yet lost hope in a representative form of government. Of course, under our form of government it is natural that there should be waste and lost motion, but I say that the most inefficient, wasteful self-government is worth more than the most efficient dictatorship, whether it is by a person or by a group of people.

Mr. HOLADAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. HOLADAY. I think here is the embarrassing position in which the committee finds itself: The committee, of course, wants to be fair with the membership of the House and bring the House the information, but in connection with all of these bills we have extended conversations back and forth over some particular item. We go out and spend several days looking at various projects, and it is simply a question of how much we can cut out in order to save money and still be fair with the House and give to the gentleman and other Members of the House the information which they should have.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I simply wanted to have it made clear that there was no suggestion that hearings should be abolished, that there should be anything in place of public hearings, and that there should be a record of the hearings accessible to the Members and to the public.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the gentleman knows, the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations are not public. The hearings are withheld from the membership of the House until the bill is reported, and then only are they made public.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit further, I think the fault lies largely with the chairman of the committee—at least, that is my experience—in permitting the members of the committee to run wild in asking irrelevant questions and putting arguments in the hearings rather than facts. If the chairman of a committee would hold down the members, the hearings would not be so voluminous, but, of course, the chairman of a committee sometimes, late in the day, becomes fatigued and he does not like to take the position of suppressing the members of the committee.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will permit, I do not want him to think I am speaking only of the Appropriations Committee hearings, because the hearings of the Appropriations Committee represent only a small part of the hearings which are printed for all other committees of the Senate and House. The Appropriations Committee hearings are the smallest in the Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Committee on Appropriations hearings are the largest and contain more detailed matter than hearings before other committees, which are considering substantive legislation.

Mr. HARDY. The hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means certainly take up a lot of volumes on tariff and tax measures.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I say that the printing of hearings is the only access the general public has to all the information upon which legislation is based. These hearings are historically useful; they are useful to students of government; they are useful to historians, and it would be absolutely impossible, to my way of thinking, for this House to intelligently function without them. I am sure the gentleman from Wisconsin could not get along without them in carrying on the excellent work he does on the floor.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON. The remarks of the gentleman from New York are quite pertinent, as the remarks of the gentleman always are. Anyone who desires to appear before the committee should have the right to be heard. To deny them a hearing is to deny the right of petition, a fundamental principle under our form of government. But that right does not necessarily involve the printing of such hearings. Concise statements of the information which it is desired to call to the attention of the committees of the House would suffice and could be printed at greatly reduced costs.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. And in connection with my request, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert therein some tables which I have prepared with reference to Government appropriations for the years 1927 and 1932.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the last few weeks to see the trend that has been developing here in the House of Representatives along the line of economy. I believe we are coming more and more to the point where we realize it is absolutely necessary, if we are to do our part toward bringing back America to prosperity, that we cut down our appropriations and our estimates to the point where we can in some way or other balance the Budget. [Applause.]

The other day I received from a constituent a copy of a letter which was sent out by the Du Pont Co. containing an analysis of appropriations for the year 1927 and for the year 1932. It struck me at once as a rather terrific indictment of what had been done in the last year or so with reference to appropriations. So I decided to investigate it, and I prepared a statement of the Budget appropriations for the year 1927 and the year 1932.

The statement that the Du Pont Co. sent out is quite inaccurate, as a comparison of it with the actual figures will show; nevertheless the truth is astounding.

The following statement is, I believe, correct:

Budget appropriations

	1927	1932
Legislative	$17,834,919.57	$28,490,541.00
Veterans' Bureau	462,965,000.00	[1] 994,312,853.00
Other independent offices	58,084,936.64	[2] 199,010,545.00
Agriculture	139,635,823.00	[3] 301,543,130.00
Commerce	30,632,847.00	54,439,295.00
Interior	[4] 252,962,318.00	85,787,556.00
Justice	25,628,707.00	[4] 51,506,027.00
Labor	9,561,305.00	[5] 15,454,200.00
Navy	322,061,975.00	[6] 360,101,593.00
Post Office	738,805,303.00	[7] 843,083,777.00
State	17,357,002.64	18,571,806.00
Treasury	176,637,465.63	[8] 287,563,287.00
War	354,345,801.15	[9] 460,078,650.00
District of Columbia	36,532,128.00	49,072,888.00
	2,643,045,591.64	3,748,966,143.00
Retirement of public debt:
Principal	569,981,804.84	411,946,300.00
Interest	785,000,000.00	605,000,000.00
Total	3,998,027,396.48	4,765,912,448.00

[1] Veterans' Bureau appropriation for 1932 includes $222,000,000 of Army and Navy pensions, which was included in Interior Department bill in 1927 in sum of $192,000,000. The 1927 appropriation included $112,000,000 on account of the bonus. In 1931 we appropriated $425,000,000, but in 1932 there was no appropriation until February, 1932, when $203,000,000 was added but is not included above. Also included about $30,000,000 for hospital construction.

[2] Includes $100,000,000 for Farm Board in 1932.

[3] Includes $175,000,000 for Federal aid for highways as against $75,000,000 in 1927.

[4] Increase in Department of Justice is due to $11,369,000 for prohibition enforcement and $14,028,000 for prisons.

[5] Increase due to cost of Immigration and Employment Services.

[6] Increase due to cruiser, submarine, and destroyer tonnage and increases in pay.

[7] Increase due to increase in pay and allowances and the Saturday half holiday. The increase in the Post Office deficit in 1932 was due in part to the smaller amount of business the Post Office Department did.

[8] Includes $109,000,000 for buildings.

[9] Includes about $90,000,000 increase for rivers and harbors and flood control and about $12,000,000 for construction of barracks and quarters.

There has been appropriated since the passage of the deficiency bill:

Reconstruction Finance Corporation	$500,000,000
Federal land banks	125,000,000
Veterans' loans	203,925,000
Employment service	120,000
Geneva conference	300,000

For the year 1927 our annual appropriations were $3,998,000,000. For the year 1932 our annual appropriations so far and without including some large special appropriations like the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, of $500,000,000, the Federal land bank appropriation of $125,000,000, and veterans' loans of $203,000,000, run to $4,765,000,000, or $800,000,000 above what was appropriated in 1927. This is an increase of 20 per cent, while the Du Pont Co. represents an increase of 63 per cent.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HARLAN. Is it not true that in 1927 the expenses were very much less than they have been for two or three years prior to that time and that following 1927, in 1930, 1931, and 1932, we have had the expense of the Federal Farm Board, which in 1931 accounted for $190,000,000, and we have also had a great deal of additional expense growing out of the insurance for veterans in the last two years, which we did not have in 1927, and that ought not really to be considered in any comparison with 1927.

Mr. TABER. To a certain extent that is true, although the appropriations for 1927 were not markedly less than they had been before, but they have been markedly more since 1928.

It is true that in 1931 we had $190,000,000 for the Farm Board and in 1932 we had $100,000,000. In 1932 we had an additional $100,000,000 for Federal aid for highways. In 1932 we had $109,000,000 for buildings under the Treasury Department in the District of Columbia and outside the District. In 1932 we had an increase over 1927 of about $90,000,000 for rivers and harbors and flood control, and about $12,000,000 for the construction of barracks at various Army posts, and in 1932 we also had approximately $30,000,000 for veterans' hospitals.

Mr. HARLAN. If the gentleman will permit, I am not disagreeing with the gentleman at all, but in fairness to the record, the point I make is that I do not believe this Congress, or the Congress that preceded this Congress, so far as that is concerned, ought to be charged with such expenses as the Federal Farm Board and the building projects that are not a part of Government expense. The point is that the public gets the idea that Congress is spending this money to operate the Government, when it is a special expenditure, very largely.

Mr. TABER. We made the appropriations; and if we had not made the appropriations, the money would not have been spent.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. Has the gentleman any tables showing the ordinary expenses of the Government for 1927 and 1929?

Mr. TABER. Not with me, so that I can give exact figures; no.

Mr. FIESINGER. The gentleman's tables do include a great many expenses that are not usual and ordinary, I take it?

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes; there is no question about that.

Mr. FIESINGER. The appropriations for 1932 were recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, were they not?

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes; there is no question about that.

Mr. FIESINGER. And the Budget Bureau is under the President of the United States?

Mr. TABER. Absolutely.

Mr. THATCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. THATCHER. Of course, the Budget recommendations were based on authorizations of the Congress in the first instance?

Mr. TABER. Oh, always.

Mr. THATCHER. In regard to the building program, any fair picture of expenditures would have to have brought into it the fact that the money that has been expended for building purposes has been in the nature of a capital investment, saving rents and creating buildings for public service.

Mr. TABER. Well, I do not think there is much to the saving-of-rents proposition, because almost always it means increased overhead and increased expense when you build a new public building.

It is true that it is a capital investment and a fine thing for us to have the public buildings; but, at the same time, the expenditures for public buildings and for all these different special projects were for projects that got us into a spending spree which was exactly like other operations that private individuals were indulging in all through the country, and could not come to anything but the same kind of result—that is, a bankrupt Treasury and trouble.

I have fought as hard as I could ever since I have been here to keep down expenditures all along these lines. I appreciate that Congress in making these appropriations was following what the people wanted done. It has been the same thing that has brought our cities, our States, and our own Government where we can not find money enough to pay the expenses.

Mr. THATCHER. I concur in the general observation of the gentleman, but the point I was trying to make is that the building program represented the needs of the Government.

Mr. TABER. In some places.

Mr. ARENTZ. What amount does the gentleman figure will be sufficient for the operation of the Government after fixed charges, recurring items, and so forth, are deducted from the sum total?

Mr. TABER. We can decrease the amount carried in the current bills for 1932 by almost a billion dollars.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman conclude in that time?

Mr. TABER. I will.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ARENTZ. Under the date of February 24 the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] extended his remarks in the RECORD, and he there stated that the total expenditure under these heads: War debt retirements, $496,000,000—you can not touch that; pensions and hospitals—you can not touch that; national defense—you can not touch that, except to a quite limited extent, not an appreciable sum.

Mr. TABER. You can make some reductions in every department.

Mr. ARENTZ. And all that amounts to $2,834,000,000, and that leaves $1,108,514,562 as the actual cost of the following items, to wit:

1. Public improvements	$356,039,615
2. General functions and administration	154,178,133
3. Civil functions	220,467,673
4. Promotion and regulation	201,327,541
5. Postal deficiency	155,000,000
6. All other costs	21,501,600
	1,108,514,562

Mr. TABER. I think there are places all along the line where you can save money.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield? Why should we worry about cutting down salaries of Government employees; why should we worry about cutting down appropriations; why do not we start the presses at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and issue paper money and get rid of all this trouble? [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Of course, the gentleman is speaking facetiously; but there is always a day of reckoning coming, and that day always comes a great deal quicker than you expect it to. That day has come now, and we are at the point where we have got to trim our sails and get right down to rock-bottom.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HORR. I would like to know whether or not this suggested economy struck the gentleman from Kansas before we made the appropriations for the agricultural bill? May I ask the gentleman from New York whether or not he thinks this Congress should decrease the appropriation for the war-debt retirement, the war-debt interest, pensions and hospitals, all the results of war, before we met in this session, and which approximates more than two and a half billion dollars?

Mr. TABER. The Congress must raise money to meet expenditures that are necessary; that is our job.

The expenditures for the items the gentleman has referred to do not run to anything like the amount he has stated.

We are faced with a couple of big propositions that are coming along pretty soon. One of them is the bonus. Are we going to be patriotic enough, are we going to be big enough to look at that situation as it is and meet it face to face? The bonus bill was passed in the spring of 1924 over the veto of President Coolidge. At that time it provided that certain sums should be paid to veterans. That sum, with compound interest upon it at 4 per cent from the date of the passage of the bill to some time about 1945, came to a little better than $4,000,000,000. The present value of it, as it was passed, is supposed to be about $2,200,000,000. We have already, halfway to the post, halfway to the due date, increased the loan value of the certificates up to half and a little better of what those certificates are due to draw at maturity. There is no legal or moral obligation on us to go any further except to meet those certificates when they are due in 1945.

The country can not stand it if we go into it at this time. It means inflation of currency to the tune of two and a half billion dollars. That means that we go off the gold standard, and as a result the value of the dollar goes down, the pay of every Federal employee automatically as a result will be cut from 30 to 40 to 50 per cent. We would pay our debts with the depreciated currency. Why can not we do just as the strong, true-hearted, patriotic commander of the American Legion and his forces have done—take the patriotic position and say that we will meet our responsibilities and that we will not do more than that. We must not pass the bonus bill!

We have another proposition to meet that is coming in in a day or two. We have this question of salaries. I do not like to see my salary cut; I do not like to see the other fellow's salary cut; but industry has taken a terrific cut. We are a favored group. We have got to carry our share of the load and, whether it be by a cut or by a furlough, we in the Federal Government service have to patriotically meet this emergency and do our part toward carrying the load. I hope that when the membership comes to vote upon this proposition they will think of the great, strong interest which we must have and will think of that interest which the folks back home have in seeing the country balance its Budget and put on a stable basis. You say that you will crowd men out of employment. I tell you that if you will balance your Budget and stop making appropriations and putting on taxes which the people can not bear, you will do more than in any other way to set the wheels of industry turning and put millions and millions of men to work. Let us meet these problems in that fashion and go before the public with a record of which we can be proud, a constructive record, one that will help to put this country back on its feet.

The Clerk read as follows:

For beginning construction at Gallinger Municipal Hospital of an additional ward building for contagious diseases, $250,000, of which amount not to exceed $2,500 shall be available for the employment of expert consulting services, by contract or otherwise, and without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), or the classification act of 1923, as amended, and the commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building at a cost not to exceed $600,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. On Monday last when bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia were under consideration, a bill authorizing Gallinger Hospital to receive pay patients who have contracted contagious diseases was passed. The report stated that Providence Hospital and Garfield Hospital, at least Providence, were indisposed to continue contractual relations of receiving hereafter patients with contagious diseases. Is it the policy of the District to maintain municipal hospitals for the benefit of patients who can pay or solely for those who are indigent? I took the position then that generally throughout the country municipalities did not maintain their municipal hospitals for the benefit of those who can afford to patronize private hospitals. Municipal hospitals are primarily for the benefit of the indigent. What is the policy of the committee and what is the reason for the committee in recommending here an authorization for the construction of a ward for contagious diseases at $600,000?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is an appropriation providing for the care of patients who have contracted contagious diseases and who contribute nothing to the cost of their treatment. It is entirely gratuitous upon the part of the District. Treatment is supplied not only for the benefit of the patients themselves but for the protection of the general health and welfare of the District at large.

Mr. STAFFORD. But we passed through the House on the recommendation of the District Commissioners authorization that this hospital shall receive pay patients. I dissented from that position and thought it was an ill-advised policy. I am wondering whether that is the established policy of the District Commissioners as to these municipal hospitals.

Mr. CANNON. Formerly there were several hospitals in the city which received patients afflicted with contagious diseases. They had their isolation wards and received all indigent patients assigned by the District health authorities. But one by one they have refused to receive this character of patients until now there is no hospital in the city with the exception of the one designated in the bill which will receive such cases under any circumstances. We are in a rather precarious situation. If a contagion should sweep through the city, there is no other hospital to which we could send such patients; and if this particular hospital should adopt the policy followed by the other hospitals of the city and should refuse to receive them, it would precipitate a serious situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made a strong claim for the need of a municipally owned contagious hospital. I am in thorough sympathy with the gentleman's position. May I inquire whether the private hospitals absolutely refuse to receive pay patients with contagious diseases in the District?

Mr. CANNON. I am not informed as to that, but I know they advise us they can not longer accept patients of this character.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who have heretofore been taken care of under a contract arrangement with the District Commissioners?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall, the report on the bill recommended that Gallinger Hospital shall receive pay patients, and I am wondering whether the private hospitals are absolutely refusing to receive that character of patients who could afford to pay.

Mr. CANNON. As the gentleman will note, the contracts with hospitals, to which the gentleman refers, can not be renewed for the next fiscal year. The facilities at Garfield are inadequate to care for such cases, even under normal circumstances; and if we should have a general epidemic, we would be wholly unable to care for them. This is the last resort. We have no choice in the matter. We must make provision for these patients. The board of commissioners advises us that of all the items in the bill this is the most imperative.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall from the report referred to on the bill reported by the District of Columbia Committee, the present accommodations at Gallinger Municipal Hospital for contagious diseases are now in a wooden building, and this appropriation is for the purpose of creating a permanent ward. I am in sympathy with the policy, though I do not think it advisable to create hospital facilities for those residents of the District of Columbia who can afford to pay and find accommodations in the private hospitals.

Mr. CANNON. I agree with the gentleman, but this is a situation where there is no alternative.

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as the indigent patients are concerned, there is no alternative?

Mr. CANNON. None has been called to our attention.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. I am very much interested in the subject of hospitalization, and I very much agree with the chairman of the committee. Many times in municipal hospitals it is of advantage to have pay patients, because through the receipts from those patients they are able to give to those who can not afford to pay, a greater and better service, because of the circumstance which gives an opportunity to have private patients.

In relation to contagious diseases, generally speaking, I do not think you will find any general hospital that is willing to take cases of scarlet fever or diphtheria or smallpox and bring them into the general hospital where there are other patients. It is a detriment to the institution to continue to bring contagious diseases into a general hospital.

Mr. STAFFORD. I might take occasion, just for a moment, to say that as a member of the Board of Visitors to West Point last March the one most pressing need for hospitalization there, which was brought to our attention, was the provision for a contagious-disease hospital. If any epidemic should ever break out at the academy, there would be no accommodations whatsoever for taking care of that condition.

Gen. William R. Smith, superintendent of the academy, who is about to retire after an illustrious service in the Army, stressed the need of having a separate isolation hospital to meet that possible contingency. They have only a small ward for contagious diseases which might break out incidentally; but if there was an epidemic, the military authorities would not have any accommodations whatsoever to meet that condition.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In expending the foregoing sum the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia is authorized to advance to the Director of Public Welfare, upon requisitions previously approved by the auditor of the District of Columbia, and upon such security as the commissioners may require of said director, sums of money not exceeding $300 at one time, to be used only for deportation of nonresident insane persons, and to be accounted for monthly on itemized vouchers to the accounting officer of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, last evening, when there were about 25 Members in the committee, and after most of us had understood that the day was to be devoted to general debate, and that there would be no reading of the bill, an amendment was passed to the appropriation for the Utilities Commission providing that no part of the money for the Utilities Commission should be devoted to the enforcement of an ordinance regulating taxicabs in the District of Columbia.

There is no question but that some time ago there was a tremendous abuse of the taxicab situation in the District of Columbia before the present zoning arrangement was effected. A stranger coming to this town was robbed at our Union Station, and things were generally bad; but I submit that the conditions that are present now are almost as bad as they were before, and that the ordinance that is now prepared and which the courts have universally approved will cure a great many of our present evils. It seems to me a very cowardly and unusual way, an inadvisable way, for us to attack this problem as we did yesterday in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. There has not been a single committee of this House or the Senate which has considered this question. The Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia has spent a great deal of time taking evidence on this question. The matter has been heard fully in our courts in the District of Columbia, and the ordinance not only supported but approved in every respect by those men who have given it their attention; and yet we, without any consideration of the facts, pass a law, not repealing the ordinance, but tying the hands of the Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia so that that ordinance can not be enforced.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. For a question; yes.

Mr. HORR. Yesterday the same thing the gentleman is talking about was brought to our attention, but it was presented in a different light. I ask the gentleman whether the court passed upon the merits of the question or the legality of it?

Mr. HARLAN. The court passed upon the merits of the question, and I shall read a portion of the decision of Justice Adkins.

The situation as it exists in the District of Columbia is that strangers coming into this town under the present zone system can be taxed every time they go in and out of one zone into another. They can be charged 20 cents for riding a half mile; they can be charged 60 cents for riding a mile and a half if they happen to go in the wrong direction; and they can ride 7 miles in another direction for 20 cents. The result is, as the evidence shows, that there are on an average 21 complaints a week for a breach of the peace occurring over controversies arising out of our absurd system of operating taxicabs in this town.

The commission tried to adopt a sane zone system. They spent a great deal of time in trying to do that, and they took lots of evidence. At those hearings it developed that some of these taxi drivers were operating 20 hours a day; that a number of them were operating 18 hours a day; and that a large number were operating 14 hours a day in an attempt to make a living.

In 1931—which was the year in which this 20-cent arrangement was in full force—there were 1,750 accidents.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman realizes that while we are very much interested in this subject, it has been disposed of and no action can be taken except by unanimous consent. In view of this fact, may I inquire if the gentleman expects to conclude his remarks within the five minutes?

Mr. HARLAN. I will.

Mr. CANNON. I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. These men get these taxicabs and pay $4 a day for them. They have to sign a finely printed contract, and there are a great many conditions involved in those contracts. If they so much as vary a word from the conditions contained in the contract they lose their job, or if they do not operate as many hours as the owner of the taxicab thinks ought to be advisable they lose their job. So no wonder they are operating hours which no utility commission would allow. A utility commission would not allow a man to whom is intrusted the life and safety of passengers to operate those long hours.

The men who spoke here yesterday against the proposed taxicab ordinance, which the court has sustained, did so on the plea of giving labor a chance. Here is what Justice Adkins in his opinion says on that proposition:

> In my judgment, the zone system has been possible only through the exploitation of labor. Under this system the owner furnishes a new car to the driver at a rental paid each day. Men are compelled to work from 12 to 16 hours daily or be supplanted by some one else.

That was the evidence before the court, and yet we in this House with no evidence passed in an amendment to an appropriation bill a general law overruling an ordinance which the District of Columbia has in force at this time.

I want to read to you the summary of the decision of the court in passing on this case:

> I find that the order of the commission is in accord with the evidence and should be affirmed. I restate briefly the principal grounds upon which this conclusion is reached.
> 1. The present zone system is discriminatory, and it is not possible to devise a nondiscriminatory zone system in the District of Columbia.
>
> 2. The zone rates are unreasonably low. In many instances they are below cost. The earnings of the entire industry are inadequate if fair wages are to be paid to the drivers.
>
> 3. The zone rate is possible only through the exploitation of rental drivers. The rental is paid first and the driver is compelled to work unreasonably long hours, and his earnings are insufficient. The only rental driver who received the bonus of his car was compelled to work 13 hours a day for nine months without a day off. You gentlemen, your wives and children, get into cabs operated by men working under that nervous strain, all for the sake of a 20-cent taxi fare.
>
> 4. The owner drivers are compelled by competition to adopt the same system and to work the same long hours. In many cases they are losing money.
>
> 5. The long hours will seriously impair the efficiency of the drivers and endanger the public.

This is the court speaking.

> Serious accidents are likely to occur.

As I said, last year there were 1,750 accidents in this city.

> 6. The system increases cruising in congested areas, causes drivers to refuse unprofitable hauls, and causes frauds and disputes.

The evidence showed that from 30 to 40 per cent of the mileage used by these taxicab drivers is used in cruising around the congested areas of the city, and the users of automobiles in this city are inconvenienced by that kind of a condition in our business sections.

> I may add that the use of the meter is compulsory in most of the large cities of the country and it has been required in this District for many years.
> According to the evidence before the commission the meter rates fixed by the order below are substantially lower than in any city of comparable size in this country.

The evidence taken before the Utilities Commission and introduced into the supreme court and found by the judge to reflect the actual conditions in Washington is that a great many drivers are not making expenses under present conditions. Where then, Mr. Chairman, is there any money to keep the taxicabs clean and sanitary; to keep taxicabs in running condition and safe for the passengers? Where is there any provision for insurance premiums in the event some passenger is maimed or killed by these financially impoverished, overworked, and tired drivers?

The evidence discloses that frequently drivers would refuse to carry passengers when they discovered that the destination was far away.

It was definitely found by the court that the zone system "gives rise to frauds and disputes which can be prevented by meters." This applies particularly to strangers in the city. The court says:

> Throughout the case plaintiffs (two taxicab-renting companies) have contended that the great majority of cab drivers and owners are ready, able, willing, and desirous of serving the public on the present zones and at the present rates. This contention is not in accordance with my understanding of the testimony.

About 40 owners or drivers testified before the commission, and only two were in favor of the present zones and present rates. One was president of a company operating 48 cabs and the other was a rental driver for another company. The majority of the owner drivers were emphatically and some bitterly opposed to the zone system. They represented at least 700 owner-drivers, and yet the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] shed great oratorical tears yesterday for the taxicab owner who must pay to install a meter!

It is not the taxicab driver who is afraid of this expense. It is the taxicab renter who is exploiting Washington labor and the cheap-skate nickel nurser, who is unwilling to pay a fair taxicab charge.

The commission fixed a rate of 25 cents for the first 2 miles and 5 cents for each one-third of a mile afterward. This is for the service of an automobile and a driver, and 2 or 3, and in some instances 4, passengers can ride 2 miles for 25 cents. Safe service, reasonable service, service which provides taxicabs that are kept in condition to haul people, can not be operated for less than this rate.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL CAPITAL PARK AND PLANNING COMMISSION

For reimbursement to the United States in compliance with section 4 of the act approved May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 482), as amended, $1,000,000.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 80, line 5, after the sum "$1,000,000," insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That until otherwise permitted by law no further obligation shall be incurred under the appropriations heretofore made pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled 'An act for the acquisition and establishment and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital,' approved May 29, 1930, except such as may be for reimbursement or necessarily incidental to the discharge of obligations heretofore incurred."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the purpose of this amendment and I think it meets the approval of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the purpose of the amendment? I think the committee would like to have some explanation of the object sought to be accomplished by the amendment.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, there has been appropriated to date $5,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States pursuant to an act approved May 29, 1930. This amount was loaned to the District of Columbia without interest. There has been expended out of this $5,000,000, $2,879,700.07. Other sums have been obligated by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. There remains unobligated and unexpended more than $1,000,000. Perhaps the amount will reach $1,500,000.

The District of Columbia is required to pay annually $1,000,000 upon its borrowings from the Federal Government. The item in this bill of $1,000,000 is to repay this year's obligation. This will not be disturbed by the amendment.

The purpose of the amendment is this: The National Park and Planning Commission is buying land all over the District and contiguous to the District to an extent that should not now be permitted. And at high prices. For instance, Congress has appropriated money to build a magnificent road to Mount Vernon, a road that has cost over $10,000,000. Right now this commission is purchasing land on the other side of the river for the purpose of building another road to Mount Vernon, hoping in the future to connect the two with a costly memorial bridge at Mount Vernon.

This commission has bought land to widen Conduit Road to Great Falls to the extent of 120 feet. This land has already been purchased. This commission is now buying land to build another road to Great Falls and this other road is within two or three hundred feet of the Conduit Road to Great Falls. This amendment will prevent these future extravagant expenditures.

This commission bought sites on the various roads leading into the District of Columbia for the purpose of building memorial archways because of the bicentennial celebration already under way, and not a single archway has been built over a single road, and none will be built, and we still own the sites and the bicentennial will be over in the fall.

Mr. STAFFORD. Maybe they are being purchased in anticipation of the tercentennial.

Mr. COLLINS. Perhaps; for the archways will not be built this year.

If Congress wishes to carry out the monumental program of the National Park and Planning Commission, we should at least use some judgment and delay purchases of land, especially when everyone tells us that delay will reduce the prices of the property needed. It is economy on the part of the Congress to put off the purchase of additional land. I have been advised to-day by two Government officials, perhaps better able to advise the Congress about real-estate values than any other two men in the District, that this commission is keeping up the prices of real estate that the commission thinks it needs because the persons who own the land adjacent to these new highways know their land will be bought, and they know that money will be available for its purchase, so they demand from two to four times as much for it as we ought to pay, and they get it. The purpose of the amendment is to prevent future purchases at least during the fiscal year 1933.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LANHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11361, making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask a separate vote on the amendment relating to the Public Utilities Commission limiting the money to be appropriated that no part be expended in enforcing the taxicab ordinance.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 7, after the paragraph ending on line 13, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used for or in connection with the preparation, issuance, publication, or enforcement of any regulation or order of the Public Utilities Commission requiring the installation of meters in taxicabs."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HARLAN) there were 47 ayes and 6 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HAINES, indefinitely, on account of important business.

PERMISSION TO FILE A SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent on behalf of the Committee on Claims to file a supplemental report on the bill S. 1357.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from a friend in Pueblo on national defense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, the people of Colorado are very much concerned about the appropriation for the civilian branches under the National Guard act. They have heard wild rumors of drastic cuts in appropriations to be made in the War Department bill for the citizens' military training camps, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, in colleges and high schools, the rifle matches, the Organized Reserves, and the National Guard.

These organizations are the backbone of national defense. To them we must look for protection and safety in times of trouble. They should have liberal support.

This year, realizing the financial distress the country is in, they and their friends are asking only for the Budget estimates in the appropriation bill. They are urging that these figures be not cut.

I have had many intelligent letters on this subject. One of the best comes from a friend, Mr. Guy B. Pitney, a prominent citizen of Pueblo, Colo., and president of the Pueblo Chapter, Reserve Officers' Association of the United States.

This letter is so full of sound information and good argument that I have asked unanimous consent that it may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so that every Member of Congress may have the facts before him.

PUEBLO, COLO., March 21, 1932.

Hon. GUY U. HARDY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to thank you for your several letters and the information contained therein in reference to the 1933 War Department appropriation bill now in the hands of the Subcommittee on Appropriations. I will also state I have been in contact with the various individuals and organizations signing the resolutions sent you, and to whom you gave such prompt acknowledgment. They all seem to feel your interest in this matter is highly commendable.

As this bill will probably be brought out of committee in the near future, I wish to offer a few comments, especially as to the civilian components that may possibly appear in the bill.

Upon our entrance into the World War our great problem was to organize and train officers and men who came into the Army. Not being a militaristic nation and having made no preparation for a war of such large proportions, we found ourselves woefully unprepared for the emergency. Whole regiments of new recruits could be lined up at the various mobilization centers and among them would be found not a single man with any sort of military training whatsoever. Officer material was entirely lacking among the civilian population. Picked men were rushed through 90-day training programs and commissioned as officers. It is well known that six months is the minimum time required to turn out a fairly efficient private soldier, so you can see what possibilities there were of training an officer in such a ridiculously short period of time.

The results of such a measure of unpreparedness can only be figured in the unnecessary loss of life and waste of Government money and property, which are always the direct result of such policy. Money can not buy time in war time, and time is the most essential factor when war has been declared.

Our present national defense act was constructed with a view of eliminating these great handicaps, in event of a national emergency, at the lowest possible cost to our Government. It depends to a great extent upon the willingness of certain citizens to devote a portion of their time to the study of military science, mostly without remuneration to the individuals so doing.

For instance, the citizens' military training camps, in the summer months, were designed to bring about the training of young men for 30-day periods each year. If the candidate follows this course through the various stages each year and devotes other time to study, he becomes a candidate for a commission in the reserve corps, if he can meet the required examinations. If he does not carry on, he has at least received elementary training as a soldier and is material to be used to advantage in event of an emergency. These young men received no pay for this time expended, the Government paying only their transportation to and from camp and their subsistence while in a camp.

The Reserve Officers' Training Corps units in our colleges, which are the future great reservoir for reserve officers, is conducted on a sound and economical basis. There are some allowances made the students for uniforms, and I believe a small amount of money allowance in the last two periods, which is not sufficient to equip themselves properly as officers, upon graduation and acceptance into the Organized Reserves as officers.

The reserve officer is expected to equip himself properly with uniform and accessories, and I will say that the minimum cost to him would be about $150 for barely enough equipment to qualify. In order to remain on the active list and secure promotion he must devote hours to study, both in troop schools and through correspondence courses furnished by the Army. Let me cite an average case: Here in Pueblo we have a troop school, supervised by a Regular Army officer detailed to this work, that meets for 2-hour study periods twice a month. In addition a class in pistol and rifle marksmanship meets twice a month, 2-hour periods. The average combat officer desiring to qualify for promotion will probably devote 6 hours per month in this manner, or 54 hours over a 9-month period. In addition, his correspondence courses will no doubt stand him 50 or 60 hours more—say, a total of 100 hours or more annually. This time is entirely without compensation and is in addition to his expense of uniforming and equipping himself as stated above. Medical, dental, and specialist officers may not have to devote as much time, but for combat troops it is entirely essential.

Now, we know a man can not learn a profession by theory alone—some practical work is essential. An officer must be allowed to put his theory into actual practice in order to round out his education. Two weeks on active duty would be desirable each year, but the average is probably two weeks every three years, as provided by the defense act. Some exceptions are in order, as a good many men ordered to camp can not arrange to go; therefore excess funds are used to send those able to do so, making it possible for most interested officers to make camp once in two years on the average.

An officer attending these camps must, of course, absent himself from his civilian employment or profession and spend his vacation away from his family. The work at these camps is very strenuous—long marches, field problems, and living conditions mostly of troops on maneuvers. For this work he, of course, receives the pay of his rank and grade, together with transportation to and from camp.

These are the only conditions upon which a reserve officer receives compensation from the Government. Judge for yourself whether the Government is receiving value received for expenditures made.

Since the late war we have had a great reserve strength of former veterans of the World War. This reserve is diminishing rapidly, and in another few years most of these veterans will be entirely unfit for duty as soldiers in event of an emergency. There is more loose dynamite lying around the world at present than at any time in history. The question is, Should we at this time, even in the face of much-needed economy in governmental operation, nullify the efforts of these men who are carrying on, at great personal sacrifice of time and effort, the cause of preparedness.

As you can see by the information given, this national-defense matter is mostly one of voluntary donation of time and interest, without compensation, as far as the reserves are concerned. If the Government were to withdraw support of this plan, I am of the opinion the citizens composing these organizations would probably withdraw their support and we would revert back to our former state of unpreparedness which has proved so costly in the past. We may not always be so fortunate to have allies to hold the line until we can get into some sort of shape to protect ourselves.

Thanking you for your kind interest in this matter, I am,

Sincerely yours,

GUY B. PITNEY,
President Pueblo Chapter Reserve Officers' Association.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourns to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2405. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims of the Eastern or Emigrant and the Western or Old Settler Cherokee Indians against the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 3569. An act to amend the act of May 27, 1930, authorizing an appropriation for the reconstruction and improvement of a road on the Shoshone Indian Reservation, Wyo.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, April 18, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, APRIL 18, 1932

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art ever ready to hear the prayers of those who put their trust in Thee, be graciously pleased to hearken unto us as we bow before Thine unseen presence in the spirit of humble worship and with a quiet mind. Have mercy upon this whole land and teach us so to order our homes that they may be nurseries of virtue and affection in which we may find strength to be brave and calm in the face of all adversities. Forgive our broken resolves, our wasted opportunities, our missing of duty in the dark and cloudy day, making us ever mindful of our own defects, that we may be more patient with the errors and follies of others, always ready to pity, unwilling to condemn.

Uplift those who are oppressed by the weight of many cares, restore all those who through temptation have been diverted from the right, give all-sufficient patience to those whose cross is hard to bear, especially those for whom our prayers are desired, and may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit be with us all evermore. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar days of Thursday, April 14, and Friday, April 15, 1932, when, on request of Mr. FESS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT BY WILLIAM WOLFF SMITH

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, reciting the evidence in a House committee hearing on Saturday last, the Washington Post, on the second page of its Sunday issue, states the following as being a part of the evidence of William Wolff Smith:

> Smith, under questioning, said Senator McKELLAR (Democrat), Tennessee, former Senator Tyson (Democrat), Tennessee, and former Representative Fitzgerald (Republican), Ohio, interested themselves in his application for retired pay when it was pending before the bureau.

Mr. President, this statement, in so far as I am concerned, is without the slightest foundation in fact. I made no recommendation of Mr. Smith, and I demand that he correct his testimony if he made any such statement as reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11361) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2405. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims of the Eastern or Emigrant and the Western or Old Settler Cherokee Indians against the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 3569. An act to amend the act of May 27, 1930, authorizing an appropriation for the reconstruction and improvement of a road on the Shoshone Indian Reservation, Wyo.

CHAIN STORES—COOPERATIVE DRUG AND HARDWARE CHAINS (S. DOC. NO. 82)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 224 of the Seventieth Congress, a report of the Commission on Cooperative Drug and Hardware Chains, being the sixth of a series of reports covering a study of the subject of chain stores, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE WOMEN'S NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions of the Women's National Committee for Law Enforcement, meeting in the First Women's Constitutional Convention, at Washington, D. C., which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> Resolutions of the Women's National Committee for Law Enforcement, meeting in the First Women's Constitutional Convention, Washington Auditorium, Washington, D. C., April 18, 1932
> Be it resolved, we are opposed to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, the great protective law and the only possible prevention of the interstate liquor traffic.
>
> We are opposed to any modification of the eighteenth amendment. President Hoover has said, "Modification is nullification." This the American people will not countenance.

We are opposed to any weakening of the Volstead Act. One-half of 1 per cent alcoholic content is the standard given by the brewers 40 years ago against soft-drink manufacturers.

Be it resolved, we deplore persistent attacks on the Constitution, the supreme law, by a fanatical minority in Congress sworn to support and defend the law now acting in the interest of the return of the outlawed liquor traffic. The reports and discussions and methods are misleading and are responsible for the breaking down of respect for all law in certain groups who are expressing their defiance in lawlessness and crime.

Be it resolved, we do not approve the resubmission of the eighteenth amendment except through the usual method prescribed in the Constitution; when Congress has voted by a two-thirds majority and three-fourths of the legislatures of the States have ratified the action we can believe that the people desire the law repealed. Any of the various bills submitted for breaking down this law would be without precedent, extremely expensive and misleading, and would furnish no solution, since they would not be binding.

Be it resolved, we are opposed to increase of medicinal-liquor prescriptions to physicians and druggists, since this privilege has been greatly abused in certain wet centers. At present more than 100 physicians in New York are under indictment. To give to this class of doctors additional privileges is subversive of law enforcement. Neither do we approve the large supply of liquor allowed to physicians for their personal use, nor do we approve the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in recommending the importation of foreign brandy, in view of the statement of certain Congressmen that enormous supplies of liquor are already available.

Be it resolved, that States refusing to act in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment are transgressing Article VI of the Constitution and that such States shall be deprived of Federal enforcement aid the control of Federal institutions until they are prepared to accept the provisions of the constitutional law providing for concurrent or cooperative action.

Be it resolved, that we, representing a great body of women throughout the United States, demand a more rigid enforcement of the law with full appropriations needed for such enforcement and for the education of the people until this present wave of propaganda, which is misleading, has ceased.

We respectfully suggest that ambassadors to foreign countries be instructed that they are there to represent the interest and Government of America and are under the protection of the American flag, which involves their respect for our constitutional law and their observance and defense of that law while they are in office.

Be it resolved, that we express to the men and women in Congress who have stood against all opposition and have voted loyally and consistently in accordance with their solemn oath our hearty approval, admiration, and support as they continue to stand against the active opposition to our constitutional law.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the petition of Alonzo Robinson, of Columbus, Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation providing for the prompt payment of adjusted-compensation certificates of World War veterans (bonus), which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Grand Parlor of the Native Sons of the Golden West, San Francisco, Calif., favoring the passage of legislation providing for the exclusion of Filipinos and all other immigrants not eligible for American citizenship, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the imposition of increased taxes on automobiles, incomes, and estates in the District of Columbia, as authorized in legislation adopted by the House of Representatives, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Odin and Claflin, Kans., praying for the passage of Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier farm relief bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of members of the educational committee of the County Council of Religious Education, of Zenith, Kans., praying for the maintenance of the prohibition law and its enforcement, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions and papers, in the nature of petitions, of Charles Walters Post, No. 8, American Legion, of Fredonia; Tom Schwinn Post, No. 90, American Legion, of Wellington, and sundry citizens of Butler County, Neosho Falls, and Pittsburg, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of legislation providing for the immediate payment in cash of adjusted-service compensation certificates of World War veterans (bonus), which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ASHURST presented a telegram, in the nature of a memorial, from the Holbrook (Ariz.) Chamber of Commerce, Grady Stobbs, president, remonstrating against proposed reductions in compensation of Federal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented a telegram from R. D. Butler, president Arizona Rural Letter Carriers' Association, of Phoenix, Ariz., stating that the rural carriers of Arizona are not averse to reduction in salary if made proportional with other Federal employees; that they are opposed to suspension of equipment allowance, which would result in a salary reduction ranging from 16 to 27 per cent, as this would be entirely out of proportion to suggested reductions of other groups, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented a telegram, in the nature of a memorial, signed by William A. Fahey, M. D., and several Federal employees, of Fort Defiance, Ariz., remonstrating against proposed reduction in the compensation of Federal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias, of the Grand Domain of Arizona, Phoenix, Ariz., favoring the prompt passage of legislation placing an adequate tariff duty on raw copper, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of H. M. Brown and 286 other citizens of Miami, Ariz., praying for the imposition of an import duty on copper, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from Ed Rudolph, Chevrolet dealer, of Phoenix; Byron Dieckman, Ford dealer, and the Doane Chevrolet Co., both of Douglas, all in the State of Arizona, remonstrating against the imposition of a tax upon the automobile industry in the pending tax bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Fred Hilburn Post, No. 11, American Legion, of Douglas, Ariz., favoring the passage of the so-called Rankin veterans' bill, with the exception of that portion thereof known as the "need clause" in connection with benefits accruing to the widows and orphans of deceased veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH presented numerous letters and telegrams, in the nature of memorials, from sundry citizens and organizations in the State of Maryland, remonstrating against the proposed increase in first-class postage rates in the pending tax bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented numerous letters, in the nature of memorials, from sundry citizens, being jewelers and silversmiths, all in the State of Maryland, remonstrating against the proposed 10 per cent tax on sales of jewelry in the pending tax bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter, in the nature of a petition, from Moore & Co. (Inc.), of Baltimore, Md., praying for the exemption of all books from tax in the pending tax bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter, in the nature of a memorial, signed by the grand regent, Court Little Flower, No. 1034, Catholic Daughters of America, of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 4739, known as the "infant maternity act"; also against the passage of legislation to create a Federal department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Francis Scott Key Chapter, Maryland Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, protesting against the passage of legislation to consolidate the War and Navy Departments, which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

He also presented resolutions of the Kiwanis Club of Phoenix, Ariz., and of Calumet Council, Knights of Columbus, of Calumet, Mich., favoring the imposition of a tariff on copper, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

PROPOSED REDUCTION IN FEDERAL SALARIES

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I present a petition from postal clerks and letter carriers of High Point, N. C., praying that their salaries be not reduced, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, with the signatures, and referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, with the signatures, as follows:

HIGH POINT, N. C., March 24, 1932.

Hon. JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the following-named clerks and carriers of the above-said post office, respectively ask that you introduce this resolution in Congress, causing same to be read and placed upon the minutes thereof, for which we thank you in advance.

PETITION

We, the following-named clerks and carriers of High Point, N. C., do herewith respectfully petition the Congress of the United States, now assembled, not to reduce or "cut" our salaries.

First, consider the injustice of wage cutting as applied to Government workers. The pay of those who make up the rank and file of the governmental personnel has always been low, considered from any standpoint. The general policy of maintaining wages in every industry, so far as possible, is a sound one, and the Government should not abandon that policy and give its tremendous moral support to wage cutting. No person who enters the service has ever been able to look forward to more than a moderate livelihood for himself and family. To decrease that compensation now would be the essence of injustice. It is argued that the cost of living has declined within the past two years and that wages might be decreased to correspond. If the cost of living is justly the sole consideration in fixing wage schedules, then governmental employees have a balance in their favor which it will take many years to pay.

L. B. Smith, C. L. Clapp, R. H. Tucker, Wells Marshall, H. G. Peters, H. S. Janes, J. C. Allen, C. E. Cornelison, B. C. Mixson, N. C. Johnson, Charles Gueth, R. F. Lambeth, J. C. Farlow, Sam Dutton, P. C. Russell, R. J. Royals, William Thos. Winslow, W. H. Farlow, G. D. Byerly, P. P. Motsinger, W. L. Welborn, F. E. Powell, J. C. Young, H. F. Cooper, J. W. Kidd, R. R. Wright, J. H. Hoover, B. G. Leonard, R. O. Moore, F. D. Buneldfield, W. L. Wilbur, R. E. L. Hayworth, A. G. Payne, L. A. Canelli, J. A. Mikles, M. R. W. Green, B. L. Richardson, H. O. Hayworth, L. C. Payne.

PROPOSED SUSPENSION OF SHIPPING BOARD SERVICES

Mr. FLETCHER submitted a telegram from Albury & Co., of Miami, Fla., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MIAMI, FLA., April 18, 1932.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.:

We appreciate your stand against suspension of Shipping Board services. Miami is served from Europe by Shipping Board lines out of Gulf, and a suspension will be a blow to our foreign trade. If these lines are suspended as proposed, the American merchant marine will lose these trade routes permanently and the money already expended in developing this business will be wasted.

ALBURY & CO.

MINNESOTA SENATORIAL CONTEST

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred an article from the United States Daily of the 16th instant, entitled "Mr. SCHALL Replies to Election Charge."

There being no objection, the article was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. SCHALL REPLIES TO ELECTION CHARGE—ASSERTS ALLEGATIONS IN COMPLAINT "GROUNDLESS AND WILL FALL OF OWN WEIGHT"

Senator SCHALL (Republican), of Minnesota, against whom an election contest was filed in the Senate April 14 by Einer Hoidale, declared April 15 that the charges are "groundless and they will fall of their own weight."

Following is the full text of the statement:

"This contest does not disturb me, and I am sure that my friends in Minnesota realize the influences that are back of it. Those who have always opposed my election to the Senate of the United States have waited nearly 18 months to file their charges and the complaint which is filed is a mass of generalities, insinuations, and falsehoods. It is just another attempt upon the part of my enemies to destroy my influence as a Senator of the United States.

"It is peculiar that this complaint was not filed until after I had made my speech on the floor of the United States Senate in behalf of the farmer and against the grain gamblers, who supported my opponent, Mr. Einer Hoidale, who now brings this belated contest.

"These charges are groundless and they will fall of their own weight."

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present a number of telegrams and letters which I have received from New York and other parts of the country by persons who are interested in the unemployment situation and favoring legislation sponsored by me, one measure now pending on the calendar and the other pending before the committee. I ask that two telegrams may be read and that the others may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The first two telegrams were read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington:

The International Ladies' Garment Workers Union is deeply interested in passage of your unemployment relief and construction bill. Our organization is whole-heartedly in favor of your measure.

BENJ. SCHLESINGER, President.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber:

We feel profoundly grateful to you for your whole-hearted championship of the cause of the unemployed and indorse with enthusiasm your unemployment relief and construction bill in the name of 25,000 organized dressmakers whom we represent, most of whom are victims of unemployment. We urge upon Congress to pass your bill as the only constructive measure to meet the present deplorable condition of unemployment and its destructive consequences.

JOINT BOARD DRESS AND WAIST MAKERS UNION,
JULIUS HOCHMAN, General Manager.

The remaining telegrams and letters presented by Mr. WAGNER were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 16, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
United States Senate:

We heartily indorse Wagner unemployment and construction bill.

LOUIS MAZZOLA,
President Local No. 78, Stone Masons' Union.

THE LABOR BUREAU (INC.),
New York City, April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: I am taking the liberty to write you a few lines expressing my earnest hope that the unemployment relief and construction bill introduced by you in the Senate will promptly be enacted into law. It seems to me to be a feasible and practical measure for furnishing at least some desperately needed aid for the millions of unemployed.

In offering you this indorsement I am voicing the opinion of my associates in The Labor Bureau (Inc.), as well as my own. It may interest you to know, too, that in my contacts with labor groups in New York City and elsewhere I find virtually unanimous approval of your bill.

Very truly yours,

ALFRED L. BERNHEIM.

NEW YORK, April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We heartily indorse your unemployment relief and construction bill and wish to assure you our entire organization is behind any move to bring prosperity to the masses of workers.

With the very best of wishes for the success of this bill, and our kindest personal regards, we remain,

Yours very sincerely,

UNITED SCENIC ARTISTS L. U. 829,
BROTHERHOOD OF PAINTERS, DECORATORS, AND PAPERHANGERS OF AMERICA.
FRED MARSHALL, Business Representative.

CONSUMERS' LEAGUE OF KENTUCKY,
Louisville, April 13, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
The Capitol, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: The Consumers' League of Kentucky is very much interested in the establishment of a national employment system and the promotion of such a system in cooperation with the States.

We are anxiously awaiting the outcome of the vote on Thursday. We are wishing you much success for the passage of this splendid measure.

Yours sincerely,

ANNA H. SETTLE, President.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The International Photographers, Local No. 644, unanimously indorse your unemployment relief and construction bill.

O. V. JOHNSON,
Business Representative, Local No. 644.

ALBION, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Urge you do not support curtailment Federal funds for States extension service.

MRS. ELTON WAGNER,
Vice President Orleans County Home Bureau.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Garage Washers' Union, No. 272, Greater New York, membership of 5,000, unanimously went on record indorsing your unemployment relief and construction bill. Best wishes.

J. POLLARD, Secretary-Treasurer.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

New York Women's Trade Union, with affiliated membership of 60,000 working women, strongly favors passage of Wagner unemployment relief and construction bill. Situation of unskilled unemployed industrial is becoming steadily more critical. Present relief measures are most inadequate. Extensive program such as you sponsor will help considerably.

ROSE SCHNEIDERMAN, President.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber:

The United Marble Industry of New York City heartily indorses your unemployment and construction relief bill. Hope for speedy passage.

EDWARD SCULLY, Secretary.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber:

This organization wishes to go on record as whole-heartedly indorsing your relief and construction bill. Eight thousand of our fellow citizens have been walking streets for 10 months, with unemployment still increasing. Here's to success.

A. FILORIMO, Secretary,
Excavators and Building Laborers' Union, Local 731,
205 East One hundred and twelfth Street.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber:

We, the members of the United Building and Common Laborers' Union, in meeting assembled, favor the passage of your unemployment relief and construction bill and wish you success.

Fraternally yours,

G. B. DIOGUARDI, President.

METROPOLITAN LODGE, No. 363,
BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
New York, N. Y., April 15, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On behalf of the members I represent, I take the liberty to express their best wishes, too, for your support in presenting Senate bill No. 3892, which bears your name.

This measure introduces a new idea in American industrial life—the idea of Government action requiring all employers and employees in a particular field to contribute to a fund from which annuities for retired employees may be paid.

This measure, if enacted into law, will insure to all railroad workers the security in old age to which they are rightfully entitled. It takes care of all employees, including those in advanced years.

Again thanking you for your support, I remain,

Yours truly,

CHAS. SERKEY,
Legislative Representative.

BROTHERHOOD OF PAINTERS, DECORATORS, AND PAPERHANGERS OF AMERICA,
New York City, April 16, 1932.

Mr. ROBERT WAGNER,
United States Senator,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Be informed that the above organization has unanimously indorsed your bill for "unemployment relief and government construction work."

We are particularly interested in this bill, as we are showing in our latest unemployment registration held in the first week of April an increase of unemployment over the registration held in January of this year. The percentage out of work in January was 78 per cent; in April 85 per cent.

Inclosed find postal card to show the system used for registration. The average time worked by our members in 1931 was 68 days, or a daily income of $3.59 by a wage scale of $13.20.

The registration of our members in January, 1932, showed 127 working, mostly part time, and 588 out of work; total, 715. In April, first week, the registration showed 91 members working and 611 out of work; total, 702—having lost 13 members.

Trusting that you will be successful, we are,

Very truly yours,

FRANK WOLLENSAK,
President Local Union 499.

AMALGAMATED SILVER WORKERS' UNION,
New York, April 14, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The Amalgamated Silver Workers' Union, Local 38, heartily indorses your efforts regarding unemployment relief and construction bills. Your action meets with our unqualified approval.

AMALGAMATED SILVER WORKERS' UNION, LOCAL 38,
T. J. BUCKLEY, Secretary.

MAINTENANCE OF PRESENT AIRWAYS

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I present a statement by Frank E. Ormsbee, official representative of the Air Line Pilots' Association, relative to the maintenance of present airways. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

APPROPRIATIONS 1933 DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Aircraft in commerce:
House	$1,301,160
Senate	1,000,000
Reduction	301,160
Air navigation facilities:
House	7,553,500
Senate	7,350,000
Reduction	203,500
$200,000 of this appropriated for establishing airways between Puget Sound and Twin City, reduction		$403,500
Total, Senate		7,150,000

Since the $200,000 specified for the establishment of a new airway is taken from the entire appropriation it is in effect a reduction to the appropriation made available for the maintenance of present airways. It will require that facilities on established lines now being used be discontinued in order to start the installation of facilities on a proposed line that is not being used, a very inconsistent procedure.

As a representative of the air-line pilots who are confronted with a very difficult problem of carrying on scheduled service in order to build up air travel so that the scheduled air-line transportation industry will eventually become self-sustaining, I wish to point out that the necessary retrenchments which will result from the present contemplated reductions of appropriation for aircraft in commerce and air-navigation facilities will have a very dangerous reaction on all the commercial-aviation industry.

The pilots are primarily concerned in safety of air travel and will exert every possible effort toward increasing it. Lighted airways, teletype weather reports, intermediate fields, radio communications, and beacons are much more essential to safe operation in air travel than the rails, sidetracks, and signal systems are to the railroad.

The Government has expended enormous sums of money in developing and maintaining airway systems and in support of the commercial-aviation industry because it is so indispensable to our system of communication, transportation, and national defense and security. These expenditures are intended to lend sufficient aid to the industry as a whole in an effort to build it up to a point where it will become self-supporting. This self-support is directly dependent upon increasing confidence in air travel. Confidence in air travel is directly dependent upon decreasing the percentage of aerial disasters and increasing the percentage of scheduled operations. Crashes in scheduled operations have increased to an alarming extent during the last few months, thereby retarding public confidence and air travel, which necessarily means that Government support will be required that much longer. The pilots are doing their best to improve this condition. They will be helpless to do so without information and assistance given them through facilities furnished by the Department of Commerce.

If you had ever experienced being caught in a storm with the lives of passengers intrusted to your care you would realize the mental anguish a pilot is subject to and of what extreme value these aids to navigation are. Such conditions as these frequently occur and have got to be met and mastered if commercial aviation is ever to become a self-supporting industry. Any reduction to present facilities furnished by the Department of Commerce we feel represents a false economy in that it will contribute to decreasing scheduled operations in air travel as well as safety in operations, thereby retarding the progress of building up public confidence and increasing passenger travel, which, in turn, will make Government subsidies necessary that much longer.

The recent controversy the pilots experienced with Mr. E. L. Cord can be used as only one of many instances to illustrate the necessity of the department's maintaining a sufficient and well-trained staff of inspectors. Mr. Cord operated the Century and Century Pacific Air Lines. If his methods of overhaul, maintenance, and upkeep had not been subject to rigid supervision and Department of Commerce requirements, an inferior class of work and material would have resulted, thereby decreasing the element of safety in air travel. In Mr. Cord's efforts to continue operations after he had summarily dismissed his pilots when they objected to unfair treatment, he recruited a great many pilots in replacement. Due to absolute want because of the depression a number of pilots applied for positions. Mr. Cord's chief pilots checked them out, after which they were required to pass a Department of Commerce test and be checked out by a Department of Commerce inspector. At least 50 per cent of the pilots who had been checked out as qualified to fly his planes by his chief pilots were disqualified by Department of Commerce inspectors as being unsafe.

The present contemplated reduction to the Department of Commerce appropriation will necessitate cutting their staff of inspectors and in that way make it impossible for the department to keep a rigid examination and check on aircraft, mechanics, and pilots that is absolutely essential to continue safety in air travel. We are looking toward not only continuing the present percentage of safety but increasing that factor. This will be impossible if the Department of Commerce activities are to be curtailed.

On behalf of the pilots to whom the traveling public intrusts their lives, I respectfully urge that the present contemplated reduction be withdrawn, and if possible additional funds be made available to continue the experimental work necessary to improving aids to navigation as well as establishing them on some of the present lines where they are badly needed.

FRANK E. ORMSBEE,
Official Representative Air Line Pilots Association.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the blameless distress of the unemployed, to which the attention of the Senate was directed earlier in the session, continues to deserve the attention of the Congress. Economic conditions have grown worse, not better; and relief, however efficiently pressed, has not kept pace with increasing human need. It is hoped that the whole subject is soon to be reconsidered here, without prejudice and constructively, for the good name and honor of the Nation.

As part of my remarks, I ask unanimous consent to include portions of an article appearing in yesterday's New York Times dealing with announced conclusions as a result of nation-wide inquiries conducted by the Survey, a social-welfare magazine, and by the Business Week, a McGraw-Hill publication, both published in New York City.

There being no objection, portions of the article referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, April 17, 1932]

RELIEF CRISIS LOOMS THROUGHOUT NATION—SURVEY IN 37 CITIES SHOWS HUGE FUNDS UNEQUAL TO "STAGGERING LOAD," TWO PUBLICATIONS REPORT—FEDERAL HELP IS ASKED—PRIVATE AND LOCAL RESOURCES FOUND OVERTAXED—COLLAPSE HERE IN THREE WEEKS FEARED

The huge unemployment relief funds raised throughout the United States have been unequal to the tremendous burden placed upon them and a crisis in unemployment relief in the United States is imminent, according to studies just completed and announced yesterday by the Survey, organ of the social service profession, and the Business Week, published by the McGraw-Hill Co.

Describing the situation in New York City, William H. Matthews, director of the Emergency Work and Relief Bureau, who has been in close contact with the work relief situation since the depression began, said the unemployment situation in New York was more critical now than it has been at any time during the present depression.

Within three weeks, according to Mr. Matthews, New York City may reach a real crisis in unemployment relief "and from present appearance it is extremely likely that thousands of people who have been receiving relief of some kind during the winter will be thrown back on their limited resources, with no avenue of aid open to them."

SURVEY COVERS WIDE FIELD

From the officials of welfare and social-service organizations in 37 cities the Survey has received reports that "make a sorry picture for a proud country to contemplate."

"Without plan, without strong national leadership, with meager and uncertain funds, these cities have somehow muddled through the winter, keeping their people alive, but at what costs of broken spirits and human suffering only God knows," according to the editors. "Still planless and with no sign of improved employment, with relief needs growing and with relief funds dwindling to exhaustion, they turn their blind eyes to the future, where already the specter of another winter is rising.

"Huge relief funds raised in New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia have been unequal to the staggering loads in these centers of industrial dislocation. Complete breakdown is imminent. The fallacy of the idea that private funds could cope with a situation of such proportions as this one is remorselessly exposed. Private funds have done little more than act as a thin emollient on a deep wound.

"No rational adult can be blind to what lies ahead. This summer will bring little surcease in human needs. Next winter will be worse, not better. Yet Congress is deaf. Legislatures are adjourning, cities and counties are temporizing with pinchbeck appropriations and private social agencies are in positions they can not sustain. There is no evidence of any real facing of what is on the doorstep, let alone any preparation to deal with it."

MATTHEWS LOOKS TO BLOCK-AID

In his statement Mr. Matthews said that, while it was true that the emergency unemployment-relief committee had budgeted its work so as to carry on to some extent until October, there would have to be a very heavy reduction in the number of persons receiving work relief on May 1 unless appreciable funds were raised by the block-aiders.

"Success of the block-aid is necessary if the emergency work and relief bureau is to maintain its present unemployment relief work," he declared. "Any decrease in this would bring about a collapse of the entire structure of this form of relief.

"We are entering the summer season, of course, when it should be easier for unemployed persons to maintain an existence. In ordinary times this would be true, but this year we have an unusual situation. First, the casual employment opportunities that ordinarily arise at this time are absent this year. Second, in order to exist through the summer, most people require a little something in reserve. This year we find thousands who are virtually down to nothing, who have been living the most meager sort of an existence on various forms of relief. If this relief is withdrawn, these people are left helpless in their distress.

"The situation in thousands of families is so acute now that any diminution in relief work will inevitably produce an abnormal amount of hardship.

"It is the hope of all cognizant of this serious situation that public funds will be made available during the next two or three weeks in order that the Home-Relief Bureau, under Welfare Commissioner Taylor, may renew its activity, which unfortunately has been lessened to a great extent. Unless adequate preparations are made for the summer, the situation will become more and more pitiable and serious."

THE BUSINESS WEEK'S SURVEY

According to the nation-wide survey by the Business Week, private charity is passing out of the relief situation and local governments have few resources left with which to increase or even maintain present relief activities.

The States are bearing a heavy relief burden at present, the survey revealed. They are using income taxes, diverted gasoline taxes, various nuisance taxes, such as Ohio's utility excise tax, to raise relief funds. Local governments, straining to the utmost, encounter increasing opposition from taxpayers to further use of funds for relief. Business, source of tax money, faces a tremendous burden in financing relief, no matter how it is done.

"There appears to be a growing opinion," says the survey analysis, "that the relief burden should be lightened on property and transferred to income, so that a greater share of it will be carried by those best able to do so. For States without income taxes this means Federal aid, and in this direction an increasing number of States and municipalities are looking. They have carried on for two and a half years against hopeless odds and are getting thoroughly discouraged.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2340) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board of Shannon County, S. Dak., in the construction of a consolidated high-school building to be available to both white and Indian children, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 569) thereon.

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 2409) to amend Title II of the Federal farm loan act in regard to Federal intermediate credit banks, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 570) thereon.

Mr. REED, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9598) to authorize increased expenditures for the enforcement of the contract-labor provisions of the immigration law, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 571) thereon.

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA—CONTESTED ELECTION

Mr. GEORGE and Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported a resolution (S. Res. 199), and submitted a report (No. 568) thereon, pursuant to Senate Resolutions Nos. 467 and 485, Seventy-first Congress, as follows:

Resolved, That John H. Bankhead is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Alabama for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1931, and is entitled to be seated as such.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 15th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 826. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine claims of certain bands or tribes of Indians residing in the State of Oregon;

S. 1719. An act amending the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma to submit claims to the Court of Claims," approved June 4, 1924;

S. 3584. An act to require all insurance corporations formed under the provisions of Chapter XVIII of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia to maintain their principal offices and places of business within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. 3655. An act to provide for the leasing of the segregated coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian Nations, in Oklahoma, and for an extension of time within which purchasers of such deposits may complete payments.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Robert W. Colflesh, of Iowa, to be United States attorney, southern district of Iowa, to succeed Ross R. Mowry, whose term will expire May 26, 1932.

Mr. DILL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of C. W. Johnson, jr., of Texas, to be United States attorney, northern district of Texas, to succeed Norman A. Dodge, whose term expired February 20, 1932.

Mr. SCHALL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

R. John Allen, of Wyoming, to be United States marshal, district of Wyoming, to succeed Hugh L. Patton, deceased; and Lewis L. Drill, of Minnesota, to be United States attorney, district of Minnesota.

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 4424) authorizing an appropriation for certain improvements at the Flandreau Indian School, Flandreau, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 4425) relating to the immigration and naturalization of certain natives of the Virgin Islands; to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution providing for amendment of the Constitution of the United States by the initiative and referendum plan, which I ask may be appropriately referred.

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 146) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the method of amendment thereof; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REGULATION OF CERTAIN BANKING OPERATIONS

By Mr. GLASS:

A bill (S. 4412) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of Federal reserve banks and of national banking associations, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. GLASS subsequently, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported the foregoing bill without amendment.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 11361) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REVENUE AND TAXATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed, as follows:

After section 601 (d) (4), insert the following:

"( ) logs of fir, spruce, cedar, pine, hemlock, or larch, $2 per thousand feet board measure."

AMENDMENT RELATIVE TO THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3950) to amend section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes," as applied to the Virgin Islands of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO STATE, JUSTICE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CONNALLY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 9349, the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 69, after line 10, to strike out:

"To enable the Secretary of Commerce, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, a Foreign Commerce Service of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1927,' approved April 12, 1930 (46 Stat. 163), to furnish the officers in the Foreign Commerce Service of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce stationed in a foreign country, without cost to them and within the limits of this appropriation, allowances for living quarters, heat, and light, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 70), $200,000: Provided, That the maximum allowance to any officer shall not exceed $1,700."

CONSOLIDATION OF THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE AND THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET

Mr. REED submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 200), which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments:

Whereas there have been numerous complaints of unreasonable delays in the disposal of matters referred to the General Accounting Office, of arbitrary and contradictory opinions from the Comptroller General of the United States on points of law, of friction between the General Accounting Office and the executive departments; and

Whereas the Bureau of the Budget has failed to effect economies for which it was designed or to reduce executive estimates to the point necessitated by an unbalanced budget; and

Whereas the General Accounting Office and the Bureau of the Budget are alike charged by law with responsibility for promoting economy and efficiency in public expenditures: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments of the Senate be directed to study the question of consolidating and reorganizing the General Accounting Office and the Bureau of the Budget under a single administrative head, responsible to Congress or to the President, and to report its recommendations to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. CONNALLY entered a motion to discharge the Committee on Civil Service from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4131) providing for the temporary reduction of compensation of certain officers and employees of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair) directed that the order be entered.

DEFENSE OF GOVERNOR ROOSEVELT'S POLICIES BY HIS SON

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to an item appearing in the New York Times, which reads as follows:

James Roosevelt, son of Governor Roosevelt, defended the presidential campaign policies of his father against the implied criticisms of Mr. Smith.

Young Roosevelt's statement, which he made clear, was "not made as the representative of anyone else," did not mention his father or Mr. Smith by name.

"For four years the people of this country have been deluded with false hopes; with vain promises that all would be well in a short time," he said. "We have had platitudes, but no constructive action. I believe that it was high time for some national leader to unmask the hypocrisy of the Federal Government in Washington and those who seem to control it; that it was high time that a leader have the courage to call their bluff and to state in no uncertain terms the truly desperate conditions which face the average man and woman throughout the United States.

"If, in so doing, that leader be classed as a friend of the poor and the oppressed, all I can say to him is keep your courage, fight the good fight; the people of America and Massachusetts will back you to the end."

Mr. President, it may be true that the great financial interests of this country may be able to prevent Governor Roosevelt being President of the United States, but so far as I am concerned, I had rather have such a son than to be President of the United States or king of the universe. It seems to me that the statement made by young Roosevelt is one of the finest tributes that could be paid by a boy to his own father, calling him a friend of the poor and the oppressed and telling him to keep up the good fight in their behalf. Contrast, if you will, the statement of that boy with the editorials which cheer as the utterance of a great statesman the speech that was made by ex-Governor Smith.

It will be noted that it was the Chicago Tribune, a Republican newspaper; the New York Herald Tribune, another Republican newspaper; the New York Sun, another Republican newspaper; the New York Times, a so-called independent Democratic newspaper; the Portland Oregonian, another Republican newspaper, that joined in the hue and cry and praised Governor Smith for his denunciation; they were practically all Republican newspapers, and practically all of them are dominated by the special interests of this country, including the Wall Street Journal, which published an article by Mr. Thomas F. Woodlock.

As I stated at the beginning, and I now conclude, I had rather be called almost anything, provided I was fighting the battle and taking the side of the poor and the oppressed, than to have the praise of the Wall Street Journal and of the Republican newspapers which are more or less controlled by the great special interests of the country.

PROPOSED DISTRICT STREET-RAILWAY MERGER

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] on April 16 last delivered an address over the radio in which he analyzed the street-railway merger proposed for the District of Columbia. I ask that the address may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A SQUARE DEAL FOR WASHINGTON STRAPHANGERS

Friends of the radio audience, when I came to Washington from Kansas in 1919, having been duly elected a United States Senator, I did not know that I was to become so intimately associated with the problems of the District of Columbia.

But I stayed in Washington and learned to know and like its people. I have always said, and I now repeat, that Washington is outranked in my affections only by my native State of Kansas.

As chairman of the Senate District Committee it was necessary for me to inform myself pretty thoroughly about the needs of the city in the way of legislation. The citizens' organizations have been a big help in keeping the folks on Capitol Hill informed about District laws and legislative proposals affecting the District.

Now it is clear to all of you, my friends, that it is impossible for a Senator to sit down and talk informally with each and every Washingtonian with an opinion on some kind of local legislation. As the fellow said, a Senator couldn't possibly do it, not even if he were triplets.

So I am grateful to the radio for furnishing me a contact with the people of Washington. It is an ideal way to put your stand on these local questions before the public and get the popular reaction to those views.

I want to talk to you to-night about a matter that has been under discussion as long as I have been in the Senate. In fact, it was being talked about in Washington before I came to Washington. That is the street-railway merger.

The consolidation of the District's street-railway lines has been talked about in Senate and House Committees for so many years that it is becoming increasingly difficult to get committee members to think about this subject any longer.

One of the most valuable members of the Senate District Committee openly threatened to resign from membership if any more hearings were held on merger resolutions.

Frankly, I am getting pretty tired of this subject too. But that does not mean that I am willing, through mere weariness, to allow Congress to authorize a merger that is not in the public interest.

Let us have a merger by all means. The companies want it. The public wants it. But let it be not only a merger of street-railway properties but of good business sense and fair dealing.

Suppose we turn back a few pages in local history and find out why Congress has an interest in making one street-car company out of two.

First of all, we should note the difference between public utilities and private business. If you go into a store and the storekeeper refuses to deal with you, there is nothing to do but go to another store. The storekeeper's business is his own; he is not obliged to sell his goods to Tom, Dick, and Harry, if he chooses not to do so. But a public-utility corporation has a different status. It is obliged to serve all comers. A street-car conductor can not with impunity refuse to let you ride on his car because he doesn't like your looks. If you are willing to pay the fare on a public conveyance, you are entitled to ride.

Bruce Wyman, in his well-known work on Public Service Corporations, has this to say of such corporations' relations to the public:

"Having devoted their property to a use in which the public has an interest, they (the companies) in effect have granted to the public an interest in that use and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good to the extent of the interest they have created."

It is not necessary to be a lawyer to see that public-utility corporations must be controlled by the public. In the District of Columbia, these corporations, dealing in transportation, electric power and light, gas, and telephones, are under the supervision of the Public Utilities Commission.

This control has been in the hands of the commission since 1913, when Congress created this body by making the public utilities act a part of the District appropriation bill. The same bill carried as an additional rider a law that has come to be known as the La Follette Antimerger Act.

The antimerger act was sponsored by the distinguished father of the present able Senator LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin. It was intended to prohibit mergers of local public utilities without their prior sanction by Congress, and to stop the acquisition of control of local utility companies by out-of-town corporations.

The street-car merger agitation persisted, year after year. There was a pretty feeling that the antimerger act would prohibit any desirable consolidation of the car lines. So in 1925, after a good deal of discussion, Congress enacted a law to meet the situation.

This law would allow the companies to merge under terms that would be agreeable to the stockholders and to the Public Utilities Commission. However, the terms of any such merger would have to be approved by a joint resolution of Congress, the act declared.

Now we have the background for the picture of this present merger proposition.

In the Seventieth Congress and again in the Seventy-first Congress the Senate District Committee considered various forms of merger proposals in the form of joint resolutions. Not any of these was entirely satisfactory, and now in the Seventy-second Congress we are making another attempt to bring the companies together.

It isn't an easy job to satisfy Congress, the public, the Public Utilities Commission, and the companies on the matter of merger legislation. The present situation is this: The majority of the members of the Senate District Committe has reported the merger resolution favorably to the Senate with 53 amendments. Some of these amendments have a good deal of merit in them. But the merger resolution, as reported by the committee, does not satisfy me nor does it satisfy Senator BLAINE, of Wisconsin, who is a very able and valuable member of the District Committee. So we have filed a minority report on the resolution, together with some amendments that we think are needed to safeguard the interest of the public in this merger.

I think we ought to know just how the scales balance between the companies and the public in this matter. Let us look at the resolution as reported from the Senate committee in its bold outlines only.

The Capital Traction Co. and the Washington Railway & Electric Co. would turn their street-railway properties over to a new company, to be incorporated under District laws. The articles of incorporation would be first approved by the Public Utilities Commission.

The new company would give free transfers between all street cars. It would have the power to buy up the Washington Rapid Transit Co., the local bus company, when the Utilities Commission would give the word. The new company would pay nothing for crossing-police service and would be relieved of a considerable portion of expense of street and bridge improvements. The new company would acknowledge the right of the commission to set reasonably reduced fares for school children. It would be protected from competition of other street-railway and bus companies.

When these main features of the merger are stacked up it certainly seems to me that the public of Washington would be virtually giving these companies a substantial bonus to accomplish a merger.

The companies want this merger. They need it. I have been almost deluged by letters from interested stockholders in favor of it. The companies' attorneys and other representatives of the corporations concerned in this matter have been very active on Capitol Hill. In the name of common sense, why should the public of Washington pay for a merger that the companies want?

And let me call your attention to some of the main points of difference between the majority and the minority reports of the District Committee on this merger resolution.

You know, I suppose, that the Washington Railway & Electric Co. owns the Potomac Electric Power Co., one of the richest utility corporations in this section, and the Washington Railway & Electric Co. is, in turn, controlled by the North American Co., a holding company.

At one time the North American Co. owned the bus company here, too; but the stock was turned over to Harley P. Wilson, a North American Co. director, to avoid running afoul of the anti-merger act.

Now, the Potomac Electric Power Co. is not included in this merger. It is to continue as a property of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. At present the railway company buys power from its subsidiary at an extremely low cost, and sells this power profitably to other railway companies. The electric company does not get a fair price for this power. Consequently, the rate that Washingtonians pay for electricity is probably not as low as it should be, for the company is deprived of hundreds of thousands of dollars of profit through its contract with the Washington Railway & Electric Co.

Under the terms of the resolution as reported by the majority of the Senate District Committee the electric company is to furnish power to the new company under a 15-year contract. The companies would settle between themselves the price to be paid for 63 per cent of the power, while only 37 per cent of the total would be fixed by the Public Utilities Commission. At the expiration of the 15-year period the commission would have control of the entire situation.

Now, Senator Blaine and I do not think this is a fair arrangement. There exists a consent decree under which the Potomac Electric Power Co. must use part of its excess profits each year in reducing rates to the public. Of course, the North American Co. would like to see as much of the power as possible taken out of the jurisdiction of this decree, and handed over to the new company. The new company would profit by its sale of power to other railway companies in this vicinity, but the consumers of electricity in the District would get no benefit.

This amounts really to giving the new company an annual present of about $300,000, which is what the Washington Railway & Electric Co. makes each year through its power sales in and out of the District. Why should this new company engage in a business that is properly that of the power company? And why should the Public Utilities Commission be told to keep its hands off this arrangement? It is the business of the commission to fix rates. This power clause in the merger agreement would tie the hands of the commission for 15 years.

The minority report suggests and urges that Congress strike out this unfair and unreasonable power clause, and give the Utilities Commission the jurisdiction it rightfully should have over 100 per cent of the sale of power.

Another pretty important feature of the agreement concerns the use of subsidiaries by the new company. The merger resolution would give the company the right to operate through subsidiaries both in and out of the District.

What's the use of having a merger, which implies unified control, if we are going to have a lot of smaller subsidiary companies operating branch lines or other activities in the District? It will make regulation just that much more difficult. And it opens the way to financing schemes of a nature repugnant to the best spirit of public service.

There would be no objection to the new company's operation of subsidiaries in near-by Maryland, where it is necessary for control of such companies by the Public Service Commission of Maryland. Senator BLAINE and I have offered an amendment that would cause the new company to operate directly its transportation facilities in the District, while giving it the option to run either directly or through subsidiaries its lines in Maryland.

And now, one other essential factor of the merger on which there is a difference of opinion between the majority and minority of the District Committee. This is the universal-transfer proposition.

The people of Washington have been looking for a merger for a long time. Why? To get better and possibly cheaper street-car service and to end the pay-transfer nuisance.

But what does the merger resolution offer? It offers to the public—and this is the only thing the public would get out of this consolidation—it offers free transfers between all street cars.

That sounds very fine on the face of it. But what about busses? These street-car companies are not building any more tracks. They are using busses instead. The resolution would allow the Utilities Commission to order the conditions on which transfers will be issued from street cars to busses, or between busses. Does that end the pay-transfer nuisance? I am sure it does not.

Of course, there may be special types of express bus service or de luxe service instituted by the new company, when it is formed. Some special arrangement should be made about transfers between those busses and street cars, if the commission deems it advisable.

But the minority report holds that a free transfer should be issued with each street-car or bus fare, except de luxe busses. If the Washington Rapid Transit Co. becomes a part of the new company, the free transfers should apply to it also, subject to reasonable conditions to prevent abuse.

We—that is, Senator BLAINE and I—have also asked in our minority report amendment of the resolution to allow the Public Utilities Commission to make its valuations of street-railway companies and all other public utilities in the District on the basis of the prudent investment theory. You may not know it, but when the commission to-day sets out to find what a public-utility company is worth for rate-making purposes, if it is in doubt about the elements of value to be considered, it must ask the District Supreme Court to give some instructions. That is the law. No other State in the Union has such an incongruous law.

As a matter of practical fact, the commission does not admit having any doubt about the elements of value in most instances, but completes its valuation. On this valuation it may fix rates.

In the past, on completion of a valuation by the commission, the figure would be disputed by the utility company, and the matter would be thrown into court. Then the court would set a valuation of the company's property, and the commission's work would go out the window.

The minority has suggested an amendment that will end the present stupid valuation procedure, and will also make the commission's findings of fact not subject to overthrow by the courts.

This is only fair, and does not take from the court any right that the court should have.

There is one other amendment on which the minority insists. That is that Congress will always have the right to repeal the merger resolution or any charter or certificate of incorporation made thereunder, and also that any franchise rights created by the resolution shall terminate after one year following the repeal of the resolution. We need this amendment to keep the street-car and bus systems of the District under proper public control. If we must have a merger in the District, the straphangers should not be asked to pay more than their fair share for the benefits they may get from it.

PAYMENT OF VETERANS' ADJUSTED CERTIFICATES

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Miami (Fla.) Herald of the 15th instant relative to veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Miami (Fla.) Herald, Friday, April 15, 1932]

A PREMATURE DEMAND

Tremendous pressure is being brought to bear upon the members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives to report favorably a bill paying the veterans of the World War the bonus that was granted them shortly after the close of the struggle.

The adjusted compensation accorded to veterans amounted to $1 per day of service in this country and $1.25 per day for service abroad. The limit for each class of veterans, respectively, was $500 and $625. Instead of paying the cash, which the Government was not able to do at the time, Congress added 25 per cent to each veteran's allowance and used that fund to purchase for him a 20-year insurance policy. Congress afterwards made provision by which the veterans could borrow 50 per cent of the face value of their certificates.

Many veterans took advantage of that provision, and now there is a great demand on the part of certain veterans' organizations that the whole amount, not due, however, until 1945, shall be paid at this time. To meet that demand the Government will be obliged to raise $2,400,000,000.

The touching plea is made that the veterans are in dire need of the money, that many, with their families, are hungry and suffering, and that the payment at this time will relieve an incalculable amount of distress.

There is not a person in this country who does not want to see the veteran fully recompensed for his services to his country. If it were possible, the country would be glad if the payment should be made now.

But Congress is struggling to balance the country's Budget, and is finding great trouble in discovering means by which the necessary money can be raised. The credit of the Nation is in peril and the country will be discredited if the Budget is not balanced.

An added burden of $2,000,000,000 would make the balancing of the Budget an impossibility.

Supporters of the movement before the committee are proposing that the veterans be paid not by a bond issue but by the issuance of currency to the amount of the immense claim. This, they say, would not only relieve the veterans but would also put an end to the deflation from which the country is suffering, and that the distribution in small amounts to every town and hamlet where the veterans now live would bring about an immediate revival of business.

All of which, perhaps, is true, but in issuing billions of fiat money the Government will be plunging into greater difficulties than now present themselves.

To set the printing presses at work grinding out money is a dangerous proceeding and has brought disaster to every country that has ever tried it. This country has repeatedly refused to follow any such policy.

It is pointed out that the immediate effect of responding to the present demands of the veterans would be to depreciate the value of the dollar to a disastrous degree. The present gold reserve against currency circulation amounts to 45 per cent coverage. If Treasury notes to meet the $2,000,000,000 demand were issued, the coverage would only be 6.7 per cent.

The effect of that would be to depreciate the value of the dollar all over the world, directly lower the credit of the Government, and would so inflate prices that the dollar would lose its value as a medium in international trade. All of which would be practical bankruptcy.

There are grave fears that the Committee on Ways and Means in the House will report the bill favorably and that the House, under the extraordinary pressure being brought to bear upon it, will pass the bill. However, it will have to run the gantlet of the Senate and, undoubtedly, meet a presidential veto.

The country at large should let Congress know that it is opposed to this proposition, in spite of its earnest desire that at the proper time the veterans shall receive all that a grateful country can award them for their service.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDACY OF HON. JOSEPH IRWIN FRANCE

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, by request, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD the remarks of Hon. Joseph Irwin France, ex-Senator from Maryland, at the meeting opening his presidential campaign at his home, Mount Ararat Farms, Port Deposit, Md., July 11, 1931.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is a worthy tradition, too often violated in these days of decadent politics, that no man should be permitted either to seek or to refuse the highest office in the gift of this Republic.

If there were any permanent reward for earthly glory any man might be excused for a consuming ambition to have his name recorded as one who had occupied this office. But the brief annals of this Republic bear testimony that no man is revered or even long remembered merely because he has been President of the United States. Is George Washington remembered because he was once the President? Is Jefferson, John Adams, John Quincy Adams, or Abraham Lincoln? The glory of John Quincy Adams is not that he was President but that, after he retired from the presidential office, he accepted an election to the House of Representatives, where, through 10 momentous years, against apostates from the faith and repudiators of the covenant, he waged valiant battle in defense of constitutional principles; for the "unalienable right" of the sovereign people to petition their Government. And, then, forspent in the service of God and liberty, upon the floor of that House, with the words, "It is the last of earth. I am content," he died, an immortal. No office added luster to these names. Rather these men, by their words and works, shed glory upon their offices and remain forever a priceless heritage of the Republic. We may not hope to reach the stature of these illustrious ones, but it is the high privilege of every one of us to stand steadfast with these, in absolute fidelity to the principles of the Republic.

My only ambition is to be a defender of the covenant, to prove faithful to this Nation which is the expression of truth and the will of God in an institution of human government.

CANDIDACY OF PRINCIPLES

In a spiritual sense, I am not presenting, advocating, nor seeking to advance a mere personal candidacy. I offer myself as an instrument through whom there shall be presented to the people of these United States, for reelection, those principles of the moral order which are the substance of our Government.

THE AMERICAN SYSTEM

For centuries mankind accepted the doctrine of the divine right of kings to exercise sovereignty without the consent of the governed. Thus any liberty granted the subject people was a gracious concession by the monarch and not a right inherent, unalienable, bestowed by God. This doctrine of divine right of kings led to the system of imperialism and militarism and the assertion of imperial power by war. The world was in arms not to defend but to deny to mankind their unalienable rights. Force, not justice, ruled.

No single nation was guilty of causing the last terrible conflict which has all but wrecked the world. It was the inevitable culmination of centuries of that imperialistic militarism, which is a defiance of the moral order. This war was not a war of nation against nation only. It was a war of nations against the moral government of God. In such a conflict there could be no victor. All must suffer a terrible defeat and pay most grevious penalties.

The American system rests upon the truth that the only sovereign over man is the Creator, that men are endowed by their Creator with the unalienable rights of self-sovereignty and liberty; that government is but the agent and instrument of the sovereign people, whose power is absolute subject only to constitutions which prevent the invasion of unalienable rights. Holding that neither one government nor all governments combined may invade the unalienable rights of men, the American system of diplomacy may not be party to or approve treaties or agreements which are an invasion of such rights. The American system posits the great truth that the rights of men are paramount to the rights of government.

FIDELITY TO PRINCIPLE

All true and informed Americans believe that the American system provides an infallible instrument of precision, effective and beneficent, by which the conduct of individuals and the course of nations may be directed with exactitude toward proper ends and worthy destinies.

Prosperity, tranquillity, safety, concord, the general welfare, technical and spiritual peace, national order, and orderly international concert are the legitimate consequences of a course plotted in implicit obedience to this chart of moral government.

There has not been for several decades a public man in these United States who would dare question these self-evident truths. Yet, to-day, the whole American system is in peril because while public men pay lip service to these declarations they have transgressed them in their legislation and repudiated them in their diplomacy. There does not exist any statesman or any collection of statesmen whose single or combined intellects could plot a safe and proper course in such a world storm as we have experienced since 1914 without recourse to such an instrument of precision as is to be found in the American system. This Nation and the world have drifted to this perilous position because our statesmen, self-sufficient in small opinion, have been apostate from these truths, repudiators of these principles. They became too practical to be moral. The only outstanding statesman of the period, Woodrow Wilson, declared for these principles at the outbreak of Europe's war. He reaffirmed them during its course, but upon our entrance into the war he consented to their abandonment. Toward the close of the war, in his plea for a just and merciful peace, he reaffirmed them. But again, in Europe under the influence of the statesmen of the empires, he once more abandoned them.

No American statesman can formulate or put into operation any rational, consistent, comprehensive, constructive policy or formulate a worthy diplomacy without an absolute fidelity and obedience at every time, in every crisis, to these great principles.

ERA OF REPUDIATION

It is impossible, in my brief time, to trace the continuous repudiation of the vital principles of our American system during these recent years of stress. It is enough to state that during the war, largely under the domination of foreign influences, we abandoned democracy and established a virtual autocracy. In violation of the very fundamental principles of sovereignty of the people, alien-hearted leaders and those alienated by them from fidelity to the Constitution, enacted the espionage act, a tyrannical measure, which was a flagrant violation of our Bill of Rights. Perhaps no single act in our history ever struck a more deadly blow against our institutions. It subverted our system. It ended free discussion, intimidated the sovereign people, stripped them of their sovereignty and transferred the sovereignty from the people and the States to the Government at Washington. The Federal Government, made immune from criticism, then embarked upon ill-considered policies of radical socialism and there was created a swollen and inefficient socialistic bureaucracy. The leaders established dictatorships, meddled with industry, muddled with price fixing, tampered with the normal operation of natural economic law, and flagrantly violated supreme Federal law. They commandeered railroads, sought to seize the telegraph wires and cables, and attempted to set up censorship of the press.

The inevitable result of this departure from the established principles of our Government was a loss by this Republic of a measure of confidence and respect at home and diminished prestige before the nations of the world. This period of unconstitutional action is the source of our domestic strife and is responsible for the prolongation of the world's disorganization. The full and effective application of the doctrines of the American system, through wise conservative, constructive diplomacy, would have averted a peace pact of vengeance and violence and the resultant period of destructive "war after war." It would have achieved through gentle persistency international reconciliation and the establishment of an effective international cooperation and concert for the more prompt rehabilitation of the world.

THE NATIONAL CRISIS

We face a grave political crisis. Our decision now concerning national problems and international relationships shall determine whether we shall rush recklessly on upon our present course to the unknown and uncomputed perils of a continued disregard for principles, for the Constitution, and for laws; whether we shall adopt political opportunism as a permanent policy; whether we shall accept that sinister philosophy that the end justifies the means; or whether we shall turn with loathing from these political husks, fit only for swine, and go back to our home, back to the faith of our fathers, back to the reacceptance and reaffirmation of the great principles of liberty which, so long as they be not disregarded by the people, by the legislatures, and by the courts, will insure to ourselves and to our sons and, with the passage of the years, to all men everywhere, the unspeakable blessings of freedom.

I shall attempt to suggest some of the policies which must be adopted for the revival and restoration of the American system at home and for its beneficent operation for reconciliation between the nations, for world rehabilitation, prosperity, and enduring peace.

RESTORE THE REPUBLIC

There must be a restoration of the Republic, with its sovereign people secure in their "unalienable rights," with the several States secure and integral in the sovereignty delegated to them by the people, and with the Federal Government strong in its delegated, but strictly limited powers, and with its three coordinate branches—legislative, executive, and judicial—freed from the recent tendency toward encroachment of one upon the other, against which George Washington warned us. This is the "form and substance" of government which preserves liberty by a limitation of powers and a division of function and authority, preventing that consolidation of powers in one office which constitutes despotism.

LET LEGISLATORS LEGISLATE

We should condemn, as tending to subvert our Government, the vicious practice by which legislation has been drafted in the executive departments and then forced by means of threats, intimidation, or other methods of coercion by the Executive upon the legislative branch of the Government, which should represent the people. We hold that in a free government legislation must originate with and arise from the people, rather than with a powerful and perhaps autocratic Executive, to be imposed, through the power of patronage, upon the people.

There must be an end to that disrespect of the legislative branch of our Government which was fostered by the arbitrary Executive department during the war. The people of the United States should realize that the American system rests upon faith in the ultimate wisdom of the people and the legislators who represent them. More wisdom will be found in the combined minds of the legislative body than in the single mind of the Chief Executive. Grave injury was done our country when the Executive, in a spirit of encroachment, taught the people to distrust Congress and look to the President. The people must direct the legislative, and the legislative must, in proper measure, direct the Executive. Let us not move in the direction of monarchy and tyranny. Dictators are always incompetent and usually corrupt.

CURB EXECUTIVE POWER

We must contemplate, with a deep concern for the safety of our country and a high determination and resolve to resist to the uttermost, the recent enormous growth of Executive power, tending toward tyranny. We pledge ourselves to oppose the election to high office of any man, of whatever party, who would advocate measures the tendency of which would be to enhance or to buttress Executive authority.

I believe it should be the duty of the President to sign bills passed by the Congress and that the President should not exercise his power of veto upon legislation except upon constitutional grounds. Congress should never pass unsound measures hoping for a presidential veto. Its Members must resist temporary popular clamor for unsound measures. I believe, moreover, that no President should turn aside from his high and responsible duties to manipulate politics for his own renomination by appointing chairmen of party committees, and seeking to be dictator of his party organization. Party organizations should be free to approve or condemn a President, who should never seek to be the master, but be content to be the servant of his party.

REPEAL AUTOCRATIC STATUTES

We demand the careful study and revision or repeal of all statutes which have lodged with executive officials large discretionary powers, and further demand the immediate termination of personal and arbitrary government, government by commissions issuing edicts and promulgating regulations, as distinguished from government by clear and definite statutes enacted by the Congress under powers clearly granted by our Constitution; statutes in harmony with the letter and spirit of our institutions, to be enforced impartially against all offenders, rich and poor, alike.

END SPY SYSTEM

We demand an end to the taxing of the people for the payment of swarms of Federal spies, agents, and special officers, who may become parasites, blackmailers, sappers of political morality, a menace to liberty.

The present practice of Government spies acting as agents to provoke crime is repugnant to free institutions. It is the instrument of tyranny.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

We demand economy and efficiency in all governmental departments as a step in the direction of a rehabilitation of our national finance. But we hold that economy and efficiency can not be secured without a thorough, drastic reorganization of the executive departments, with such a retrenchment of expenditures as is not now contemplated. In the executive branch of the Government the reduplication of work, competition and conflicts between departments, bureaus, and divisions, the overlapping of functions, and the unscientific divisions of authority are not only preventing prompt executive action but they are enormously increasing that extravagance and waste which are becoming so notorious and scandalous. This deplorable lack of a rational organization of the executive branch of the Government was aggravated by the war, and it has resulted during the last decade in the wastage of many millions of dollars of the people's money. Our vast lump-sum appropriations, the making of which is a vicious practice, tending toward wastage and the augmentation of executive power, have brought about further demoralization in the executive departments.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP

We should stand opposed to every measure which takes sovereign power from the people and transfers it permanently to government. Progressives as to purpose should be conservative as to method. Otherwise they may lose when they seek to gain and regress when they would progress. I stand unalterably opposed to every form of Federal government ownership.

ECONOMY AND TAXATION

Increase in cost of Government carries with it decrease of liberty. As governments become expensive, they become oppressive. Reduce your taxes and you will increase your liberty. Give the bureaucrats all the appropriations they demand and they will transform your government into a bureaucratic monster which will be your master. An administration, thoroughly devoted to the American system of a Federal government of strictly limited powers, could have reduced our last Budget by about $1,000,000,000, simplified governmental operation, increased its efficiency, and restored a large measure of our liberty.

RAILROADS

Our railroads constitute at once the principal arteries of our national life and the chief foundation of our financial structure. The railroads' problem is a vital one. They require public support and every possible consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The growing competition by other means of transportation has already reached severe proportions. Every reasonable latitude should be given to the railroads in whatever proper efforts they may make to organize all agencies of transport into a unified and effective system. When occasion may arise I shall discuss this problem more in detail.

THE SHERMAN LAW

I believe that there should be reasonable modifications of the Sherman antitrust law to permit proper and moral cooperation in the industrial field. Certainly there are industries, such as that of oil, where ruthless competition is hastening the exhaustion of a limited and vitally important natural resource. We hope that we have entered upon a new era of cooperation—industrial, commercial, and international. To attempt to restore ruinous competition in the field of railroads and public utilities would be reactionary and ridiculous. Private ownership with reasonable but not too burdensome regulations is in harmony with the trend of events. Punishment for the least collusion for the exploitation of the people should be swift and severe. But cooperation under proper regulation is in the interest of capital, labor, and consumer.

THE TARIFF

Commerce between nations must always partake of the nature of barter or the payment for goods with goods. The nation which will not buy may not sell. Tariff walls have blocked the normal movements of international commerce. Both of the major American parties stood in the last campaign for a reasonable protective tariff to equalize the cost of production, due largely to a difference in wage here and abroad. But a prohibitive tariff is destructive, and many of the schedules in the present law are unreasonable and require revision.

Not only have we by this measure checked imports beyond the safety point, but while we were asking the nations to pay their debt, interest, and obligations to us, we have in certain instances absolutely prohibited importations, as in the case of wines from France. Moreover, we have placed heavy burdens of taxation upon our people to put our Government into the shipping business, thus reducing the power of England, France, and Germany to pay us with services of ocean transportation for our passengers and freight. We conduct the shipping business at a loss, to prevent them making a profit. I believe that this policy of thus curtailing this import of shipping service by the debtor nations is unprofitable to us and unjust to them. We enter a highly competitive field, losing money ourselves and reducing the general profits of the whole shipping industry to a point which is unfavorable to efficient service.

EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

The same men, the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, who recommended and insisted upon the iniquitous espionage act, after strengthening that act in 1918, brought forward the resolution providing for the submission of the eighteenth amendment.

This is no time for discussion of the nature, constitutionality, expediency, results, or methods used for the adoption of the eighteenth amendment. I stand for the immediate repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

The question of prohibition, local or national, is not essentially or finally involved in the question of this amendment. Repeal it and the sovereign people of these United States, with their full constitutional sovereignty restored, will possess the power, under the orderly constitutional processes of local, State, or Federal legislative action, to deal with the question of prohibition as they shall decide. There is hence no moral question involved in the eighteenth amendment except the question as to whether the principles of popular sovereignty under the original Constitution are moral; whether the people are morally qualified for self-government; whether government by government or the self-sovereignty of men, through the instrumentality of constitutional government, is in conformity with universal moral law.

The argument presented before the Supreme Court that the eighteenth amendment is not an amendment but a statute enacted by a new, unconstitutional, and perilous method of legislation remains unanswered and is unanswerable. The eighteenth amendment is not an alteration of the framework of government, reallocating power, changing the method by which the sovereign will of the people may be exercised. It is an extinction of the people's sovereign power. It is the first step, by constitutional change, in the direction of the destruction of constitutional popular sovereignty.

THE WORLD WAR

There are but few who have any conception of the magnitude of the world crisis and its cause. Most commentators hold that in the autumn of 1929 we entered upon one of those periods of recession and depression which seem to follow regularly upon a period of expansion and prosperity. This is not true. Since the outbreak of the European war the world has been progressing steadily in the direction of bankruptcy and economic disintegration. The conditions throughout the world have been growing steadily worse since the armistice was signed. The period of relative prosperity and advancing stock prices which we witnessed here from 1924 to 1929 obscured our vision as to the true situation.

We have witnessed the first World War, the first modern war, I believe, that our just God must judge a transgression with due consideration for the period and circumstances of its commitment. That which might be judged but a serious sin at the very dawn of the age of reason becomes a monstrous crime in the full noontide of man's enlightenment.

The World War was hence the most monstrous and universal transgression of history. It was necessary for this Nation to enter the war to end a situation which violated all law and imperiled all government.

But, it seems, the transgression by war was not enough. The agonized peoples longed for peace. But the assembled governments adopted a policy which has given us 12 years of "war after the war," and this has probably cost more misery, wrought more ruin, and destroyed more lives than the years of actual combat. Can this "war after the war" be ended before the whole economic structure of the world collapses?

After the armistice, as now, the supreme need was for genuine peace; the immediate liquidation of all prejudice and hatred, the renunciation of every policy of vengeance; an honorable confession of general guilt; contrite repentance; mutual forgiveness; true reconciliation; and the establishment of an effective international concert for the rehabilitation and lasting peace of the world. This involves painful sacrifices not only by the guilty but by those best able to bear such sacrifices. It involves a final renunciation of war, disarmament, and the liquidation or cancellation of the debts of nation to nation; the establishment of a new era of conservative, constructive internationalism.

This great upheavel of war may mark the culmination of the old dispensation of force and the dawn of the new age of reason, justice, righteousness.

THE WORLD DEFICIT

It is probable that the financial loss through war should be capitalized at more than one-half a thousand billions of dollars, a sum approximately five times the estimated pre-war wealth of the United States.

In 1912 the debts of the nations were forty-three billions. In 1921 they had mounted to four hundred billions. There was added by this increase in debt a fixed interest charge of about fifteen billions annually. Add to this another five billions for the care of the disabled and orphaned and two and one-half billions for increased expenditure for military purposes and we have an apparent increase of twenty-two and one-half billions in the world's annual expenditure. We might properly add to this deficit the sum of five billions representing the former annual production, at the rate of $500 each, of ten millions of men killed in war. Our apparent deficit is then twenty-seven and one-half billions annually.

In order to meet these increased annual expenses and losses it would be necessary for the world to produce all that it produced before the war and then, in addition, an amount three times the annual value of all the products of American farms in the pre-war years. No sane man can contend that postwar production has yet approximated that of the pre-war period, if he surveys conditions in Europe, particularly in England, Germany, and Russia. It was demonstrated by the mathematical reasoning of the best economists that pre-war production could not be restored without a comprehensive and constructive plan for world-wide rehabilitation. It was proven that the debts of nation to nation would disorganize, if it did not paralyze, the normal functioning of international trade. Is it strange that the world fiscal situation should be marked by repeated crises of economic distress, political unrest, and actual revolution? An all but bankrupt world is now spending $5,000,000,000 annually for armaments while there are about 15,000,000 of unemployed involving an additional loss at the rate of at least seven and a half billion dollars annually, a loss in these two items at the rate of twelve and a half millions yearly, or in excess of $333,000,000 each day. Russia is in default on her debt and, without vast credits from abroad, any kind of government there must have been in default as the war had exhausted her liquid capital. The debt of France rose to about 72 per cent of her pre-war wealth. The debt of England reached about 50 per cent of her pre-war wealth, and England has only been able to meet her obligations by burdens and sacrifices which would have crushed a less heroic people. Her annual losses, as a result of the war debts and postwar unemployment, are staggering and are being met by ruinous capital levies upon the estates of the living and the dead. The annual reparations, at first assessed against Germany, exceeded her total pre-war income and would have impoverished a nation as rich as the United States.

GERMANY

The attempt of a coalition of governments to extort the whole cost of the war from Germany by the virtual enslavement of her people and the cynical and cruel policy of "letting the Russians stew in their own juice" constitute two of the monstrous immoralities of this "war after the war." The resulting chaos and agony past, present, and to come must be charged to and paid for, perhaps even yet more dearly, by the allied governments. We, who expected immunity, from every economic penalty for the world's transgression, have begun to suffer here. In this lies the only hope for a comprehensive plan for world restoration.

At the close of the war one farsighted commentator said that Germany was the outpost against communism and that, to save capitalism, the capitalists of the world must go to her rescue. Germany performed her functions and achieved her pre-war importance only by a national organization of incredible efficiency. The war destroyed this organization. The German leaders, after the war, urged upon the German people the policy of "fulfillment," because they hoped that, when the hatreds of war had subsided, the common sense and interests of the world would compel the conviction that to enslave and destroy Germany would be to invite general ruin. They thus displayed a commendable faith in the moral order and in the essential moral nature of all peoples. While dawning reason has brought some scant appreciation of Germany's peril and some grudging reduction in the impossible and cruel reparations, public men have not yet had the honesty and courage to face and acknowledge the terrible plight of the German people. She has met her public payments by huge private borrowings and the end of this is in sight. There is not the slightest indication, in her trade balances, of the least hope that, when she can no longer thus borrow, she will be able to meet her reparation obligations.

Exclusive of all direct reparation payments, Germany's losses and payments have already been colossal. The losses in capital and of her capitalists have been enormous. Her loss of ships amounted to, perhaps, $6,000,000,000. Her African colonies alone, embracing an area one-third that of the United States, represented a value of some $25,000,000,000. Her colonies, other than African, covered 94,200 square miles. These colonies, in the main, most constructively administered, afforded an important overflow area for her pressing population and her products and she was actively extending civilization among the backward peoples. Her loss of upper Silesia was serious. The loss of her foreign investments, the prostration of Russia, her best customer, the disorganization of her industries, the intensified competition against her merchant marine, have all involved huge collateral losses. Had she retained her empire, Germany might, in time, have been in a position to earn and pay a moderate reparation, but now there seems to be no possibility of her doing so.

THE PROPOSED MORATORIUM

The President is to be congratulated upon making a move toward even a temporary moratorium in reparation and debt interest payments.

One of my purposes in entering this contest was to urge the immediate and imperative necessity for steps to avert the world disaster which was threatened by the impending collapse of Germany's economic life. It is particularly gratifying that the President has acted after all hope of any such action by him had been practically abandoned by those who, during the years through which he was Secretary of Commerce and during his term as President, have realized the conditions and have been pleading for some policy which would relieve the desperate plight of Germany and Europe. From January, 1919, for nearly four years, especially during the Harding administration, I was urging upon the Senate, the President, and certain members of the Cabinet, the necessity for a comprehensive plan looking to the reduction or liquidation of the punitive reparations and the debts of nation to nation.

If the proposed moratorium is a measure of expediency for mere temporary relief it can not be productive of permanent good and it may be followed by unfortunate consequences. By giving a false sense of security it might encourage an unjustified optimism which could result in a sudden revival of speculation and productive activity which would be builded upon insecure foundations. It has been apparent, since the armistice, that there must be a final settlement of this whole question. The debts of nation to nation must ultimately be charged off to profit and loss. It should be done as promptly as possible but such cancellation must be conditioned upon full disarmament and the establishment of a new order of international relationships through such concert as would insure prosperity and permanent peace.

If this move of the President is part of a comprehensive plan for international concert, it marks a great step forward in human history.

But such a comprehensive plan must, I repeat, express sound principles of moral action. The moral law is as absolute as the mathematical. Nations whose course is directed only by sudden inspiration and unsupported opinion are as certain to be wrecked as ships navigated without mathematics and the stars.

RUSSIA

It must be evident, in view of the enormous increase in the world's deficit, that there must be a commensurate increment to the world's income. This can be had only by an increase in wealth production in the hitherto relatively backward and unproductive countries. The most important of these are China, Africa, India, and Russia. The Chinese situation is complicated. India is yet difficult. The unfoldment of Africa, with her primitive peoples, must be slow. The conclusion, then, is unescapable that Russia, the possessor of the world's greatest store of natural resources, must perform a most important part in the restoration of the world to solvency. The effective cooperation between Russia, with her stupendous undeveloped resources, and the United States, with her progressive and moral political system, her natural wealth, her huge industrial productive capacity, and her available liquid capital, would result in a swift advance of both these countries and the inauguration of a new era of prosperity throughout the world.

Certainly there can be no return of the world to prosperity, or even to relative solvency, while Russia is prostrated, isolated, and not performing her normal function as the largest, most central, and absolutely indispensable organ in the world economy.

The attempt of her people to upbuild Russia under the pressure of the 5-year plan, involving as it does nameless sacrifices of comfort, health, and life, constitutes an epic in heroism unsurpassed in the annals of mankind. Russia has been suffering from famine for 10 terrible years. Yet, although she even now might properly be importing grain, her people, denied sufficient bread, consent to grain exports in order that there may be purchased the goods and machinery for the country's modernization.

Russia desperately needs not only horses and cattle but foodstuffs, fertilizer, agricultural implements, tractors, builders' supplies, electrical machinery, telephones, machines, tools, road-building equipment, business machines, typewriters, automobiles, trucks, steel, cars, locomotives, cotton and wool, boots and shoes, and countless other commodities.

Economists have held that the recent marvelous financial and industrial development of the United States has been due to the establishment of the huge new automobile industry, which has been a fresh creator of national wealth. New wealth creates more new wealth. What a tremendous impetus would be given to world economy by throwing the wealth of Russia into gear with the world's financial mechanism. If she should begin to buy on a scale commensurate with her resources the world-wide problem of unemployment would be solved. Industry would spring into life and the foundation would be established for a sound prosperity. Such an economic revival would prove the wisdom of a sincere spiritual reconciliation and a peace based upon moral law.

I have never favored nor do I now favor the recognition of Russia in advance of mutually satisfactory settlements of all moral and financial questions at difference between the two countries. To recognize Russia before reaching satisfactory agreements would work injury to the cause of normal moral international relationships. To refuse all discussions with Russia is a violation of the sound principles of American diplomacy as established when George Washington was President and Thomas Jefferson Secretary of State. And Russia remains the major factor in the problem of reconstruction.

OVERPRODUCTION FALLACY

What solution can the principle of "unalienable rights" and the moral law offer for the problem of overproduction and unemployment? Some are questioning the validity of moral law. To work, to produce, is moral. But there seems to be a limitation and penalty upon such moral action if man's industry is to result in overproduction, unemployment, and distress.

Cecil Rhodes uttered profound truth when he declared, "Civilization is goods." I suggest that there may be a law by which overindustrialization is designed to extend the boundaries of civilization. As nations conform to moral law, they become civilized, organized, and overindustrialized. There has been, hence, a severe competition between the advanced nations for markets in which to sell their surplus goods. Under a proper world organization, through an international concert, it would become evident that the nations should not ruthlessly compete for existent markets, but that they should cooperate for the development of new markets, not only in the interest of trade, but in compliance with their duty to extend the dominion of religion and civilization. A new realization, by the advanced nations, that all of the aboriginal and backward peoples of the earth should be considered as wards, under their tutelage and stewardship, would bring about a complete change in the world's economic life. The work of the missionary would then be supplemented by the engineer, the exporter, the importer. The spread of civilization would progress rapidly and systematically. The moral and the commercial, never separable, would be consciously united. We have mechanical engineers for production; we need moral engineers for effective, profitable distribution of the goods necessary for the development of world-wide civilization.

Is it moral to limit production with more than a billion of mankind, two-thirds of the race, hungry, half naked, destitute of decent domiciles, medicines, schools, books, the ideals, and the goods which embody the ideals, of civilization. My plan for a concert of nations provides: For "the laws of partnership and cotenancy among the nations; and, as between States and their respective colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, the analogies of the laws of conservatorship, guardianship, and trusteeship; methods for the advancement of the peoples of colonies; to promote cooperation among the more advanced nations for the improvement and advancement of the backward countries and territories, particularly those of Africa and parts of Asia, by the formulation of plan for the reclamation of waste land, for the utilization of natural resources, including water powers, for wise colonization, for the promotion of education and the spread of civilization throughout the world."

WHEAT MARKETS

There is no overproduction, but a world-wide shortage of food and goods. The underconsumption of foodstuffs is not only alarming from the standpoint of the health of peoples, but the widespread hunger is a menace to the stability of all government.

Even in the United States a year of business depression, like 1920, reduces our consumption of wheat by 250,000,000 bushels. With grain prices demoralized there is a critical shortage of foodstuffs in the world. E. M. East estimates that, as it requires 2½ acres to support each individual, 37,000,000 of additional acres must be added to the world's cultivated area to take care of each year's addition to the world's population. This would mean an increase, for the 16 years, since the war began, of about 592,000,000 of acres to take care of normal population growth. There has been no such vast additional acreage, or any substantial fraction of it, thrown into cultivation during this period. So the actual famine in China and Russia, the acute hunger in Germany, and the serious undernourishment of other peoples are not difficult to explain. The disorganized world finances cause an impoverishing plethora of food and goods in one place while desperate needs prevails in another.

With at least 15,000,000 of men unemployed the world-wide curtailment of grain consumption reaches an enormous figure. In Germany even the employed are not able to buy sufficient food. Russia is dumping wheat because of her desperate need for current funds. Her grain production is at least 20 per cent, probably much more, below her pre-war production. There is great suffering from hunger in Russia and an almost unlimited internal demand for food.

In 1920, when I was a member of the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate, we had this same problem of demoralized grain prices, and I advocated then an international financial plan for selling the grain to the countries where hunger was most acute. Whenever food prices are demoralized it is safe to say that millions more have been added to the hundreds of millions of mankind who are never free from the gnawing pangs of hunger.

DISARMAMENT

I have said that the American system stands opposed to militarism. Armaments do not protect against but rather invite aggression. We believe in the rule of reason and justice.

While it is true that the huge, unprecedented current appropriations of the United States for warlike purposes, $1,600,000,000, might seem to indicate that we have been persuaded to a permanent policy of European militarism, it shall not be so.

The men and women of America do not yet realize the extent of our warlike preparations and that America, destined by God to be a leader toward peace and justice, now stands forth by such huge expenditures as the advocate of those policies of brutality, hate, and war which have all but wrecked the world.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

I was one of the "irreconcilable" Republicans who opposed the peace pact of Paris, with its oppressive, cruel, punitive provisions and its plan for a League of Nations. I am now opposed to our entrance into the League of Nations as constituted, because its purposes are alien to our own. Our membership in such a league would subordinate the principles of the American system of government to those of European systems. The League of Nations gave no pledge of an application of the American doctrine of "unalienable rights," and it established a new coalition of nations resting upon a final appeal to force. Our association in the League of Nations would have transgressed the principles expounded by George Washington. A sound American policy demands that we be neither implicated by "artificial ties" in the politics of Europe nor isolated from sympathetic, constructive cooperation and active benevolent friendship with it.

CONCERT OF NATIONS

With strict regard for the purposes and established diplomatic principles of our American system and, seeking a constructive application of them to the international situation at the close of the war, I was able to develop and propose an American measure as a substitute for the League of Nations. This was embodied in a resolution presented to the Senate on February 26, 1920. It provided for international cooperation, not like the League of Nations, for the preservation of territorial integrity and the status quo, but for the preservation of the integrity of inalienable rights, for the formulation of such a plan "for the advancement of justice, liberty, and the general welfare as would commend itself to the great liberal spirit of the age and the new enlightened conscience of mankind." This plan for a "concert of nations," which was to be voluntary, constructive, and effective, making its final appeal to justice, contains, with its collateral measures, a clear exposition of the international policy required to meet the post-war and the present political and economic situation. These measures express my conception of the function and mission of the American system of government, not only in the present crisis but as a constant factor in world advancement. Three fundamental requirements must be met by any plan for international cooperation which is to be acceptable to the United States: (1) It must be cooperation for the defense of "unalienable rights"; (2) it must be a voluntary association which does not make the United States a subordinate, constituent part of a supergovernment composed of nations with ideals and purposes alien to our own; (3) it must be a concert whose powers are advisory only, one which looks to disarmament and the abolishment of all recourse to force in the settlement of international disputes, and its aim must be the promotion of justice, liberty, peace, world progress.

The "concert of nations" which I propose would consider: The common and mutual interests and the social and economic relations of the states and peoples of the world as naturally and necessarily united for mutual aid and benefit; recommend such projects of uniformity and reciprocity in the action of states as would enable them to cooperate for the general welfare; and formulate a body of international law based on the security of the rights of the individual as the prime function of all government.

It would be proper for this Republic to be the leader in the formation of such a voluntary world federation. In discussing the principles of federation, Madison declared: "America can claim the merit of making the discovery of the basis of unmixed and extensive republics." And, "Is it not the glory of the people of America that while they have paid a decent regard to the opinions of former times and other nations, they have not suffered a blind veneration for antiquity, for customs, or for names to overrule the suggestions of their own good sense, the knowledge of their own situation, and the lessons of their own experience? * * * They reared the fabrics of governments which have no model on the face of the globe. They formed the design of a great confederacy which it is incumbent on their successors to improve and perpetuate." It would ill become us here, where by the wise application of the principle of federation we have founded an empire of sovereign States, to deny the possibility of the extension of these principles to secure international cooperation for the liberation and elevation of all men everywhere.

Faithful to that sacred covenant made with the God of nations by our fathers when kneeling upon the bleak and inhospitable shore of this new, discovered continent, they dedicated this land to justice, to liberty, and to him, let us move forward summoning the world to a reconsecration to the law of love, reacceptation of the truth of brotherhood, to a larger application of the principles of federation.

By mild persistence, by gentle but insistent persuasion our American diplomacy should lead the nations to an enlightened, wise, healing, and upbuilding plan of international effort and concert for a new world order.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution passed by Richard E. Bentley Post, No. 442, American Legion, of Horseheads, N. Y., favoring the adherence of the United States of America to the Permanent Court of International Justice, and a similar resolution from Captain Clarence R. Oliver Post, No. 145, of Elmira, N. Y.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution on the World Court passed by Richard E. Bentley Post, No. 442, Horseheads, N. Y., the American Legion, department of New York, April 11, 1932

Resolved, That Richard E. Bentley Post, No. 442, of Horseheads, N. Y., favors adherence of the United States of America to the Permanent Court of International Justice, and that the chairman of the foreign relations committee of Chemung County be directed to ask the department headquarters to advise the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate of the fact of our support of such adherence, and express to them our earnest desire that the three protocols of adherence transmitted to the Senate by President Hoover with his message of December 10, 1930, be favorably and promptly reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and duly ratified by the Senate.

Resolution on the World Court passed by Captain Clarence R. Oliver Post, No. 154, Elmira Heights, N. Y., the American Legion, department of New York, April 11, 1932

Resolved, That Captain Clarence R. Oliver Post, No. 154, of Elmira Heights, N. Y., favors adherence of the United States of America to the Permanent Court of International Justice, and that the chairman of the foreign relations committee of Chemung County be directed to ask the department headquarters to advise the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate of the fact of our support of such adherence, and express to them our earnest desire that the three protocols of adherence transmitted to the Senate by President Hoover with his message of December 10, 1930, be favorably and promptly reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and duly ratified by the Senate.

ELIMINATION OF USELESS GOVERNMENTAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill providing for the reorganization, consolidation, and suspension of useless activities of the executive branch of the Federal Government. I ask that the bill may be printed in the RECORD for the information of Senators and that I may be allowed to make a brief statement at this time in explanation of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, at the risk of repeating countless statements that have been heretofore made on the floor of the Senate, I believe that the explanation which I am about to make of the reasons for and the purposes of the bill I am introducing is necessary and desirable in order that Members of the Senate may be advised with respect thereto.

President, and later Chief Justice, Taft, was the first President within recent years to seriously consider the necessity of reorganization and consolidation of activities of the executive branch of the Government. During the first two years of his administration as President, Congress allowed him an aggregate of approximately $200,000 for investigation and study of the administrative business of the executive branch of the Government. He appointed a committee on economy and efficiency, composed of F. A. Cleveland, chairman, W. F. Willoughby, W. W. Warwick, Frank J. Goodnow, and M. O. Chance to make a study and report on the subject. Mr. Goodnow was the author of a standard work on administrative law in the United States and is a professor in Columbia University. W. F. Willoughby had served as a professor at Princeton University, auditor for Porto Rico, financial adviser to the Chinese Government, is now director of the Institute of Government Research, and is the author of numerous monographs and books on various activities or bureaus of the executive departments of the Government. Judge Warwick had been secretary to President Taft when he was a judge in Cleveland, Ohio; had served as a law clerk in the office of the former Comptroller of the Treasury, and later became Comptroller of the Treasury. When that office was abolished he served for a time with the Bureau of the Budget and is now general counsel to the Federal Employees' Compensation Commission. Mr. Chance afterwards became postmaster in Washington, and I understand has since retired from the Government service. Mr. Cleveland, the chairman, was an accomplished student of government. The monumental report of this commission was transmitted to the Congress by President Taft's messages of April 4, 1912; May 6, 1912; June 27, 1912; and February 26, 1913, and is published as House Documents Nos. 670, 732, 854, and 1113, Sixty-second Congress.

These reports which President Taft recommended for the favorable consideration of the Congress urged the establishment of the Bureau of the Budget, the consolidation of the offices of the former accounting officers of the Treasury into one office and their separation from the executive branch of the Government. They also urged a provision for the retirement of superannuated Government employees and various other reforms. No action was taken on these reports for a number of years, but in 1921 Congress finally approved the recommendation for the establishment of a Budget Bureau and the creation of an accounting system independent of the spending agency. This was done in the act of June 10, 1921 (42 Stat. 23, 27). Congress also provided a method of retirement of superannuated Government employees, and in 1926 it carried out a part of the recommendation with respect to traveling expenses of civilian employees in the subsistence expense act of 1926. It also consolidated the Revenue Cutter Service and the Life Saving Service into the Coast Guard.

The point which I desire to expressly stress at this time is that President Taft proceeded to have a careful study made of the executive branch of the Government by men who were thoroughly experienced in the administrative details of the Government. He submitted that report to Congress, and it took from 9 to 14 years to carry out some of his recommendations, and some have not been approved to this day.

During the war the Congress conferred on the President authority to make certain reorganizations and consolidations. Section 8 of the act of March 3, 1917, provided that—

The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate duplication of service in the various executive departments and establishments of the Government, including bureaus and divisions, and make a report to the President thereon, and the President is hereby authorized, after such report shall have been made to him, wherever he finds such duplications to exist to abolish the same. Report of the action taken hereunder shall be made to Congress at its next regular session.

No action of any consequence was taken under this statute, and in the act of May 20, 1918 (40 Stat. 556), the President was authorized—

To make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act, and to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary, which regulations and orders shall be in writing and shall be filed with the head of the department affected and constitute a public record.

This was a war measure, and its authority could be exercised only in matters relating thereto. Of course, a war period is no time to make a careful study of the activities and duplications of work in the Government departments, and little, if anything, was accomplished under the 1917 and 1918 acts. It is to be noted that most of the recommendations submitted by President Taft which were approved in statutes to carry them out were not approved until after the war period.

By a joint committee on reorganization created under the joint resolution of December 17, 1920, a committee consisting of representatives of the Senate and House was directed to make a survey of the administrative service of the Government for the purpose of securing all pertinent facts concerning their powers and duties, their distribution among the several executive departments, and their overlapping and duplication of authority. It was further made the duty of this committee to determine what redistribution of activities should be made among the several services, with a view to the proper correlation thereof, so that each department should embrace only services having close relation with each other and ministering directly to the primary purpose for which they were maintained and operated. This committee consisted of Senators REED SMOOT, J. W. Wadsworth, jr., and PAT HARRISON, on behalf of the Senate, and CARL E. MAPES, H. W. TEMPLE, and R. Walton Moore on behalf of the House of Representatives. By a joint resolution of May 5, 1921, the President was authorized to designate a representative to cooperate with the committee and to serve as chairman thereof.

President Harding furnished the committee with a chart of the executive branch of the Government and designated Walter F. Brown, now Postmaster General, and this committee submitted a report which was printed as House Document No. 356, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, together with a draft of an omnibus bill to bring about what they considered to be the necessary reorganizations and consolidations. The bill was introduced in the House and a very thorough report thereon was made in House Document No. 937, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session; but, needless to say, the bill which this joint committee recommended did not become a law. It affected too many bureaus and interests which believed that the enactment of such a bill would be adverse to them.

During the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, there was introduced H. R. 4770, to establish a board to be known as the reorganization board, consisting of two Members of the Senate, two Members of the House, and a person to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to make a study of the reorganizations and consolidations needed in the administrative branch of the Government to bring about greater economy and efficiency in the operation thereof. This bill provided that upon the recommendation of the board the President was authorized to make the transfers and consolidations as he might deem proper. There were hearings on January 15, 1926, on this bill before the Committee on Rules of the House; but this bill, too, died a-borning.

During the present Congress there have been introduced many bills for the reorganization of the Government service. Some of these bills have proposed to delegate the authority to the President, while others have proposed to bring about the reorganization by means of statutes. We have been from December to the middle of April, and nothing constructive has been done to accomplish any reorganizations or consolidations in the executive branch of the Government, and it is perfectly evident that under the present procedure nothing would be accomplished if Congress should remain in session from now until the end of time.

The executive business of the Government is intricate and highly specialized. It can not be expected that Members of the Senate or the House, or both, can be sufficiently familiar with all the details of that business to originate the question whether a particular service should be consolidated with another or suspended. Moreover, committees in Congress and Members of Congress are importuned on behalf of every interest which might be affected by any reorganization or consolidation bill, and I must frankly state that the employees of these activities, assisted in many cases by trade associations, are capable and do create considerable sentiment against any Senator or Representative who presses for enactment legislation affecting them. As I have stated, the result is that nothing is accomplished, while the appropriations continue to mount for the expansion of paternalistic activities of the Government and the invasion of the rights of both States and individuals.

During a period of some 20 years the Congress has consistently refused to confer authority on the President alone to make consolidations and reorganizations of the public service except in the 1917 and 1918 acts, which I have cited. Nothing was done under those acts because of the war and possibly because the pressure of the bureaucrats on the President was not less than their pressure on the Members of Congress.

The bill which I have introduced would establish a commission or board to actually make the consolidations and reorganizations necessary and to suspend duplicating or unnecessary activities. This board consists of the President, the Speaker of the House, minority leader of the Senate, the Comptroller General, and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

At least the Comptroller General and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget are familiar with the detailed activities of the various bureaus and branches of the executive departments of the Government. They know the cost of such activities and to a large extent their duplication. They have under them large forces to assist them in securing necessary data, and the board may call upon the administrative officers affected to make a showing as to why their activities should not be suspended, curtailed, or consolidated either within the department or with similar activities in some other department. We may thus expect the same thoroughness which marked the work of President Taft's Commission on Economy and Efficiency. Under this proposed bill there will be two members of the executive branch of the Government and of the Republican Party. However, there will be two members of the Democratic Party, and we may safely assume that the Comptroller General, who occupies a nonpartisan office, will not be swayed by any political consideration in determining what should be done. In effect, the bill provides for a nonpartisan board and authorizes that board by a majority vote to actually reorganize and consolidate the administrative business of the executive branch of the Government and to suspend any useless, unnecessary, or wasteful activity. Congress has reserved the right to change by law anything that this committee may do. The needs of the country are desperate, and desperate remedies must be applied to meet the situation.

There may arise a question as to the constitutionality of such a statute, but Congress has delegated legislative power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix railroad rates and to the Tariff Commission and the President for fixing tariff rates. I see no reason why under the present circumstances Congress may not delegate its authority to make the reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government.

Furthermore, when this report is made as required, on or before December 15, 1932, Congress may then enact a bill ratifying all that has been done or providing in the bill for such changes in the work accomplished by the commission as may be deemed necessary and proper.

My plan has at least the merit of providing an expeditious method of the reorganization and consolidation of the activities of the executive branch of the Government. It also has the merit of authorizing the suspension of any activity except the ones named in the bill unless Congress should disapprove such action. It has the further merit of being nonpartisan and bringing to the task the same expert advice and assistance which President Taft had and which Congress has by piecemeal legislation largely adopted during the period of some 12 or more years.

The bill introduced by Mr. LOGAN (S. 4409) to provide for the reorganization and consolidation of the departments and independent establishments in the executive branch of the Government, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a committee on reorganization and consolidation of departments and independent establishments in the executive branch of the Government of the United States of America, herein and hereafter referred to as the committee, the membership of which by virtue of their respective offices shall be the President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the minority leader of the Senate, the Comptroller General of the United States, and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. It shall be the duty of the committee to make such reorganizations and consolidations in the departments and independent establishments of the executive branch of the Government as a majority of the committee may deem necessary or expedient. It shall be the duty of the committee, and power is hereby conferred upon it so to do, to suspend, until the law shall otherwise direct, any useless duplication and/or unnecessary activities, in the judgment or discretion of the committee, now authorized by law; but nothing herein shall authorize any transfers or consolidations or diminution of the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the General Accounting Office, the Federal Trade Commission, or the Federal Farm Board as now established by law. Nothing herein shall be construed to mean that the committee may not transfer to these four independent establishments, or any one or more of them, functions of existing agencies of the executive branch of the Government. The committee shall report in detail to the Seventy-second Congress not later than December 15, 1932, the reorganizations and consolidations effected by it and the activities suspended under authority herein conferred and the savings to the Government as the result thereof. The Congress reserves the right to disapprove by law whatever the committee may do under authority herein conferred.

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I desire to state that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and myself have offered a resolution relating to the contest of Heflin against Bankhead, and a report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections relating to the same matter. The resolution and report have been presented to the Senate. Perhaps some agreement should be entered into now with respect to the time when the matter will be taken up for consideration by the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, for the convenience of Senators, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, after the conclusion of the morning business, if there be morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution, and of any amendment thereto that may be offered, in the contest case of Heflin against Bankhead.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. I have conferred with the able Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and have considered the matter from the standpoint of legislation. The time suggested is perfectly agreeable, so far as I am able to decide the question myself.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the matter is one of privilege, and, in the absence of a unanimous-consent agreement, could be proceeded with at the pleasure of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator rise on this question?

Mr. BLACK. I rose on that question. As I understood, unanimous consent was given to take up the matter on Thursday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On Thursday, after the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. BLACK. I did not want to object. I simply wanted to concur in the desire that the matter be taken up as speedily as possible, and to express the regret that we could not consider it before that time.

Mr. BRATTON subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, on behalf of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and myself, to submit a resolution relating to the contest of J. Thomas Heflin against John H. Bankhead; also a report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections dealing with the same subject matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The report will be received and printed.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS—AMENDMENT OF THE RULES

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further bills or joint resolutions? If not, the introduction of concurrent and other resolutions is in order.

If there be no concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a motion coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] on April 14 entered a motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 26, changing the name of the Committee on Pensions to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and defining its jurisdiction.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I have agreed to let that matter go over until Wednesday morning, when I understand we will have a morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be passed over. The morning business is closed.

TAKING OF DEPOSITIONS UNDER WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 929. That is a bill providing for the taking of depositions in cases against the United States by veterans of the World War under the compensation act. The bill was reported favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary, and then, at the request of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania, was referred to the Finance Committee, which has since reported it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. It is Order of Business 498. I think it will take only a short time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Nebraska please repeat his request?

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 929, Order of Business No. 498.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I recall that in a colloquy a few days ago the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] let it be known that he was interested in this matter. I should dislike to consent to having it brought up at this time in his absence.

Mr. NORRIS. He was here just a moment ago.

Mr. McNARY. I have sent for him, and he will be here in just a moment.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have the Senator from Utah sent for, too, because they are the only two Members of the Senate that I have not converted, and it will not take me long to convert them if they are here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator will withhold his request for just a moment the two Senators who have been referred to will be able to reach the Chamber. Meanwhile I ask the Senator to yield to me for a unanimous-consent request. Will he withdraw his request for the moment?

Mr. NORRIS. I should dislike to have some other motion or request come up that would displace this one.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator will lay aside for a moment his request for a unanimous-consent agreement, in order that I may make one with regard to the calendar, I am sure we can work out the problem.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. I yield for that purpose.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a few days ago, when the Senate was considering the calendar under a unanimous-consent agreement to take up unobjected bills, we stopped at Order of Business 518, about the center of the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that when we enter upon the consideration of the calendar this morning we may start with Order of Business 518 and consider unobjected bills under Rule VIII.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to that request, assuming that it does not displace the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the only interest I have in the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NORRIS. With the understanding that my request will not be interfered with, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TAKING OF DEPOSITIONS UNDER WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT

Mr. NORRIS. I renew my request, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 498, Senate bill 929, relating to the taking of depositions in cases arising under section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska whether he is willing to accept the amendments that were put on by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President; I am not willing to accept them; and, if the Senator will permit me, I am satisfied that when I have a few minutes to explain to the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Utah the objections to the principal amendment which the committee has proposed they will agree with me that the amendment should be rejected. If the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania would sit down and read the evidence that I am going to produce shortly, I should be almost willing to abide by their decision.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hoped that it would be possible to agree on a time for taking up this matter. The Senator from Utah and I have to go back to the Committee on Finance in a few minutes to work on the tax bill, and it is extremely inconvenient to go into the consideration of the evidence in a matter of this kind.

Mr. NORRIS. When would the Senator suggest?

Mr. REED. Some day later this week.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that while he was absent, I think, the Senate agreed to a unanimous-consent request to take up the election contest from Alabama on Thursday.

Mr. REED. May we say 2 o'clock next Wednesday?

Mr. NORRIS. Any time on Wednesday that the Senator will agree to will be agreeable to me.

Mr. REED. Wednesday of this week?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; day after to-morrow.

Mr. REED. Would 4 o'clock be satisfactory?

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock on Wednesday of this week the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill. If that is agreed to, I will withdraw my former request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there are pending a number of appropriation bills. The consideration of an election contest has been agreed upon, and there is a program heretofore arranged by the steering committee. I am curious to know how long this matter will probably take, and how far it will go to disarrange the present plans.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests that it will take an hour. I do not think it will take an hour. When I get through I think the Senator from Pennsylvania is going to agree to my proposition.

Mr. REED. I think an hour will be ample, and probably half an hour will be enough. We ought to be able to lay aside the unfinished business for that long.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator's request is that we lay it aside temporarily?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. That is all right. I have no objection to laying aside the unfinished business temporarily in order that we may take up this matter for consideration at 4 o'clock on Wednesday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SAMUEL C. DAVIS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar is in order under the unanimous-consent agreement. The clerk will state the first bill on the calendar under the agreement heretofore made.

The first business on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement was the bill (S. 1705) for the relief of Samuel C. Davis, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$4,794.69" and insert "$4,725.32," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Samuel C. Davis the sum of $4,725.32, in full settlement of all claims against the Government arising out of a collision between the yacht Whiz and the United States Coast Guard plane OL–5 No. 1 in the harbor of New London, Conn., on June 21, 1930.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, referring to the bill previous to the one that we have just passed, Order of Business 513, Senate bill 3950, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill and have it pending at this time. The bill has not yet been reached. I merely wish to have the amendment printed and pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 96) to punish the sending through the mails of certain threatening communications was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is a penal measure and appears to be of considerable importance. I see that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] reported the bill without amendment. May I ask for an explanation of its provisions?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] is very much interested in this bill. He has been called from the Chamber, and he desires to have it go over during his absence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over on objection of the Senator from Oregon.

FUTURE TRADING IN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 103) to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the cost of maintaining the present system of future trading in agricultural products and to ascertain what classes of citizens bear such cost, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is an important measure. I request the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] to explain its provisions.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this is a consolidation of two joint resolutions—one introduced by myself as to the grain-futures market and another introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] as to cotton futures. It simply seeks information as to the operations of the future-trading division of the Department of Agriculture and does not entail an appropriation. The expense will be paid out of the appropriation that is available for the grain futures department. The farm organizations are very much interested in this resolution; they are anxious to have the information that we hope to have developed in this investigation. We had before our committee a representative of the Department of Agriculture, who assured us that the information could be had without any additional appropriation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kansas if the Department of Agriculture is engaged in future trading in agricultural products?

Mr. CAPPER. No, not at all; but it has supervision over future trading as conducted at the Chicago Grain Exchange and other grain markets.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. My question was prompted by a statement which the Senator from Kansas made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, how can these investigations be made without additional appropriations? I wish the Senator would let the matter go over at this time and obtain a letter from the Department of Agriculture saying that no additional appropriations will be asked for in order to carry out the terms of the measure.

Mr. CAPPER. Did the Senator from Tennessee read the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture that is printed on page 2 of the report?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I have not read it.

Mr. CAPPER. I call the Senator's attention to this statement of the Secretary of Agriculture:

> The cost of the proposed investigation is to be charged against funds appropriated for the enforcement of the grain futures act.

Then another paragraph which says:

> The information relative to trading in wheat futures could be obtained, I believe, through the agency of the Grain Futures Administration without additional funds, although it would require some readjustment in present plans. It might be necessary also to restrict the investigation in some particulars and to be content with less than a complete survey of all of the trading during the period specified.

The committee had before it the director of the grain-futures division; and when we inquired especially as to whether this investigation could be made without the appropriation of additional funds, we were assured that it could be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I would like to say to him that I wish he would have an unequivocal letter from the department saying that there will not be any further appropriations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture makes that statement in his letter printed in the report under date of March 7, 1932. He says:

> The information relative to trading in wheat futures could be obtained, I believe, through the agency of the Grain Futures Administration without additional funds, although it would require some readjustment in present plans—

And so forth.

Mr. CAPPER. There would be no additional appropriation, according to the statement of the Secretary.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is rather an equivocal statement, at best. I will say to the Senator that as soon as a measure like this is passed, we usually get a special recommendation from the Bureau of the Budget stating that in order to carry out the terms of act No. so and so, whatever it is, it is recommended that there be appropriated so many dollars, and the Committee on Appropriations feels that it is duty bound to appropriate the money after the authorization is made therefor. That is why I would like to have an unequivocal statement from the department saying that it will not require any additional funds for this purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Tennessee to object?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee, inasmuch as I called for the explanation from the Senator from Kansas, that I am not prepared to say that the investigation should not proceed promptly, without regard to the question as to whether a small additional sum may be required to make it effective? For my part, I do not desire to delay the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay it myself, but I hope the Senator from Kansas will obtain such a letter, whether the measure passes or not.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, let me state again that the representative of the department came before the committee and made the statement that the work contemplated by this resolution could be done with the appropriation already provided for. The committee was very much interested in that phase of the question. We did not want to get started on something that later might require additional funds. As I have already stated, the committee had assurances that the department could do this work with the present available funds.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have not had time to study this joint resolution carefully, but I want to ask the Senator from Kansas whether the scope of it is sufficient to permit an investigation of the effect the so-called southern delivery has had upon the price of cotton?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who is interested in the joint resolution, as far as cotton is concerned, can answer that question.

Mr. SMITH. About three or four years ago the exchanges, particularly the New York exchange, concluded that they would try the plan of what is called southern delivery, under which contracts might be made in New York, Chicago, or New Orleans, and the deliveries made at certain southern points.

I have had letters and protests against that policy, those interested stating that it enabled certain individuals to accumulate a tremendous stock at these places and thereby depress the market on account of their ability to accumulate these excessive stocks. If the scope of the bill does not cover that, I would like to have an investigation of those dealing on the different cotton exchanges, to determine what has been the effect of southern delivery on the price of cotton.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I agree thoroughly with the Senator from South Carolina as to the desirability of the investigation suggested by him; and I say to him that if the resolution is not sufficiently specific to cover that phase, I shall endeavor to have it inserted in the House.

Mr. SMITH. With that explanation, I have no objection to the passage of the joint resolution, but I am very anxious to have that phase thoroughly investigated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the first amendment.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 7, after the word "futures," to insert the words "and cotton futures"; on line 10 after the word "futures," to insert the words "and cotton futures"; on page 3, line 4, after the word "wheat," to insert the words "and cotton," so as to make the joint resolution read:

> Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to extend his investigations concerning the future markets and more specifically to investigate and determine the cost of maintaining the present system of dealing in wheat futures and cotton futures in the United States and, as part of such inquiry, to ascertain the amount of profits made and losses sustained by various classes of traders in wheat futures and cotton futures since July 1, 1929, including the transactions commonly called short selling, together with the amount of commissions and other charges paid by such traders, and to obtain such other information and facts as he may deem necessary or appropriate to such inquiry, said Secretary of Agriculture to report the results of his investigation at the next regular session of Congress, or earlier if possible, and in such report to show the profits and losses of large traders separately from those of small traders and to show the amounts of such profits and losses that resulted from the short selling of wheat and cotton during the drastic decline in prices since July 1, 1929.

SEC. 2. That, for the purposes of this resolution, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to hold hearings, to contract for stenographic reporting service, to employ experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to use the personnel and facilities of the Grain Futures Administration, to examine the books and records of futures exchanges in the United States and of the members of such exchanges as well as the books and records of persons, firms, corporations, and associations dealing in or trading in agricultural commodities for future delivery or acting as clearing organizations in respect to such trades, to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents, to administer oaths, and to make such other expenditures, including expenditures for printing and binding, as he deems advisable, such expenditures to be out of and to be chargeable against the funds appropriated, or that hereafter may be appropriated, for the enforcement of the grain futures act.

SEC. 3. That subpœnas for the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents shall be validly issued and served when they are signed, attested, and served in the manner and by the persons from time to time designated by the Secretary of Agriculture for that purpose. Hearings shall be public or private, as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine. No person shall be excused from giving testimony or from answering any question or from otherwise disclosing any fact within his knowledge as an individual, or as an officer or director of a corporation, or from producing any book, paper, or document in his possession or under his control as an individual, or as an officer or director of an exchange, association, or corporation, on the ground that the giving of such testimony or the answering of such question or the disclosing of such fact or the production of such book, paper, or document would tend to incriminate him, or for any other reason, but no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, or concerning which he may be interrogated and as to which he shall truthfully disclose or make answer under oath in such investigation: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. In case of disobedience to a subpœna, the Secretary of Agriculture may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, records, and documents, and any failure to obey any order issued by such court in aid thereof shall be punished by the court as a contempt.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that the report on this joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 499, Seventy-second Congress, first session]

TO PROVIDE FOR INVESTIGATION INTO COST OF MAINTAINING PRESENT SYSTEM OF FUTURE TRADING IN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, submitted the following report (to accompany S. J. Res. 108):

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 108) to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the cost of maintaining the present system of future trading in agricultural products and to ascertain what classes of citizens bear such cost, having fully considered the same report favorably thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendments:

On page 2, line 7, after the word "futures," insert the words "and cotton futures."

On page 2, line 9, after the word "futures," insert the words "and cotton futures."

On page 3, line 3, after the word "wheat," insert the words "and cotton."

The joint resolution directs the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the system of future trading and short selling in farm commodities, the purpose being to develop the benefits, if any, of such a system of marketing. The information requested includes the amount of profits made and losses sustained by various classes of traders in wheat and cotton futures since July 1, 1929, including short selling, and the amount of commissions and other charges paid by traders. Profits and losses of large traders are to be separated from those of small traders, and in particular the amounts of such profits and losses resulting from short selling of wheat and cotton during the drastic decline since July 1, 1929, are to be shown. The report is requested by the next regular session of Congress.

A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture commenting on the purpose of the Joint Resolution No. 108 follows:

MARCH 7, 1932.

Hon. CHARLES L. MCNARY,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: Senate Joint Resolution 108 has been referred to this department for consideration and report.

Section 1 of the resolution directs the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and determine the cost of maintaining the present system of dealing in wheat futures in the United States. It calls for certain facts regarding the profits and losses of various classes of traders in wheat futures since July 1, 1929, and for information showing the profits and losses of large traders separately from those of small traders as well as the amounts of such profits and losses that resulted from the short selling of wheat during the drastic decline in prices since July 1. The cost of the proposed investigation is to be charged against funds appropriated for the enforcement of the grain futures act.

The information called for would present an interesting study, I am sure, and would afford some basis for comparing the economic value of the futures markets for hedging purposes with their cost to society as a whole. This apparently is the purpose of the inquiry, and presumably it is thought that an investigation limited to wheat will provide a basis for estimating in a general way the situation as it affects other commodities dealt in on the futures markets.

The information relative to trading in wheat futures could be obtained, I believe, through the agency of the Grain Futures Administration without additional funds, although it would require some readjustment in present plans. It might be necessary also to restrict the investigation in some particulars and to be content with less than a complete survey of all of the trading during the period specified.

If it be desired by Congress that such an investigation be undertaken, I shall be pleased to make the facilities of the department available within the limits of available funds.

Sincerely,

ARTHUR M. HYDE, Secretary.

The committee also had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 63, introduced by Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, which would authorize a similar investigation into trading in cotton futures. The committee is favorable to the purpose of Senator SHEPPARD'S resolution, but it was felt that by amending Senate Joint Resolution 108 so as to include cotton futures within its provisions the same result would be achieved. It was therefore the feeling of the committee that Senate Joint Resolution 108 should be reported with the amendments herein recommended, thus accomplishing all that is contemplated by Senator SHEPPARD'S resolution.

The statement of the representative of the Department of Agriculture convinced the committee that no appropriation will be necessary for making the investigation authorized by this resolution.

SENDING OF THREATENING COMMUNICATIONS THROUGH THE MAILS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, a few moments ago Calendar No. 520, House bill 96, to punish the sending through the mails of certain threatening communications, was passed over while I was temporarily absent from the Chamber. I ask unanimous consent that we may return to that order of business; and if the request is granted and I may have the attention of the Senator from Tennessee, I will suggest an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to returning to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, that was objected to by the Senator from Oregon, I believe.

Mr. BINGHAM. I had to leave the Chamber temporarily, and I requested the Senator to let it go over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest that the bill be reported for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever, with intent to extort or without justification to demand from any person money or other thing of value, shall deposit or cause to be deposited in any post office, or station thereof, or street or other letter box of the United States, or authorized depository for mail matter, to be sent or delivered by the post-office establishment of the United States, any written or printed letter or other communication, with or without a name or designating mark subscribed thereto, addressed to any other person and containing any threat (1) to injure the person, property, or reputation of the addressee or of another or the reputation of a deceased person, or (2) to kidnap any person, or (3) to accuse the addressee or any other person of a crime punishable by law, or (4) to expose any infirmities or failings of any person or to charge any person with infirmities or failings shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 20 years: Provided, That the accused may be indicted and tried either in the district in which the unlawful matter is deposited as aforesaid or in the district to which it is carried by mail for delivery according to the directions thereon or in the district to which it is directed to be delivered by mail by the person to whom it is addressed.

Passed the House of Representatives March 9, 1932.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, because of the peculiar character of the bill, and because this is the first time I have seen it, I ask that it may go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, that is entirely satisfactory to me. I just want to say that this is a House bill, that the Postmaster General was greatly interested, that the bill was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and after consideration it was thought that the purposes of the bill were proper and that there ought to be a penalty visited for such offenses. The committee unanimously reported the bill. I am glad the Senator from California is going to study it, and am perfectly willing for it to go over.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to suggest an amendment, on page 2, to strike out line 6 and all of line 7 through the word "failings." It struck me, in reading the bill, that the penalty was altogether too severe.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator repeat his amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to strike out all of line 6 and line 7 through the word "failings," striking out the fourth provision in the bill. It seemed to me that the $5,000 fine and 20 years' imprisonment was a little too severe for threatening "to expose any infirmities or failings of any person or to charge any person with infirmities or failings."

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to that amendment, so far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, while the matter is under consideration, may I inquire of those who have given careful study to the bill what is the meaning and effect of the words, as used, "punishable by law," in line 5, page 2? The language is, "To accuse the addressee or any other person of a crime punishable by law." Are there crimes that are not punishable by law?

Mr. McKELLAR. Strictly speaking, I doubt whether there is any; but the intention, of course, was that before such an act could be punishable under this act the crime charged against the person must be one punishable by law.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I suggest that when the Senator from Tennessee considers this, he consider exactly the language which has been adverted to by the Senator from Connecticut? What are infirmities or failings?

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me that goes a very long way, and I am perfectly willing to have an amendment made to that language.

Mr. JOHNSON. I may have a certain opinion of some one, and express my opinion of him in unexpurgated fashion, or probably I might refer to temperamental failings or infirmities of his. I do not know what this language would cover. It is pretty broad.

Mr. McKELLAR. So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I agree entirely with the Senator from California, and I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator permit the amendment to be made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the present status of the bill, does the Senator from California ask that it go over?

Mr. JOHNSON. I withhold the objection so that the Senator from Connecticut may present his amendment if he desires to; that is all. But I shall ask that the bill go over for the present.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I move that the measure as proposed be amended by striking out all of line 6 and line 7 through the word "failings."

In accordance with the suggestion offered by my friend, the Senator from Arkansas, I also move to strike out the last three words on line 5, "punishable by law."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 5, to strike out the words "punishable by law," and on line 6, to strike out the words "or (4) to expose any infirmities or failings of any person or to charge any person with infirmities or failings."

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill as amended will be passed over.

CARE OF DEPENDENT CHILDREN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4038) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide home care for dependent children in the District of Columbia," approved June 22, 1926, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide home care for dependent children in the District of Columbia" is hereby amended by substituting for the words "one year" the words "two years."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the effect of the amendment which this bill contemplates should be stated. The connection in which the substitution of two years for one year is made does not appear from the bill itself.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the Board of Welfare finds that a good many persons are coming to the District of Columbia from the States for the purpose of taking advantage of the mothers' pension act in the District of Columbia. Our law in the District of Columbia as it now stands requires a shorter period of residence than that required in most of the States. This measure would require that one seeking the benefits of the mothers' pension act would have to live in the District of Columbia two years instead of one year before becoming eligible. It would put us in line with the near-by States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF MICHIGAN AVENUE

The bill (S. 4039) to provide for the extension and widening of Michigan Avenue in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to extend and widen Michigan Avenue between First Street and Park Place NW. and to improve traffic condition the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to use for street purposes all of the land lying within the McMillan Park and the United States Soldiers' Home ground which is comprised within the parcels designated A and B as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1650, together with any and all additional land that may be necessary for slopes in the proper construction of roadway and sidewalks.

SEC. 2. The Chief of Engineers, United States Army, is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for street purposes all of the land comprised within the parcels designated A, as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1650; and the Board of Commissioners of the United States Soldiers' Home is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to said Commissioners of the District of Columbia for street purposes all of the land comprised within the parcels designated B, as shown on said map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1650.

SEC. 3. That the Board of Commissioners of the United States Soldiers' Home shall transfer to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, all of the land comprised within the parcels designated C, as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1650, to be used as part of the McMillan Park; and the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, shall transfer to the Board of Commissioners of the United States Soldiers' Home all of the land comprised within the parcels designated D, as shown on said map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1650, to be used as part of the United States Soldiers' Home Grounds.

SEC. 4. That the surveyor of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to prepare the necessary plat or plats showing all parcels of land to be transferred in accordance with the provisions of this act, with a certificate affixed thereon to be signed by the parties in interest making the necessary transfers; which plat and certificate, after being signed by the various interested officials and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall be recorded upon order of said commissioners in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia; and said plat or plats, when duly recorded in said office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, shall constitute a legal transfer for the purposes designated according to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. The District of Columbia shall perform the necessary work and shall pay any and all expenses for removing and replacing water mains, removing, reconstructing, and repainting the boundary fence of the United States Soldiers' Home and bringing the surface of the areas reconstructed to proper grade with loose earth suitable for growing vegetation and otherwise replacing the property of the United States Soldiers' Home in the same condition as it was before construction was undertaken; any trees required to be cut along the proposed route and on the areas authorized to be transferred by the United States Soldiers' Home to remain the property of the United States Soldiers' Home and to be cut into such lengths as may be suitable for cordwood or lumber, and to be split and stacked by said District of Columbia as directed by the governor of said home.

WITHDRAWALS OF PUBLIC LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8087) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to vacate withdrawals of public lands under the reclamation law, with reservation of rights, ways, and easements.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let us have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, this bill merely provides for the withdrawal of such lands as have been set aside for reclamation purposes, but which are now found to be without value for reclamation purposes. If this measure shall be passed, I shall ask for the indefinite postponement of Calendar 484, Senate bill 3371, which is like the bill under consideration.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 3371 will be indefinitely postponed.

CHELAN NATIONAL FOREST

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3711) to authorize the adjustment of the boundaries of the Chelan National Forest, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 7, after the word "President," to insert a colon and the words "Provided, however, That nothing contained herein shall affect prior valid existing claims or entries or prior existing withdrawals or reservations," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465; sec. 485, title 16, Code of Laws of the United States), be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable to any lands within four miles of the boundaries of the Chelan National Forest. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the Chelan National Forest and subject to all laws relating thereto. Any lands in public ownership lying within the area described in this act and found to be valuable for national-forest purposes may, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, be added to the Chelan National Forest by proclamation of the President: Provided, however, That nothing contained herein shall affect prior valid existing claims or entries or prior existing withdrawals or reservations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 34) to provide for review of the action of consular officers in refusing immigration visas was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

C. O. MEYER

The bill (S. 2990) for the relief of C. O. Meyer was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. O. Meyer the sum of $297.68. Such sum represents the amount paid to C. O. Meyer as substitute carrier while he was postmaster at Meyers Mill, S. C., and which amount was charged by the department to the account of C. O. Meyer.

B. J. SAMPLE

The bill (S. 2991) for the relief of B. J. Sample, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to B. J. Sample the sum of $1,324.14 for carrying the mail upon star route No. 20183, between Allendale and Augusta, the said sum representing pay for mileage on said route in excess of the mileage advertised by the Post Office Department as a correct mileage of the route.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1335) to provide for the appointment of two additional district judges for the district of New Jersey was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RATE OF WAGES ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The bill (S. 3847) to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, this bill was introduced in order to prevent certain abuses in the employment of labor by which advantage was taken of imported labor from without the State. It applies only to public buildings and the rates of wages paid by contractors for labor on public buildings. The purpose of the bill is to protect labor so employed. The conclusions of the committee are set forth in its report, as follows:

This bill is necessary to the intelligent, economical, and efficient negotiation of contracts for public buildings. It will be of tremendous benefit to labor.

In this respect the bill was amended in two or three places for additional protection of labor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a casual inspection of the report on the bill submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] discloses that a question of constitutionality of the proposed statute was raised. What was the constitutional question involved, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WALCOTT. I will ask the Senator from New York to answer that question. I was told that the question of the constitutionality of the bill was settled favorably and that the measure is believed to be constitutional as it is now before the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the question of constitutionality was based on a decision made by a court in Illinois regarding a prevailing wage scale; but after the committee heard witnesses and considered the matter, they determined that probably it was declared void in Illinois because the terms of the act there involved were uncertain and indefinite. We thought by certain amendments which were made that we could do away with that indefiniteness, so as to make it a more positive declaration. I think those changes, according to those who are competent to judge of the law, would cause it to be determined to be constitutional. We were convinced, may I say further, that it was quite necessary to have the bill enacted if labor is to have the benefits which were expected by the enactment of the law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Was the report unanimous?

Mr. COPELAND. It was unanimous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The amendments will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 17, after the word "at," to insert "not less than"; on page 3, line 8, after the word "pay," to insert "not less than"; in line 11, after the word "wages," to insert the words "contained in the specifications"; in line 24, after the word "contractor," to strike out the words "and his subcontractors" and insert "or subcontractor"; in line 25, to strike out the word "fail" and insert the word "fails"; in the same line, after the word "pay," to insert "not less than"; on page 4, line 2, after the word "or," to insert "not less than"; on page 5, line 14, after the word "pay," to insert "not less than"; on page 6, line 4, after the word "pay," to insert "not less than"; and on page 6, after line 7, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. If the provisions of section 1 of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the act of March 3, 1931, or the application thereof to any such person or circumstances, as the case may be, shall not be affected by the enactment of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors or subcontractors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1931, is amended to read as follows:

"That the advertised specifications for every contract in excess of $5,000 for construction, alteration, or repair of public buildings or public works in the District of Columbia or in any city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of any State, to which the United States or the District of Columbia is to become a party and which requires or involves the employment of mechanics or laborers shall contain a provision stating the prevailing rate of wages as determined by the Secretary of Labor, for various grades of mechanics and laborers for work of a similar nature in the District of Columbia or in the city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of any State in which all or the principal part of the particular contract work is located, and every contract for the construction of public buildings or public works to which the United States or the District of Columbia shall become a party shall contain a stipulation that the contractor and his subcontractors shall pay the mechanics and laborers employed directly on the site of such work at not less than the rate of wages stated in the advertised specifications. If, however, the work contemplated by the contract requires more than three months for its completion, the Secretary of Labor, at the request of the head of the department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government concerned, or on petition of the contractor or his subcontractors, or of not less than 20 laborers and/or mechanics employed on the work shall, from time to time, reexamine the prevailing rate of wages being paid to mechanics and/or laborers for work of a similar character in the District of Columbia, city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of the State in which all or a principal part of the work is located, and if such rate is found to be increased or decreased from that stated in the specifications and made a part of the contract, he shall notify the contractor thereof, and the contractor and his subcontractors shall pay not less than the rate of wages stated in said notification from the beginning of the next pay period following the date of receipt of such notification. In event the rate of wages contained in the specifications is so increased, an amount equal to the amount of such increase in wages in any one month shall be paid at the end of such month to the contractor by the United States upon a satisfactory showing by the contractor as to the amount thereof, and in the event of a decrease in the rate of wages, the contract price shall be decreased by the amount of such decrease in wages, and such decrease in the contract price shall be computed on the basis of satisfactory evidence submitted by the contractor. The books and pay rolls of the contractor and his subcontractors shall be so kept as to show the actual wages paid mechanics and laborers, and shall be open to inspection by an authorized officer or employee of the United States.

"SEC. 2. Any contractor or subcontractor who fails to pay not less than the rate of wages stated in the advertised specifications and made a part of the contract, or not less than any rate of wages subsequently ordered in writing by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with section 1 of this act, or who, after making proper payment, requires a laborer or mechanic to refund any part of the wages so paid, shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $10 per day per laborer or mechanic for every day any laborers or mechanics are paid less than such prevailing rate of wages, and for each such refund required from any mechanic or laborer, shall forfeit to the United States a sum not less than five times the value thereof. Any laborer or mechanic employed on any such work who accepts a rate of wages less than that prescribed in the advertised specifications, or in any subsequent revision thereof made by the Secretary of Labor, or who makes any refund to the contractor or subcontractors shall, within 10 days after such payment or refund, file a sworn statement with the Secretary of Labor setting forth the facts, and any amounts to be forfeited as provided in this section shall be deducted by the Comptroller General from any sums due the contractor from the United States, or if nothing remains due the contractor, such amounts may be recovered by the United States as a debt in a suit at law against either the contractor and his surety or his subcontractors. The amounts so forfeited or recovered shall be applied, first, to the payment to the laborers and mechanics of any difference between the amounts found by the Comptroller General to have been paid them and the prevailing rate of wages, or of the amounts which such laborers and mechanics were required to refund, and the balance shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 3. When any of the departments or independent establishments of the United States, including the District of Columbia, perform work by Government plant and hired labor which could have been performed under contract, but not including work in arsenals or navy yards, such departments and establishments, including the District of Columbia, shall also pay not less than the prevailing rate of wages as established by the Secretary of Labor at the time the work is undertaken. If, however, the work contemplated requires more than three months for its completion, the Secretary of Labor, at the request of the head of the department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government concerned or of not less than 20 laborers and/or mechanics employed on the work, shall from time to time reexamine the prevailing rate of wages being paid to laborers and mechanics for work of a similar nature in the city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of the State or the District of Columbia, in which all or a principal part of the work is located, and if such rate is found by him to have increased or decreased he shall notify the head of the department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government concerned, who shall pay not less than the rate of wages stated in said notification from the beginning of the next pay period following the date of receipt of such notification."

SEC. 2. If the provisions of section 1 of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the act of March 3, 1931, or the application thereof to any such person or circumstances, as the case may be, shall not be affected by the enactment of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, ELBOWOODS, N. DAK.

The bill (H. R. 9143) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Elbowoods, N. Dak., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, at or near Elbowoods, N. Dak., authorized to be built by the State of North Dakota, by an act of Congress approved March 4, 1931, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from March 4, 1932.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

BLACK RIVER BRIDGE, POCAHONTAS, ARK.

The bill (H. R. 9301) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Black River at or near Pocahontas, Ark., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Black River at or near Pocahontas, Ark., authorized to be built by the Arkansas State Highway Commission by an act of Congress approved April 12, 1930, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SAVANNAH RIVER BRIDGE, GA.

The bill (H. R. 10088) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing the South Carolina and the Georgia Highway Departments to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Savannah River at or near Burtons Ferry, near Sylvania, Ga.," approved May 26, 1928, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved May 26, 1928, granting the consent of Congress to the South Carolina and the Georgia State Highway Departments to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Savannah River at or near Burtons Ferry, near Sylvania, Ga., be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge herein referred to be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

LAND TITLE IN CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.

The bill (S. 3830) to remove a cloud on the title of certain land in the city of Corpus Christi, Tex., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to Caroline Morris, her heirs and assigns, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all that parcel of land in the Bluff Portion of the city of Corpus Christi, Tex., described as lot 1, block 6, acquired through the Spanish grant known as the E. Villareal grant, by virtue of a deed dated March 30, 1857.

REGULATION OF PLUMBING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 3400) to amend an act of Congress approved June 18, 1898, entitled "An act to regulate plumbing and gas fitting in the District of Columbia" was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this appears to be a somewhat important bill. I should like to have an explanation of its provisions and purposes.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the bill was introduced at the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. They are operating in the District under a law which was enacted many years ago, and which does not give the District commissioners the authority they should have in the way of suspending a license where a plumber constantly violates the regulations. It is in line with the practice in practically all other cities. Everyone interested in the plumbing work of the District is favorable to the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask if there were hearings on the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. There were, and no opposition appeared.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It appears that the committee proposed an amendment on page 2 striking out a provision relating to nonresident applicants for licenses to operate as master plumbers, and so forth. Why was that?

Mr. CAPPER. That was to make it so that nonresident applicants who desire to come here and do work should be subject to the regulations imposed by the superintendent of plumbing and the District Commissioners.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think the restrictions provided in the bill would still make it almost impossible for a person to be licensed as a plumber in the District who had not resided here for a number of years. I do not think any cities or towns throughout the country have any such restrictions as that. The bill at first sought to prohibit anyone from engaging in plumbing work except those who were bona fide residents of the District of Columbia. The committee very wisely struck that provision from the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. We thought it was necessary that anyone coming here to engage in the plumbing business should first be subject to examination, so the authorities would know he was competent to carry on the work.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There was a provision under which a nonresident might obtain a license under requirements which would safeguard and protect the people against some fakir or some incompetent plumber, but that has been stricken from the bill. Suppose that a person makes an application. On page 2 of the bill it is provided that his application has to be accompanied with a certificate as to good character signed by at least three reputable residents of the District of Columbia, two of whom shall certify that the applicant has had at least four years' experience in the plumbing and gas-fitting business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it the policy of the District Committee to establish a requirement that a plumber or gas fitter must prove character before he may engage in his occupation or business?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, if I may answer the question, it is the desire of the plumbing superintendent here that he shall have some supervision over those coming from outside of the District, and therefore the committee felt that such persons should be subject to an examination just the same as a local plumber who applies to-day.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think it is all right to make some inquiry, of course, into the competency and skill of a man making application, and as to his character, but the restriction would make it impossible for a great many who desire to work here to qualify under the provision. That is the point I am making. He has to have his character certified by at least three reputable residents of the District of Columbia. He may not be able to obtain that kind of a certificate. In addition to that, two of those reputable citizens of the District of Columbia must certify that for four years he has been a plumber and that he is capable of doing the work. Some men coming into the District may have been here 12 months, but how can that fact be established?

I am reminded of a little incident which was given publicity through the press of Washington affecting the matter of obtaining an automobile license or driver's permit here in the District. A few months ago I read in one of the papers of the experience of a lady who came here from some State and desired to obtain a driver's permit in the District. It seems it was her custom to visit here more or less probably every spring. She went to see about obtaining a permit to drive a car. She was told, "You will have to have two or three reputable citizens of the District of Columbia certify as to your character, and so forth." She said, "I know people in Kentucky, my home State, or Tennessee," wherever it was she lived, "and I can furnish all kinds of character references back where I came from, but I do not know personally anyone in the District of Columbia who can certify as to my character." The story went that she had to make six or seven trips to the license bureau before she could ever obtain a permit, and I believe she did not even obtain it then.

I think the bill should go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

EXTENSION OF MICHIGAN AVENUE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would invite the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] to the fact that a bill (S. 4039) to provide for the extension and widening of Michigan Avenue in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was passed a little while ago and that there is an identical House bill on the calendar, Order of Business No. 581.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 4039, Order of Business 523, was passed may be reconsidered, that the House bill (H. R. 10489) may be substituted therefor and put upon its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none.

The bill (H. R. 10489) to provide for the extension and widening of Michigan Avenue in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to extend and widen Michigan Avenue between First Street and Park Place NW., and to improve traffic conditions, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to use for street purposes all of the land lying within the McMillan Park and the United States Soldiers' Home grounds which is comprised within the parcels designated A and B as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1650, together with any and all additional land that may be necessary for slopes in the proper construction of roadway and sidewalks.

SEC. 2. The Chief of Engineers, United States Army, is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for street purposes all of the land comprised within the parcels designated A, as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1650; and the Board of Commissioners of the United States Soldiers' Home is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to said Commissioners of the District of Columbia for street purposes all of the land comprised within the parcels designated B, as shown on said map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1650.

SEC. 3. That the Board of Commissioners of the United States Soldiers' Home shall transfer to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, all of the land comprised within the parcels designated C, as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1650, to be used as part of the McMillan Park; and the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, shall transfer to the Board of Commissioners of the United States Soldiers' Home all of the land comprised within the parcels designated D, as shown on said map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, and numbered as map 1650, to be used as part of the United States Soldiers' Home grounds.

SEC. 4. That the surveyor of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to prepare the necessary plat or plats showing all parcels of land to be transferred in accordance with the provisions of this act, with a certificate affixed thereon to be signed by the parties in interest making the necessary transfers; which plat and certificates, after being signed by the various interested officials and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall be recorded upon order of said commissioners in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia; and said plat or plats, when duly recorded in said office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, shall constitute a legal transfer for the purposes designated according to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. The District of Columbia shall perform the necessary work and shall pay any and all expenses for removing and replacing water mains, removing, reconstructing, and repainting the boundary fence of the United States Soldiers' Home and bringing the surface of the areas reconstructed to proper grade with loose earth suitable for growing vegetation and otherwise replacing the property of the United States Soldiers' Home in the same condition as it was before construction was undertaken; any trees required to be cut along the proposed route and on the areas authorized to be transferred by the United States Soldiers' Home to remain the property of the United States Soldiers' Home and to be cut into such lengths as may be suitable for cordwood or lumber, and to be split and stacked by said District of Columbia as directed by the governor of said home.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 4039 will be indefinitely postponed.

ESTATE OF ROBERT J. FRANZEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1586) for the relief of the estate of Robert J. Franzel, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "of" where it first occurs, to strike out the words "the late Robert J. Franzel, of Miles City, Mont., sole heir of his son, the late Peter Paul Franzel," and to insert "Peter Paul Franzel, deceased," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Peter Paul Franzel, deceased, the sum of $168.36, in full satisfaction of all claims of such estate against the United States arising out of any payment made by the estate of Peter Paul Franzel in pursuance of an offer made by the said Peter Paul Franzel in compromise of liabilities alleged to have been incurred by him through violation of the national prohibition act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEHDE & SCHOENHUT

The bill (H. R. 1202) for the relief of Lehde & Schoenhut was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may that bill be read? I do not see the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who has reported it, on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lehde & Schoenhut, of Gardenville, N. Y., the sum of $739.25, being the amount which the said Lehde & Schoenhut paid to the collector of customs of Buffalo, N. Y., as customs duties on certain shipments of spruce trees, aggregating three carloads, imported into the United States from Canada during the month of May, 1926. The aforementioned shipments of spruce trees were subsequently refused entry into the United States by a New York State inspector, who ordered them to be reshipped to Canada because of a State quarantine in the identical condition in which they entered this country, the said duty having been paid by the said Lehde & Schoenhut before the discovery of the quarantine order preventing entry of the said spruce trees: Provided, That it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that all of said shipments of spruce trees were in fact reshipped to Canada in obedience to the quarantine order refusing their admission.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS ENGLER

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Francis Engler $143.09 in full and complete payment and discharge of the claim filed under the act of March 4, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for carrying out the award of the National War Labor Board of July 31, 1918, in favor of certain employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co.," as amended by the act of February 16, 1929, entitled "An act to provide for further carrying out the award of the National War Labor Board of July 31, 1918, for the relief of employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co., Bethlehem, Pa."

SEC. 2. The payment hereby authorized and directed under the provisions of section 1 of this act shall be made from the unexpended balance of the amount appropriated under the act of March 4, 1925, above referred to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION POWER SITES, MONTANA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 277) defining and regulating power sites upon the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "Indians," to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That this section shall not apply to any lands heretofore allotted to individual members of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians, or to any lands the tribal title to which has otherwise been extinguished, or to any lands not adjudged by the Secretary of the Interior to possess value for power-site purposes," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all water-power sites or sites adapted for the installation or establishment of power projects situated upon the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, be, and the same are hereby, declared to be tribal property of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any lands heretofore allotted to individual members of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians, or to any lands the tribal title to which has otherwise been extinguished, or to any lands not adjudged by the Secretary of the Interior to possess value for power-site purposes.

SEC. 2. That any said power sites shall be sold, leased, or disposed of only with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and with the consent of the Blackfeet Tribal Council, and the proceeds of said sale, lease, or disposal shall be placed to the credit of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONS TO FINAL ROLL OF FLATHEAD INDIANS, MONTANA

The bill (S. 2393) to provide for the addition of the names of certain persons to the final roll of the Indians of the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to add to the final roll of the Indians of the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., approved January 22, 1920, under the act of May 25, 1918 (40 Stat. L. 591), and the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L. 9), the names of the following persons, descendants of the confederated Flathead Tribes of Indians: Joseph Russell Bird, Daniel Lawrence Pablo, Valerie Roullier, Henry Roullier, jr., Julia Roullier, Laura Soucie, Blanche Soucie, Joseph Soucie, Julie Soucie, Rose Marie Soucie, and Audra Jane Martin. The Secretary of the Interior is also authorized to pay each of the persons named a sum equal to that heretofore paid per capita to those whose names were upon the approved roll, and to allot each of these persons except Audra Jane Martin the same area of land allotted to children of the Flathead Reservation enrolled upon the final roll, such payments to be made from any tribal funds in the Treasury to the credit of the Flathead Indians, the allotments to be made from any available tribal unallotted lands of the Flathead Reservation.

COLORADO RIVER TRIBAL FUNDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3864) authorizing expenditures from Colorado River tribal funds for reimbursable loans, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 2, after the word "support," to insert "and Indians having irrigable allotments to assist them in the development and cultivation thereof," and on the same page, after the word "of," to insert "loans on irrigable lands for permanent improvement of said lands in which the period for repayment may run for not exceeding 20 years, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not to exceed $25,000 from tribal funds on deposit to the Indians of the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz., for the construction of homes for individual members of the tribe, the purchase for sale to them of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, building material, and other equipment and supplies, and for advances to old, disabled, or indigent Indians for their support, and Indians having irrigable allotments to assist them in the development and cultivation thereof: Provided, That expenditures for the purposes above set forth shall be limited to the fiscal years 1932 and 1933 and such expenditures shall be made under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for repayment to the United States for deposit to the credit of the Colorado River Indian tribal fund on or before June 30, 1938, except in the case of loans on irrigable lands for permanent improvement of said lands in which the period for repayment may run for not exceeding 20 years, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and advances to old, disabled, or indigent Indians for their support, such advances to remain a charge and lien against their lands until paid.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in the absence of the two Senators from Arizona and on explanation, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

APPOINTMENTS OF MIDSHIPMEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8083) providing for the appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy of all midshipmen who gradute from the Naval Academy in 1932, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, after the words "Naval Academy," to strike out "in 1932"; at the beginning of line 7, to strike out "until after 1936"; in line 8, after the word "total," to strike out "authorized"; in line 9, after the word "officers," to insert "otherwise authorized by law"; and on page 2, line 2, after the word "computation," to insert "and shall be excluded from any computation made for the purpose of determining the authorized number of line officers in any grade on the active list above the grade of lieutenant, junior grade, until the total number of line officers shall have been reduced below the number otherwise authorized by law," so as to make the section read:

That the President of the United States is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who graduate from the Naval Academy: Provided, That the number of such officers so appointed shall, while in excess of the total number of line officers otherwise authorized by law, be considered in excess of the number of officers in the grade of ensign as determined by any computation, and shall be excluded from any computation made for the purpose of determining the authorized number of line officers in any grade on the active list above the grade of lieutenant, junior grade, until the total number of line officers shall have been reduced below the number otherwise authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 7, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That all commissions hereafter issued as ensigns in the line of the Navy, second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, and in the lowest commissioned grades of the Staff Corps of the Navy with the rank of ensign, may be revoked by the Secretary of the Navy, under such regulations as he may prescribe, at any time during a period of two years from the dates of such commissions, and each officer whose commission is so revoked shall be discharged from the service with not more than one year's pay. The rank of such officers of the same date of commission among themselves at the end of said period shall be determined by boards of officers under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, and the recommendations of such boards shall be final when approved by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 21, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. That after January 1, 1933, the number of midshipmen allowed at the United States Naval Academy for each Senator, Representatitve, Delegate in Congress, Resident Commissioner, from Porto Rico, and the District of Columbia, by the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat. 140; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 1032), shall be reduced to two: Provided, That nothing herein shall exclude from the United States Naval Academy any midshipman appointed thereto prior to January 1, 1933.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy of all midshipmen who graduate from the Naval Academy, and for other purposes."

LOAN OF EQUIPMENT FOR UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS' ENCAMPMENT

The bill (H. R. 5848) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lend to the entertainment committee of the United Confederate Veterans 250 pyramidal tents, complete; fifteen 16 by 80 by 40 foot assembly tents; thirty 11 by 50 by 15 foot hospital-ward tents; 10,000 blankets, olive drab, No. 4; 5,000 pillowcases; 5,000 canvas cots; 5,000 cotton pillows; 5,000 bed sacks; 10,000 bed sheets; 20 field ranges, No. 1; 10 field bake ovens; 50 water bags (for ice water); to be used at the encampment of the United Confederate Veterans, to be held at Richmond, Va., in June, 1932, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I inquire who asked that House bill 5848 go over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request was made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I asked that the bill go over as I asked the other day that a similar measure proposing to loan equipment for another occasion of this kind should likewise go over. There is on the calendar a joint resolution, being Senate Joint Resolution No. 80, which provides for furnishing equipment to communities in distress. If it be agreeable to attach that joint resolution as a section to one of these bills, I shall be very glad to have them considered at one and the same time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I appeal to the Senator to allow this bill to pass? It is a House bill; there is no objection to it at all by anybody, and I wish the Senator would allow action to be taken upon it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have no objection to this bill, but I am very greatly interested in having the other measure to which I have referred and which is on the calendar likewise become a law. I want a chance to vote upon it. I will not insist upon the Senate adopting my amendment, but I will insist upon the privilege of offering it as an amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, House bill 5848 is in the usual form, permitting the United Confederate Veterans to have the loan of certain War Department property, with a surety bond to protect the Government on account of the equipment to be used at the national encampment to be held this year. It has been the custom of the Congress to allow that to be done for national encampments of veterans' organizations, such as the Grand Army of the Republic, the United Confederate Veterans, and the American Legion.

The Senator from Oklahoma wants the War Department to provide tents and cots and what not to take care of unemployed in the State of Oklahoma, and he is holding up the United Confederate Veterans' bill and the American Legion bill, which is similar in form, in order to compel us to give this accommodation to a group of unemployed in Oklahoma. If it is done in Oklahoma, it ought to be done in all the other 47 States; and, in that event, the War Department will find itself in the position of keeping hotels all over the country for anybody who claims to be unemployed.

I do not see any reason for associating the two propositions. The Senator's proposal which he is trying to force on this bill has nothing whatever to do with the annual encampment of these national organizations of veterans. We have always refused to lend tents and cots and what not even to State encampments of veterans. We never have passed a bill to that effect. Now, the Senator wants equipment furnished to a State encampment, so to speak, for the benefit of the unemployed in Oklahoma only. I see no justification for adding such an amendment to this bill. I think it is highly unfair to the United Confederate Veterans and to the American Legion for the Senator to hold up these bills.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, of course, the Senator from Oklahoma has a right to raise his objection and insist upon it unless he can have his own joint resolution considered as an amendment to this bill; but I certainly agree with what the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] has stated. I do not think the two matters are at all related. It looks to me that, on consideration, the Senator from Oklahoma might withdraw his objection to the consideration of these bills or his conditional consent to consider this bill and the American Legion bill as well and let the Senate pass upon them.

I am not raising any question as to the merits of the proposal made by the Senator from Oklahoma; no doubt there may be merit in his proposal; but, at the same time, others take a different view of it; and it certainly seems to me the two measures are not related. I therefore hope the Senator will not insist upon his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma withdraw his objection?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the issue raised here is simply this: The joint resolution which has been objected to and sought to be killed by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania—and it was dead for a while until the Senate by force brought it back from the committee—merely provides that the governors of States may have the right to appeal to the Secretary of War in case of emergency and ask for such equipment as may be necessary to take care of such emergency—something similar to that which arose in Alabama and Georgia only a few days ago. At the present time when such an emergency arises and appeals are made to the Secretary of War, if he furnishes the equipment he admits that he breaks the law.

The joint resolution which I am sponsoring does not require the Secretary of War to do a single thing, Mr. President; it only permits the governor of a State in a case of that kind to make application for unused equipment, and then the Secretary of War, in his discretion, has the power under the law to furnish it. That is objected to. The joint resolution provides that if equipment is furnished the Secretary of War shall submit an estimate to the first succeeding Congress covering damage done to the equipment, or, if it has been lost or destroyed, covering its value, the Congress to appropriate for it. I can not understand why it is that that joint resolution is objected to, but it is objected to, and I contend it should pass. However, I am only asking for a chance to present it to the Senate, as every time it is reached it is objected to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

Mr. FLETCHER. Would the Senator be willing to take up this bill so that he could then offer his amendment to it and we could vote on it?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is all I am asking, that in the event we take up the bill I shall have the right to offer the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. If we take up the bill, then the Senator would have a right to offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I offer as a new section of this bill all that portion of Senate Joint Resolution No. 80 after the resolving clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following words:

That upon the request from any governor or acting governor of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, for equipment, goods, and supplies, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to make available to any such governor or acting governor, such equipment, goods, and supplies, for the use and benefit of any such State, Territory, or possession, in connection with relief work for citizens in distress: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall make and promulgate rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I sent as hurriedly as I could for a copy of the joint resolution, but the page has brought me the wrong copy. This is the copy as originally introduced. The joint resolution was sent to a subcommittee, and a substitute joint resolution was brought back. I desire to submit as my amending section the substitute as brought back and recommended by the subcommittee; and I ask that the matter go over until I can have a chance to get it in proper form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

GEORGIA HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT

The bill (H. R. 7788) authorizing the granting by the Secretary of War of a right of way to the Georgia Highway Department was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. McNARY. At the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has already gone over on objection of the Senator from Tennessee.

COORDINATION, ETC., OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AND INDEPENDENT ESTABLISHMENTS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 135) creating a joint commission concerning the coordination and economical administration of the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby created a joint commission to be composed of 9 members, 3 Senators to be appointed by the Vice President of the United States, 3 Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, and 3 members to be appointed by the President of the United States. This commission shall study the several executive departments and independent establishments of the Government with a view to their coordination and economical administration and within 30 days from the passage of this resolution make such recommendations to Congress as it may deem advisable. All agencies of the Government shall furnish to the commission such information as it is possible to furnish. The Director of the Bureau of the Budget is directed to furnish to the commission such clerical force as the commission may request. The commission may employ such stenographic help as may be necessary, the payment therefor being hereby authorized, at rates not exceeding 25 cents for 100 words, to be paid upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the commission, from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives in equal parts.

CLARA E. WIGHT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3580) for the relief of Clara E. Wight, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Wight," to insert "or upon her death to her husband, if he survives"; in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$3,360" and insert "$50 per month, in an amount not to exceed $3,360"; and in line 8, after the words "death of," to strike out "her" and insert "their," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Clara E. Wight, or upon her death to her husband, if he survives, the sum of $50 per month, in an amount not to exceed $3,360, in full compensation for the death of their son, Ralph L. Wight, who was a civilian employee of the Navy, and was overcome by gas and burned while working in submarine S-44 at the navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H., on January 10, 1919, as a result of which he died January 15, 1919.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HAMILTON GROUNDS

The bill (S. 660) for the relief of Hamilton Grounds was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Hamilton Grounds, a Walapai Indian residing on the Walapai Indian Reservation in Mohave County, near Valentine, Ariz., the sum of $40 per month for the remainder of his life, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for injuries caused by the explosion of a dynamite cap left by an employee of the United States on the grounds of the Truxton Canon Indian Boarding School at Valentine, Ariz.: Provided, That so long as the said Hamilton Grounds remains a minor such monthly payments shall be made to his guardian for the benefit of the said Hamilton Grounds. Such monthly payments shall date from the approval of this act.

HELEN PATRICIA SULLIVAN

The bill (H. R. 3909) for the relief of Helen Patricia Sullivan was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Helen Patricia Sullivan, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 in full settlement of damages sustained April 12, 1929, at Los Angeles, Calif., when she was struck by an automobile operated under the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

STEVE FEKETE

The bill (H. R. 5259) for the relief of Steve Fekete was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Steve Fekete, of Detroit, Mich., the sum of $500, which was the amount of a bail bond given to the United States on January 13, 1928, to insure the departure of John Opalenik, an alien, which bond was declared forfeited by the Department of Labor prior to the time the alien was apprehended and deported.

GEORGE E. CASEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4868) for the relief of George E. Casey, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the words "That the," to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the account of George E. Casey, former postmaster at Bunch, Okla., in the sum of $103.20. Such sum represents the amount of a deficit in the account of the said George E. Casey, caused by the burglarizing of the post office at Bunch, Okla., on the night of May 19, 1926, of $40.71 in cash and blank money-order forms, stolen and filled out, in the sum of $62.49, making a total of $103.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

W. J. SHIRLEY

The bill (H. R. 3265) for the relief of W. J. Shirley was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to W. J. Shirley the sum of $60.77 in reimbursement for value of his personal property destroyed by fire in the military service of the United States at Brest, France, on the 21st day of July, 1919, and for which loss he was in no wise responsible.

ESTATE OF GEORGE B. SPEARIN, DECEASED

The bill (S. 1271) for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased, the sum of $5,616.29, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said sum to be payment in full for all loss sustained by said Spearin by reason of failure, until April 11, 1917, of his attorney to file with the Treasury Department, in compliance with the provisions of the act of September 30, 1890 (26 Stat. L. 537), transcript of judgment of the Court of Claims in the case of Spearin against the United States.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5484) extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 377), and acts amendatory thereof, to ceded lands of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a request has been made that some explanation be made of the bill. In the absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the chairman of the committee, I ask that the bill go over temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8914) to accept the grant by the State of Montana of concurrent police jurisdiction over the rights of way of the Blackfeet Highway and over the rights of way of its connections with the Glacier National Park road system on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in the State of Montana was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. In the absence of an explanation of this bill, I ask that the same order be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V., title 47, ch. 4), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

USE OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR CAMP SITES, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3638) to authorize the use of public lands for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes in connection with mineral permits and leases, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "unoccupied" to insert "nonmineral"; on page 2, line 3, after the words "more than," to strike out "320" and insert "160"; and in line 10, after the word "acre," to insert: "Provided further, That such lessee or permittee shall be given a reasonable time after the termination of the lease or permit to remove personal property and improvements from such area," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and as appurtenant to a lease or permit issued under any of the United States mineral leasing laws, is authorized to issue to any such lessee or permittee a permit to use an additional tract of unoccupied nonmineral public land for camp sites, refining works, mill, tipple, or other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the lease or permit: Provided, That such permit shall be for a period not longer than the term of the lease or permit, and for an area of not more than 160 acres, and conditioned on the continued use of the land for the purpose for which issued, and upon payment of a rental fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, payable in advance on the date of such use permit and annually thereafter on the anniversary thereof, the rental in no case to be less than 25 cents per acre: Provided further, That such lessee or permittee shall be given a reasonable time after the termination of the lease or permit to remove personal property and improvements from such area: And provided further, That all money received from rentals under the provisions of this act shall be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of section 35 of the act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437).

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to adopt such rules and regulations governing the use and occupancy of the lands embraced in permits herein authorized and to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act as he shall deem necessary.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES R. THORNTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2144) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant a patent to certain lands to Charles R. Thornton, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That, notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of the acts of June 5, 1872 (17 Stat. 226), and February 11, 1874 (18 Stat. 15), the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to approve the isolated tract application of Charles R. Thornton, of Missoula, Mont., numbered Great Falls 076803, covering the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 24, township 10 north, range 20 west, principal meridian, Bitter Root Valley, Mont., and to grant to said Charles R. Thornton a patent in fee to such land upon payment by him of a reasonable price therefor as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, but not less than $1.25 per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF RADIO ACT OF 1927

The bill (S. 4289) to amend the act of February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., title 47, sec. 85), and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5, subparagraph C, of the act of February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., title 47, sec. 85), is amended by striking out the word "persons," after the words "issue them to such," and inserting the words "citizens of the United States," so that the amended paragraph will read: "To prescribe the qualifications of station operators, to classify them according to the duties to be performed, to fix the forms of such licenses, and to issue them to such citizens of the United States as he finds qualified."

LOAN OF EQUIPMENT FOR UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS' ENCAMPMENT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a few moments ago we passed over temporarily Order of Business 568, being House bill 5848. At that time I offered an amendment; but the page brought me the original text, and I desired to offer as my amendment the final text as agreed to by the subcommittee. At this time I ask unanimous consent to return to this bill first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to returning to the bill. I understand that it is simply for the purpose of proposing an amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum. Other Senators who are interested in this matter are not here.

Mr. McNARY. I understand that the Senator from Oklahoma is not asking the opportunity to take up the measure at this time. He only wishes to propose an amendment to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand; but the Senator from Pennsylvania is not here at the moment.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Pennsylvania could not prevent the proposing of the amendment. I shall object to its consideration, however.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Pennsylvania does not object to its consideration. The Senator from Oklahoma proposes an amendment to it, but there are Senators interested in the amendment who ought to be here.

Mr. McNARY. I understand that the Senator from Oklahoma is making no request for the immediate consideration of the bill. He simply wants to propose an amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; he has called for the consideration of the bill. That is his object.

Mr. McNARY. I shall object to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator objected to the consideration of the bill this morning and then subsequently withdrew his objection and said he would consent to have it come up. Now he offers an amendment to it, which he has a right to do. I had hoped we could go on and dispose of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. Is it the pleasure of the Senator from Oklahoma to present the matter now and ask for its consideration?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is what I should like to have done, if that is agreeable.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Pennsylvania objected to the Senator's joint resolution as amended in connection with Order of Business 568. I thought the Senator only wanted to propose another amendment at this time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I desire to offer an amendment to this measure, the amendment being the exact language of the subcommittee report on the original bill offered by myself.

Mr. McNARY. I can state to the Senator that we will have a call of the calendar on Wednesday, and, as other Senators are absent now, probably he would be willing to take up the matter then.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum. Let us dispose of it now. I think we can get a vote on the Senator's amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Byrnes	Fess	Hebert
Austin	Capper	Fletcher	Howell
Bailey	Caraway	Frazier	Hull

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Secretary will state the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 568, and that he might offer an amendment, to be introduced at a certain place in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is an amendment in order to House bill 5848?

The VICE PRESIDENT. An amendment is in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I submit the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Oklahoma proposes to insert in the proper place in House bill 5848 the following new section:

SEC. —. That whenever by reason of storm, flood, famine, earthquake, or other emergency, considerable numbers of the people of any State, Territory, or dependency of the United States are rendered destitute or in peril of death or suffering from starvation, natural violence, or exposure to the elements, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and under such regulations as he shall prescribe, and at the request of the chief executive of the State or Territorial government concerned, to employ such military forces, equipment, transportation, services, and supplies of the United States as are available for such emergency relief measures as the said Secretary shall deem appropriate; and the Secretary of War shall annually submit to Congress, through the Bureau of the Budget, estimates to cover the amounts necessary to be appropriated to reimburse the War Department for the funds expended and the property and equipment used, lost, damaged, or destroyed in carrying out the provisions of this section.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the amendment just submitted and read is in the exact words of the report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, and later of the Military Affairs Committee to this body. After the bill was on the calendar for a few days, for some reason it was sent back to the committee. Later the Senate had the bill brought back and placed on the calendar. I am simply submitting the amendment in the form in which it came from the committee originally to this bill, and I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall speak for only a moment or two.

The Army realizes that it exists to serve the people of the United States, and in the past where great emergencies have arisen it has not waited for legislative authority, or for word from Washington, before helping to the utmost of its power. Every particle of the military force that is in the neighborhood of a catastrophe has responded without any action of Congress or any orders from Washington.

The trouble with this amendment is that it would give every governor the right to call upon the Army to contribute its supplies in case of any emergency, and it is intended expressly to include unemployment emergencies, among others.

The enactment of this legislation would put the Army in a position of having to respond to possibly 48 different calls from 48 different States, to have to furnish its material to run free hotels for the benefit of anybody who chose to describe himself as unemployed. One can readily see what would happen to the equipment of the Army if we ever launched into such a program.

It is provided that at the end of each year the Army may come in and ask for an appropriation to make good the loss and the wreckage entailed in this experiment. With the Congress determined to cut down the appropriations to the bare bones, how can the Army spend its substance out of its annual appropriation and still preserve anything like that minimum degree of efficiency which we demand of them?

It seems to me that to couple such a proposition with the proposal to lend 250 tents to the annual encampment of a veterans' organization is foreign to the purpose of the bill, and can only have the effect of blocking the bill to which the Senator seeks to add the amendment.

I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in behalf of some 48 governors I resent the insinuation that they would ask the War Department to come to their States and run hotels there, except at a time when a flood strikes a State, or a cyclone strikes a State, or an earthquake strikes a State, or even a depression strikes a State. If objection should be made to this bill, there would be no time to argue it now. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Hull	Patterson
Austin	Cutting	Johnson	Reed
Bailey	Dale	Jones	Robinson, Ark.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9349) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am just as anxious as is the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] to get the decision of the Senate on his amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in the hope that the Senate within five minutes may dispose of the question that is pending.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that proceeding for a limited time, but if it leads to debate I shall ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I do not care to take additional time to discuss the matter. I am only asking that a vote be had. Perhaps one or two sentences would not be amiss.

At the present time when some community suffers disaster and makes application to the War Department for relief in the form of tents or cots or blankets, if the Secretary of War desires to furnish the goods he does so. If he does not desire to furnish the goods he tells the community that the law will not permit. In my State we have had in years past some cyclones, we have had some floods, we have had the depression. Perhaps that has not happened in the State of Pennsylvania. I hope not. In my State we have asked for help from the Secretary of War. He has made the statement that he could not supply the goods because the law would not permit. Then the responsible authorities in my State come to me as one Member of Congress and ask me why we do not amend the law. I have submitted the amendment. I alone can not have the amendment agreed to, but I think I am entitled to have a vote. I now ask for a record vote on the amendment. I demand the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. As I understand it he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel free to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is necessarily absent. I do not know how he would vote. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mrs. CARAWAY. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. HATFIELD. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] are detained in a committee meeting.

I also desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the following Senators are detained on official business:

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—27

Barkley	Costigan	Kendrick	Shipstead
Black	Cutting	La Follette	Smith
Bratton	Dill	Lewis	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Frazier	Neely	Trammell
Bulow	Gore	Nye	Tydings
Byrnes	Hayden	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Copeland	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.

NAYS—32

Austin	Dickinson	Howell	Reed
Bailey	Fess	Hull	Schall
Bankhead	Fletcher	Jones	Sheppard
Barbour	George	Kean	Steiwer
Bingham	Glass	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Blaine	Glenn	Moses	Walcott
Capper	Goldsborough	Oddie	Watson
Dale	Hale	Patterson	White

NOT VOTING—37

Ashurst	Harris	McGill	Swanson
Borah	Harrison	McKellar	Townsend
Broussard	Hastings	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Bulkley	Hatfield	Morrison	Wagner
Caraway	Hawes	Norbeck	Walsh, Mass.
Carey	Hebert	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Connally	Keyes	Pittman	Waterman
Coolidge	King	Shortridge
Couzens	Logan	Smoot
Davis	Long	Stephens

So the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still open to amendment. If there is no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POLICY OF SENATE IN REDUCTION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. When we recessed on Friday, we had a resolution pending in reference to the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill, to recommit the bill with instructions. What became of that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is mistaken in that. The Senate adjourned on Friday and that disposed of the further consideration of the resolution for the time being. The only way it can be gotten up again is to request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the resolution be further considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think debate has been exhausted; and if the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will not object, I shall ask unanimous consent to renew the consideration of the resolution and ask that we may vote on it and have the matter settled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to laying aside the unfinished business temporarily and proceeding to the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am in hopes that will be agreed to because we desire to get the subcommittee to work. The subcommittee is ready to begin to write up the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill if it knows what the wishes of the Senate are, so I hope the request of the Senator from Tennessee will be granted.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLAINE. If unanimous consent is not granted, what will be the next parliamentary step with relation to the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The appropriation bill which is the unfinished business was laid before the Senate when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived.

Mr. BLAINE. Am I to understand that the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee has displaced the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is for unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is that the appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 197) submitted by Mr. McKELLAR on the 13th instant.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending motion.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Tennessee on the 13th instant offered the following resolution (S. Res. 197):

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations, in its consideration of the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, should observe the policy adopted by the Senate in the cases of the Interior Department, and the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriations bills, and report the said bill back to the Senate with amendments providing an aggregate reduction of 10 per cent in the amount of the appropriations contained in the bill as received from the House of Representatives.

In line 10 of the resolution the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] proposes the following amendment: After the words "10 per cent" to insert ", exclusive of provisions for buildings and construction."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland to the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, on Thursday and Friday last the pending McKellar resolution providing for a 10 per cent cut in the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill was discussed at considerable length on the floor of the Senate, and the question was raised on the floor regarding the canceling of ocean mail contract appropriations. On Friday I requested the Post Office Department to send me a statement regarding the effect of such cancellation, and, in answer to my inquiry, I have just received a letter, dated April 18, from the executive assistant to the Postmaster General, Harold N. Graves, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 18, 1932.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ODDIE: In accordance with your request by telephone, I am giving you information in connection with the debate on the floor of the Senate last Friday in which the position was taken by some of the Senators that mail contracts under the merchant marine act, 1928, are subject to cancellation at the option of the Government.

I am transmitting herewith a copy of one of the contracts marked to show the clauses under which it can be annulled or canceled. It will be seen that annulment or cancellation can not be effected except (a) for default of the contractor, (b) upon application of the contractor in case of failure of the Shipping Board to grant a loan, or (c) upon mutual agreement of the contractor and the Postmaster General after expiration of five years of the contract term..

Nineteen of the forty-four contracts have provisions for cancellation or annulment similar to those in the contract transmitted herewith. Twenty-five of the contracts do not have provision (b) with respect to cancellation upon refusal of the Shipping Board to grant a loan, and two of them do not contain provision (c) for cancellation by mutual agreement after expiration of five years of the contract term.

The Government has in no case reserved an option to cancel the contract except under the conditions here indicated. It follows, therefore, that, as the Postmaster General informed the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations by his letter of March 29, no reduction can be made in the department's ocean mail payments, unless the Government is to repudiate its contract obligations.

By direction of the Postmaster General.

Very truly yours,

HAROLD N. GRAVES,
Executive Assistant to the Postmaster General.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of the contract referred to may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the contract was ordered to be placed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONTRACT FOR OCEAN MAIL SERVICE—ROUTE NO. 37

This contract, made this 29th day of March, A. D. 1930, under the provisions of the "merchant marine act, 1928," by the United States of America, represented by the Postmaster General, party of the first part, and the Panama Mail Steamship Co., a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, hereinafter called the contractor, party of the second part.

Witnesseth that whereas the said Panama Mail Steamship Co. has been accepted as contractor for ocean mail service on route No. 37 in conformity with the advertisement inviting proposals for the service specified herein, issued by the Postmaster General under date of January 17, 1930, the said contractor, for the consideration hereinafter stated, undertakes, covenants, and agrees with the United States of America, pursuant to the provisions of the "merchant marine act, 1928," and the said advertisement of the Postmaster General, as follows:

1. (a) To carry all mails of the United States offered from San Francisco by Los Angeles (Calif.), Mazatlan and/or Acapulco (Mexico), Champerico, San Jose de Guatemala (Guatemala), Acajutla, La Libertad, and/or La Union (Salvador), Corinto (Nicaragua), Puntarenas (Costa Rica), Balboa, Cristobal (Canal Zone), and Cartagena to Puerto Colombia (Colombia), on a schedule approved by the Postmaster General that shall include approximately 26 trips per annum; and to any other ports at which the vessels of the contractor employed in this service may voluntarily call.

(b) To carry the mail, whatever may be its size, weight, or increase during the term of this contract, in a safe and secure manner, free from wet or other injury, and it is hereby understood and agreed that foreign transit closed mails shall be deemed and taken to be mails of the United States;

(c) To take the mail and every part of it from and deliver it into all post offices on the route, unless other provision is made; and it is hereby understood and agreed that the contractor shall be answerable in damages to the United States for any loss or damage resulting to such mail or any part thereof by reason of the failure of the said contractor or any of its officers, agents, or employees to exercise due care in the custody, handling, or transportation thereof;

(d) To transport upon each vessel employed in the service herein specified such mail messengers as the Postmaster General may require, and to provide for them subsistence, suitable staterooms, and working quarters, all free of charge;

(e) To convey without additional charge all necessary post-office supplies and mail equipment and, at the request of the Post Office Department, to provide, also without additional charge, first-class transportation for officials and accredited post-office inspectors engaged in the service of the said department;

(f) To carry as cadets or apprentices on all vessels operated under this contract American-born boys under 21 years of age at time of original employment, two boys per vessel; to educate said boys in the duties of seamanship and pay each of them for their services such compensation as may be reasonable, which compensation shall in no case be less than $30 per month;

(g) To carry on return trips parcel-post mail of United States origin being returned from foreign countries as undeliverable and any United States military or naval mails and empty United States mail bags, all without additional charge;

(h) To provide and operate in the performance of the service stipulated in this contract, combination passenger and cargo vessels of class 5, capable of maintaining a speed of 13 knots at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 4,500 tons;

(i) To substitute within three years from the beginning of the time of performance under this contract, for vessels originally accepted for service thereunder, two new American built and registered combination passenger and cargo vessels of class 3, with accommodations for not less than 150 passengers and refrigerator capacity of not less than 500 tons, capable of maintaining a speed of 18 knots at sea in ordinary weather and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 8,000 tons.

2. (a) In consideration of the faithful performance of the services herein specified and upon receipt of satisfactory evidence thereof by the Postmaster General, the United States agrees to pay to the said contractor monthly, and as soon after the close of each month as accounts can be adjusted and settled, compensation based upon the mileage on the outbound voyages by the shortest practicable route between the ports specifically stated herein, by vessels of class 5 at the rate of $4 per nautical mile, and by vessels of class 3 at the rate of $8 per nautical mile, and in the event service is performed in additional vessels of these or other classes under agreement between the contractor and the Postmaster General, by vessels of class 7 at the rate of $1.50 per nautical mile, by vessels of class 6 at the rate of $2.50 per nautical mile, by vessels of class 5 at the rate of $4 per nautical mile, and by vessels of class 4 at the rate of $6 per nautical mile, by vessels of class 3 at the rate of $8 per nautical mile, by vessels of class 2 at the rate of $10 per nautical mile, and by vessels of class 1 at the rate of $12 per nautical mile;

(b) It is understood and agreed that where in the performance of this contract the contractor's vessels voluntarily call at ports not specified herein or pursuant to the terms of this contract, the contractor shall receive no additional compensation for any service rendered in and about the receipt and delivery of mail at those ports, and that the stipulated compensation for the carriage of the mails to the ports specified under this contract shall be deemed full compensation for all services rendered at the ports at which such vessels may voluntarily call.

3. It is hereby further understood and agreed

(a) That the contractor at its option may substitute for vessels required under section 1, paragraph (h), of this contract in addition to those required under section 1, paragraph (i), one or two vessels of class 3 which have been built for service on an ocean mail route under the merchant marine act, 1928, where transfer of the said vessels is permitted by the contract covering the route for which the vessels were built, and with the consent of the Postmaster General may operate in the performance of this contract other vessels of class 3 and/or vessels of other classes;

(b) That upon the agreement of the Postmaster General and the contractor, the Post Office Department may extend the service to additional ports; curtail the route to omit ports; omit or embrace intermediate ports; increase or reduce the number of trips, with allowance of not exceeding the contract rate for the increased outbound mileage involved and with a deduction at the contract rate for any decreased outbound mileage involved; and change the rate of pay stipulated herein to accord with laws that may hereafter be enacted by Congress;

(c) That the Postmaster General may annul this contract or impose fines or other penalties, in his discretion, for repeated failures of services required hereunder; for subletting the service without permission of the Postmaster General or assigning or transferring this contract; for combining to prevent others from bidding for the performance of postal service; for failure to provide and operate any vessel in accordance with the requirements of the advertisement and this contract; for violating the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1928, or the Postal Laws and Regulations applicable to service under this contract; or for other failure to perform service according to contract; or for default by the contractor with respect to any of the provisions of the contract; and such annulment shall not impair the right of the United States to claim damages from the contractor;

(d) That within one year from the date of the award of this contract, and at such times thereafter as the Postmaster General may require, the contractor shall furnish to the Postmaster General satisfactory evidence of its intention and ability to place in service within the stipulated time the vessels required to be employed under the provisions of section 1, paragraph (i) hereof, and in the event of failure so to furnish such evidence the Postmaster General may annul this contract: Provided, That nothing in this paragraph shall be taken to conflict with the provisions of section 4, paragraph (a) of this contract;

(e) That the two vessels to be constructed under the provisions of section 1, paragraph (i) of this contract are to be constructed as provided by section 405 (b), merchant marine act, 1928, according to plans and specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy;

(f) That in case vessels employed in the performance of this contract be taken by authority of the United States for national defense or during any national emergency as provided in the merchant marine act, 1928, or such vessels become unavailable for operation under the terms of this contract because of force majeure, the Postmaster General and the contractor may agree upon the suspension of the service herein stipulated or the termination of this contract, without penalty for failure of performance or liability upon either party;

(g) That the Postmaster General and the contractor may agree upon the construction and/or operation of vessels of other classes for a greater or less number of voyages than those specified, and upon the agreement of the contractor and the Postmaster General any vessels constructed in fulfillment of the contractor's obligation under this contract may be operated on any other American foreign trade or ocean mail route, the mail pay for any such operation to be governed by the authorization of service on the route over which the vessel is operated;

(h) That the classification of vessels employed under this contract shall be based upon speed without regard to tonnage;

(i) That in case the United States Shipping Board shall refuse to authorize a construction loan for the building of the new vessels to be employed by the contractor under the terms of this contract before the time the services thereunder are to begin, upon written notice of the fact before said time the Postmaster General, at the request of the contractor, shall relieve the contractor of the obligation of this contract, and the same shall be null and void;

(j) That this contract is subject to all of the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1928, and of the advertisement of the Postmaster General hereinbefore mentioned, and to the provisions of the Postal Laws and Regulations applicable to the ocean mail service, and the same are hereby made a part of this contract;

(k) That no Member of or Delegate to Congress or Resident Commissioner shall be admitted to any share or part of this contract, or to any benefit that may arise therefrom, but this provision shall not be construed to extend to this contract if made with a corporation for its general benefit;

(l) That the contractor warrants that it has not employed any person to solicit or secure this contract upon any agreement for a commission, percentage, brokerage, or contingent fee. Breach of this warranty shall give the Government the right to terminate this contract or, in its discretion, to deduct from the contract price or consideration the amount of such commission, percentage, brokerage, or contingent fees. This warranty shall not apply to commissions payable by contractors upon contracts or sales secured or made through bona fide established commercial or selling agencies maintained by the contractor for the purpose of securing business.

4. (a) The term of this contract shall be 10 years, to begin July 1, 1930, or such subsequent date as the Postmaster General may designate.

(b) This contract, upon agreement of the Postmaster General and the contractor, may be terminated five years from the date thereof or at any time thereafter.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have executed this contract as of the day and year first above written.

BOND

Know all men by these presents, that the Panama Mail Steamship Co., 2 Pine Street, San Francisco, Calif., as obligor, is held and firmly bound unto the United States of America, in the penal sum of $200,000, lawful money of the United States, for the payment of which sum, well and truly to be made to the United States, without relief from valuation or appraisement laws, does bind itself, its heirs, executors, administrators, successors, and assigns, firmly by these presents.

Whereas the aforesaid Panama Mail Steamship Co., obligor, has entered into the foregoing contract with the United States for ocean mail service on the route designated as No. 37 from San Francisco, Calif., by certain intermediate ports of Puerto Colombia, Colombia, and the placing in service of certain new and other vessels specified therein;

Now, the conditions of the above obligation are such, that if the said Panama Mail Steamship Co., obligor, shall place in service the two new vessels of class 3, as required, and otherwise perform the service according to its said contract to the time of the placing in service of the said two new vessels of class 3, thereafter this obligation shall diminish to $75,000, and if the said Panama Mail Steamship Co., obligor, shall perform the full service according to its said contract, including the placing in service and operation of the two new vessels of class 3, then this entire obligation shall be void; otherwise to be in full force and obligation in law.

The above bounden obligor, in order the more fully to secure the United States in the payment of the aforementioned sum, hereby pledges as security therefor bonds/notes of the United States in the principal sum of $200,000, which said bonds/notes are numbered serially and are in the denominations and amounts, and are otherwise more particularly described as follows: Fourth Liberty loan 4¼ per cent bonds of 1933–38, Nos. E 00174295 and F 00174296 of $5,000 face value each, and Nos. G 00208497, H 00203718, J 00203709, J 00205349, K 00205350, A 00205351, B 00205352, K 00205260, A 00055961, C 00055963, A 00205991, B 00205992, C 00205983, D 00205984, E 00205985, F 00205986, G 00205987, H 00205988, and J 00205989 of $10,000 face value each, which said bonds/notes have this day been deposited with W. Irving Glover, Second Assistant Postmaster General, and his receipt taken therefor, with the understanding that a partial withdrawal of said bonds/notes may be made in accordance with the diminishing obligation provided for in the condition of the obligation.

Contemporaneously herewith the undersigned has also executed and delivered a power of attorney and agreement in favor of W. Irving Glover, Second Assistant Postmaster General, authorizing and empowering said officer as such attorney to collect or sell the above-described bonds/notes so deposited, or any part thereof, in case of any default in the performance of any of the above-named conditions or stipulations.

In witness whereof this bond has been signed, sealed, and delivered by the above-named obligor this 29th day of March, 1930.

WILLIAM F. GOGSWELL.
R. H. PATCHIN.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, this question has been debated at considerable length, and I think the Members of the Senate understand the seriousness of the problems involved. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] providing for excluding the public-building program from the operation of the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee has considerable merit; but we must not lose sight of the fact that that will leave the remainder of the appropriations for the Treasury Department subject to a 10 per cent cut if the McKellar resolution shall be adopted, as well as all of the Post Office Department appropriations.

The Secretary of the Treasury has pointed out, as has been shown on the floor during the last few days, that the only place in the Treasury appropriation bill where a 10 per cent cut can be made without seriously injuring the operations of the department is in the building program. I am particularly anxious that the building program be not included in the 10 per cent cut, and I am also just as anxious that the remainder of the bill be not included in it, because I feel that, should that be done, it would do great harm to the various branches of the Treasury Department contained in other portions of the appropriation bill.

I have numbers of times on the floor during the last two weeks stated the serious effect this cut would have on the Post Office Department. I have just stated the fact that it is not possible to cancel the ocean mail contracts. The railroad mail contracts, which are determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, can not be canceled; they are regulated by law. The air mail contracts can not be canceled, except possibly in a very small degree. So the only thing left for us, in order not seriously to cripple two of the greatest departments of our Government is to defeat the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee.

I understand the earnestness of the Senator from Tennessee in his efforts to effect reductions in governmental expenditures and to effectuate necessary economies; I commend him for the zeal and conscientiousness he has shown in this matter; but, Mr. President, the question involved is a very large one; the effect of the adoption of the resolution would be very far-reaching and damaging; if adopted, it will throw thousands and tens of thousands of men out of employment and will prolong the present period of depression. We can not afford to take that step. I hope, therefore, Mr. President, that the resolution will be defeated.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senator from Tennessee for a moment. The amendment which has been submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] exempts from the operation of the resolution the building and construction program. I perhaps do not state its effect exactly, but I state it in substance.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it the understanding of the Senator from Tennessee that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland shall be adopted, the proposed reduction of 10 per cent will apply to the gross appropriations of the particular bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, if the exception is made as to building and construction appropriations, a corresponding deduction will be made on that account.

Mr. JOHNSON. Probably I did not make myself clear.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is a little over a billion dollars appropriated by the bill, and the amendment would remove from consideration $108,000,000; in other words, the amount subject to the 10 per cent cut would be reduced that much.

Mr. JOHNSON. It will be observed that the resolution provides for a 10 per cent reduction, but in making that 10 per cent reduction, if the amendment of the Senator from Maryland shall be adopted, the building or construction program shall not be touched?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. JOHNSON. So the 10 per cent reduction is cast, then, upon the remainder of the appropriation?

Mr. McKELLAR. No. What would happen, as I understand the amendment, is this: The bill now carries a billion dollars——

Mr. JOHNSON. Exactly.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the amendment, if adopted, would take out of consideration $108,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. So that the 10 per cent reduction would apply to $892,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. However, is that what the resolution says?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that is what it says, I think.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does not the resolution read quite the reverse, namely, that the 10 per cent shall be considered as applying to the gross amount of the bill, say a billion dollars, and there shall be eliminated a certain activity, but the reduction is to be 10 per cent nevertheless upon the remaining sum.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not the amendment before me, but my understanding of it is that it simply removes $108,000,000 from consideration, and that means that the reduction of 10 per cent will apply to the remainder?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is what it ought to mean, but I am doubtful if the resolution does mean that.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Maryland, who was here a moment ago, undoubtedly can explain it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me read the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we ought to work it out as suggested by the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think we can work it out in that way. The resolution as proposed to be amended reads:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations, in its consideration of the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, should observe the policy adopted by the Senate in the cases of the Interior Department, and the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriations bills, and report the said bill back to the Senate with amendments providing an aggregate reduction of 10 per cent, exclusive of provisions for building and construction, in the amount of the appropriations contained in the bill as received from the House of Representatives.

As I read that language, it means that if the appropriation bill carries a billion dollars, of which say $108,000,000 is devoted to construction purposes, a reduction would be made of 10 per cent of the billion dollars, but that portion of the appropriation devoted to construction purposes would not be touched.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the purpose of the Senator from Maryland and the purpose of the Senator from Tennessee and my purpose in voting for the amendment would be quite the reverse of that, and I doubt——

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not in favor of the amendment, I will say, but the author of the amendment is here and he probably can explain it better than I have been able to do. I thought it merely meant that, first, the entire appropriation contained in the bill would be reduced by $108,000,000 appropriated for the building program, and then the 10 per cent reduction would apply to the remainder.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The purpose I had in mind in offering the amendment was not to disturb the building-construction program.

Mr. JOHNSON. Exactly.

Mr. TYDINGS. But to take the remainder of the appropriations and cut them down 10 per cent. I did not detail any particular cuts; I was merely trying to insure that the construction program would not be made subject to the cut.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am in entire sympathy with the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, and my purpose was to make plain to the Senate that that is the intent of the amendment, and, if that be understood, there is no need for further discussion.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is well understood.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment further?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Those who are opposed to any cut at all could still vote for my amendment and with consistency vote against the whole resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON. I quite agree with the Senator; he has stated exactly my position.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland. (Putting the question.) The Chair is in doubt.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. JOHNSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. He is not here. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I shall have to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I am informed, however, that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. I understand that if he were present he would vote in the same way that I intend to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HATFIELD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HAYDEN. My colleague the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mrs. CARAWAY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LOGAN. I transfer my pair, announced a moment ago, to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I transfer my pair with him to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 31, as follows:

So Mr. McKELLAR's resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

STATE, JUSTICE, JUDICIARY, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9349) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this bill, as Senators remember, after it had been reported to the Senate, was sent back to the committee with instructions to cut off 10 per cent of the amount carried by the bill as it came from the House.

As the bill passed the House, it carried for the State Department $15,192,148.33. The bill carried a total of $124,215,992.33. The committee has reduced various items by 10 per cent—some by a larger amount and some by a smaller amount—but the average of the bill is just a little bit less than the 10 per cent.

We have done the very best we could to carry out the instructions of the Senate. The bill is not perfect; but I think the instructions given us by the Senate have been carried out just as equitably and as justly as possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Department of State, office of the Secretary of State," on page 2, line 8, after the designation "Secretary of State," to strike out "$1,915,540; in all, $1,940,540," and insert "$1,875,540; in all $1,900,540," so as to read:

Salaries: For Secretary of State, $15,000; Under Secretary of State, $10,000; and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including temporary employees, and not to exceed $6,500 for employees engaged on piecework at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of State, $1,875,540; in all, $1,900,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, Department of State," on page 4, line 8, after the word "foregoing," to strike out "$101,000" and insert "$80,000," so as to read:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including stationery, furniture, fixtures; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their exchange, not exceeding $10,000; repairs and material for repairs; books, maps, and periodicals, domestic and foreign, and when authorized by the Secretary of State for dues for library membership in societies or associations which issue publications to members only or at a price to members lower than to subscribers who are not members, not exceeding $15,880; newspapers not exceeding $1,500; maintenance, repair, and storage of motor-propelled vehicles, to be used only for official purposes (one for the Secretary of State and two for dispatching mail, and one motor cycle for the general use of the department); automobile mail wagons, including storage, repair, and exchange of same; street-car fare not exceeding $150; refund of fees erroneously charged and paid for the issue of passports to persons who are exempted from the payment of such fee by section 1 of the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, approved June 4, 1920 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 22, sec. 214a); the examination of estimates of appropriations in the field; and other miscellaneous items not included in the foregoing, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Printing and binding," on page 4, line 14, after the word "elsewhere," to strike out "$258,275" and insert "$220,000," so as to read:

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, one page 33, line 15, the amendment would strike out "$122,000." I want the Senate to reject that amendment, and will change the amount on page 42 to take care of it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there is an amendment on page 33, commencing on line 9, extending down to the end of line 13, which I do not think has been agreed to. I wish the Senator would explain the application of that amendment.

Mr. JONES. This appropriation for the Attorney General provides for an additional automobile, and it is taken care of out of appropriations authorized for the Bureau of Investigation and the Bureau of Prohibition. There is no special appropriation made for it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments on page 33, line 3 and line 9.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 15, after the name "District of Columbia," to strike out "$122,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to read:

For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, $100,000, if space can not be assigned by the Public Buildings Commission in buildings under the control of that commission.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the committee amendment proposed on line 15 be disagreed to, and I will take care of that amount later on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be reported.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 33, line 15, the committee proposes to strike out "$122,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 19, to reduce the appropriation for printing and binding for the Department of Justice from $350,000 to $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, at the end of line 22, to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to read:

For traveling and other miscellaneous and emergency expenses, authorized and approved by the Attorney General, to be expended at his discretion, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Department of Justice," on page 34, line 13, after the words "in all," to strike out "$124,540" and insert "$110,000," so as to read:

Conduct of customs cases: Assistant Attorney General, special attorneys and counselors at law in the conduct of customs cases, to be employed and their compensation fixed by the Attorney General; necessary clerical assistance and other employees at the seat of government and elsewhere, to be employed and their compensation fixed by the Attorney General, including experts at such rates of compensation as may be authorized or approved by the Attorney General; supplies, Supreme Court Reports and Digests, and Federal Reporter and Digests, traveling, and other miscellaneous and incidental expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General; in all, $110,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 23, after the name "District of Columbia," to strike out "$2,826,210" and insert "$2,700,000," so as to read:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; the acquisition, collection, classification, and preservation of identification and other records and their exchange with the duly authorized officials of the Federal Government, of States, cities, and other institutions; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice and the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General; hire, maintenance, upkeep, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary; firearms and ammunition, such stationery, supplies, and equipment for use at the seat of government or elsewhere as the Attorney General may direct, including not to exceed $13,000 for taxicab hire to be used exclusively for the purposes set forth in this paragraph and to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General; traveling expenses; purchase of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, including the exchange allowance of any vehicle given in part payment therefor; payment of rewards when specifically authorized by the Attorney General for information leading to the apprehension of fugitives from justice, and including not to exceed $477,356 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $2,700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Examination of judicial offices," on page 36, line 13, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$136,940" and insert "$100,000," so as to read:

Examination of judicial offices: For the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks of the United States courts and Territorial courts, probation officers, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time; and also, when requested by the presiding judge, the official acts, records, and accounts of referees and trustees of such courts; for copying, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, reports of examiners at folio rates; traveling expenses; and including not to exceed $100,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask that this amendment be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 14, to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$200,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 19, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$55,560" and insert "$42,560," and in line 20, after the name "District of Columbia," to strike out "$193,860" and insert "$150,000," so as to read:

Enforcement of antitrust laws: For the enforcement of antitrust laws, including experts at such rates of compensation as may be authorized or approved by the Attorney General, including not to exceed $42,560 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries and expenses, Bureau of Prisons," on page 37, line 1, before the word "for," to strike out "$199,240" and insert "$165,240," so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For salaries and expenses in connection with the supervision of the maintenance and care of United States prisoners, including not to exceed $165,240 for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, traveling expenses, and expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of such bureau when authorized by the Attorney General.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment, to strike out "$165,240" and to insert in lieu thereof "$180,240." That increase will be taken care of later on.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 4, to strike out "$239,650" and insert in lieu thereof "$200,000."

Mr. JONES. In accordance with the amendment just agreed to, I move to strike out "$200,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$215,000," in line 5.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, that is to come out of something else?

Mr. JONES. The total is changed because of the amendment just made and it will come out on another page.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Prohibition," on page 38, line 14, after the word "use," to strike out "in field work"; in line 15, after the words "in all," to strike out "$11,369,500" and insert "$10,250,000"; and in line 16, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$370,120" and insert "$335,120," so as to make the paragraph read:

Salaries and expenses: For expenses to enforce and administer the applicable provisions of the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented (U. S. C., title 27), and internal revenue laws, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1927 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 5, secs. 281–281e), and the act of May 27, 1930 (46 Stat., p. 427), including the employment of executive officers, attorneys, agents, inspectors, investigators, supervisors, clerks, messengers, and other personnel, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to be appointed as authorized by law; the securing of evidence of violations of the acts; the cost of chemical analysis made by other than employees of the United States and expenses incident to the giving of testimony in relation thereto; the purchase of stationary, supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, newspapers, periodicals, books, including law books and books of reference, and such other expenditures as may be necessary in the District of Columbia and the several field offices; costs incurred in the seizure, storage, and disposition of liquor and property seized under the national prohibition act, including seizures made under the internal revenue laws if a violation of the national prohibition act is involved and disposition is made under section 3460, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 26, sec. 1193); costs incurred in the seizure, storage, and disposition of any vehicle and team or automobile, boat, air or water craft, or any other conveyance seized pursuant to section 26, Title II, of the national prohibition act, when the proceeds of sale are insufficient therefor or where there is no sale; purchase of passenger-carrying motor vehicles at a total cost of not to exceed $50,000, including the value of any vehicles exchanged, and the hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for official use; and for rental of quarters; in all $10,250,000, of which amount not to exceed $335,120 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment of the committee whereby $10,250,000 are allowed for prohibition enforcement, and in lieu thereof to insert $5,125,000.

Mr. President, I make this motion, not for the purpose of causing a discussion of the prohibition question but solely in the interest of economy. I propose to cut the appropriation in half, reducing it practically $5,000,000. I offer the amendment for this reason: If we face the realities, and we all know that the kind of prohibition enforcement we get to-day we can get in ample quantity, as it is now given us, for $5,000,000, and that it is wholly unnecessary to expend more. There will be no difference in the character of prohibition and there will be no difference in the quantity of enforcement, for our very senses teach us that for $5,000,000 we can acquire exactly as good enforcement in exactly as great quantity as we can get for $10,000,000, as enforcement is given us to-day. That much for the reason for this proposed cut.

Economy requires it. We are in a situation which has been descanted on and described here again and again and again, where we must cut to the bone, and where it is absolutely essential that every penny that can be saved should be saved. I recognize the justice of that particular cry that has gone up so often during this discussion, and I wish to give to those talking most of economy the opportunity to practice it. Here is a place where we can save $5,000,000 and where we can put it if we believe in scientific research for the Government of the United States and in real governmental activities in appropriate paragraphs of the bill we are now considering.

Mr. President, it is most unfortunate, in the cuts which have been made in the part of the bill relating to the Commerce Department, that we cut always those scientific investigations, aye, scientific necessities of the Government, and we starve the very departments of government which most require appropriations, and are to-day doing the most good. When we reach the particular point, I will have something to say about the Bureau of Standards and certain other bureaus where appropriations are cut so deeply and without rhyme or reason that personnel must be discharged.

I will endeavor to show that in the Bureau of Standards, for instance, we eliminate a couple of hundred scientific, well-trained men, that we can not have an organization dealing with scientific subjects, such as the Bureau of Standards deals with; we can not have a trained corps, and get it overnight. It takes time and development and labor and experience to accomplish that result.

We have accomplished it in this Government, and have a Bureau of Standards which does its work not only for the Government of the United States, but for every political subdivision in the United States, and does that work well. By the cut that has been made in the appropriation for that bureau, great harm will be wrought if it be carried out, and the organization which it has taken literally years to build up will be disrupted and partially destroyed.

I want to save, out of this rule of 10 per cent, sufficient money in this bill to enable us to retain and maintain the scientific departments of the Government which require the appropriations which originally were accorded them.

There is another aspect, too, where we should move with caution in the part of the bill relating to the Commerce Department. There have been cut out of the appropriation for the Commerce Department even the little appropriations which have been made for maintaining lighthouses. In one harbor of the State of California, the harbor of Stockton, where great work is being done, and where the Government is participating in that work in connection with the locality, $16,000 has been cut from the amount required and the only amount required, for fog signals for ships. By that kind of economy we run the peril and the danger of ultimate harm—harm that may mean loss of millions in money and possibly even of human lives.

I want for some items of this kind to have the leeway, which can not be granted unless we do eliminate some of the amounts which are in the bill, and which we are now considering. The most likely place to go, it seemed to me, judging by the senses of every realist in this land to-day, is to this item of ten millions and some hundreds of thousands of dollars for prohibition enforcement.

I insist in closing, as I said in beginning, that we can get exactly the same kind of prohibition enforcement for $5,000,000 that to-day we get for $10,000,000, and we can get it in exactly the same quantity for $5,000,000 that we obtain for $10,000,000.

So it is in the interest solely of economy, and to give the economical the chance to follow their bent, that I move that the cut be made in line 15, page 38, from $10,250,000 to $5,125,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course, I hope that amendment to the amendment will not be agreed to. We have treated this appropriation just as we treated the other appropriations in the bill. We made the cut in this amount, because the sentiment of the Senate would be strongly against reducing the amount of money for the enforcement of the liquor laws.

We felt that it was perfectly fair and perfectly just under all the circumstances to make a proportionate cut in that amount, but to cut the amount by an additional $5,000,000, in my judgment, is wholly unjustified and would meet with the condemnation of our people.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the fact of the matter is that the cuts are not all alike. The Bureau of Standards is cut 19 per cent in this bill, and some other scientific activities are cut more than 20 per cent. The other day in an appropriation bill we saw blithely cut the item for Boulder Dam. As the bill was passed by the Senate, that item was reduced 40 per cent; and as it was passed by the House, it was reduced 20 per cent. The cuts are not alike. Here we can stand a cut without doing harm, and without doing harm we can give that excess which is thus accorded by the cut to the scientific departments of the Government.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think I said, and I certainly did not intend to say, that the appropriation items had all been cut proportionately or exactly the same. We made a cut in this item very much along the line of the cuts in other items in the bill. There might be a very great difference of opinion with reference to the scientific matters, too. There will be a very great deal of difference of opinion. Some of those items, in my judgment, we might cut as much as 50 per cent or even as much as 75 per cent and not lose anything. We thought we had made a fair cut in this item considering all the circumstances.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to indorse what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said. I think the committee was exceedingly fair about it. It tried to pass on the merits of each item. We all know that the chairman of the committee, and I believe other members of the committee, under ordinary circumstances would not have felt like cutting the prohibition enforcement appropriation item at all. But as a matter of fact they agreed unanimously to cut it by more than $1,000,000. It seems to me the committee has done the very best thing possible. I hope the amendment of the Senator from California will be rejected and that the amendment of the committee will be agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, where a cut as suggested by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is unjust as compared with another cut, the matter may be adjusted satisfactorily in conference.

Permit me to suggest that a law may be said to be satisfactorily enforced when a majority of the people obey it and a majority of the prosecutions under the law result in convictions. Undoubtedly prohibition enforcement is meeting that standard and, on the whole, is a distinct success. In my judgment, to reduce the amount in any way beyond the proportion contemplated by the committee amendment would do the cause of prohibition harm. The reduction made by the committee is in line with its reductions of all other items in this bill and in all the other general appropriation bills which have been before us. I am supporting committee reductions in view of the emergency now confronting the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think we should have a quorum called before we vote on this matter. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Cutting	Kean	Sheppard
Bailey	Dale	Kendrick	Smith
Barbour	Dickinson	Lewis	Steiwer
Bingham	Dill	McGill	Stephens
Black	Fess	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Blaine	George	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Glenn	Morrison	Trammell
Bratton	Goldsborough	Moses	Tydings
Brookhart	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Bulow	Hatfield	Norbeck	Wagner
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Walcott
Capper	Hebert	Nye	Watson
Connally	Howell	Oddie	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hull	Patterson	White
Costigan	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAYDEN (when Mr. ASHURST's name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. He is necessarily absent. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I transfer my pair with him to the Senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I desire to say I understand that if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], with whom I am paired, were present he would vote the same as I intend to vote. I therefore feel free to vote, and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. WATSON. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], are absent in attendance on a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). I am advised that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is detained on official business in the Committee on Finance. I desire to make that statement also as to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. COOLIDGE. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] is paired with my colleague the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY].

I also wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—17

Bailey	Coolidge	Kean	Walcott
Barbour	Copeland	Lewis	Wheeler
Bingham	Cutting	Oddie
Blaine	Glenn	Tydings
Bulow	Johnson	Wagner

NAYS—42

Austin	Dill	McKellar	Smith
Black	Fess	McNary	Steiwer
Borah	George	Morrison	Stephens
Bratton	Goldsborough	Neely	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Hale	Norbeck	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	Hatfield	Norris	Trammell
Capper	Hayden	Nye	Vandenberg
Connally	Howell	Patterson	Watson
Costigan	Hull	Robinson, Ark.	White
Dale	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.
Dickinson	McGill	Sheppard

NOT VOTING—37

Ashurst	Frazier	King	Shortridge
Bankhead	Glass	La Follette	Smoot
Barkley	Gore	Logan	Swanson
Broussard	Harris	Long	Townsend
Bulkley	Harrison	Metcalf	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Hastings	Moses	Walsh, Mont.
Carey	Hawes	Pittman	Waterman
Couzens	Hebert	Reed
Davis	Jones	Schall
Fletcher	Keyes	Shipstead

So Mr. JOHNSON's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall take but a moment to add to what the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has already stated. I intend to offer an amendment to the committee amendment to strike out the figures "$10,250,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$9,000,000," which would be a cut of only $1,250,000. While that may be a small sum in a Congress which deals with billions of dollars, it is, nevertheless, a sum not to be despised when we contemplate it is the taxes to be imposed on every man, woman, and child in the United States.

Mr. JONES. That would make an additional cut of a million dollars. The committee has reported a cut of over a million dollars, so the Senator's amendment, if adopted, would make a total cut of over $2,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe the sum so nearly approximates that which the committee already has recommended that it has enough merit, aside from the "wet" and "dry" side of the question, to warrant the sober consideration of everyone. There may have been Members who voted in the negative on the last vote who thought the cut was too great. I, myself, did not think it was; I believe that perhaps a cut of $1,250,000 in this appropriation item may attract more support, and, therefore, without further debate, I offer the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I am gratified to note that the Senator from Maryland is about to become a convert to prohibition. I see that he is advocating now the "sober consideration" of a measure. For the reasons I have heretofore indicated, I trust his amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DILL. I inquire what is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, line 15, in lieu of the committee amendment, the Senator from Maryland proposes to strike out "$10,250,000" and insert "$9,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold by vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before and withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MOSES. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. He being absent, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). Making the same announcement as before, I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). When I voted, I transferred my pair to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. He has since come into the Chamber. I now transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] are detained on official business.

Mr. COOLIDGE. I desire to announce that my colleague, the Senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], is necessarily absent. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—18

Bailey	Bulow	Johnson	Tydings
Bankhead	Byrnes	Kean	Wagner
Barbour	Copeland	Lewis	Wheeler
Bingham	Cutting	Moses
Blaine	Glenn	Oddie

NAYS—43

Ashurst	Dickinson	Kendrick	Sheppard
Austin	Dill	McGill	Smith
Black	Fess	McKellar	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	McNary	Stephens
Bratton	George	Morrison	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Goldsborough	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Capper	Hale	Norris	Trammell
Connally	Hatfield	Nye	Vandenberg
Costigan	Hayden	Patterson	Watson
Couzens	Howell	Robinson, Ark.	White
Dale	Hull	Robinson, Ind.

NOT VOTING—35

Barkley	Gore	La Follette	Shortridge
Broussard	Harris	Logan	Smoot
Bulkley	Harrison	Long	Swanson
Caraway	Hastings	Metcalf	Townsend

Davis	Jones	Reed	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Keyes	Schall	Waterman
Glass	King	Shipstead

So Mr. TYDINGS's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, line 15, the committee proposes to strike out "$11,369,500" and insert "$10,250,000."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as I understand the reading of the amendment, it means that the committee has cut the prohibition-enforcement appropriation a little over a million dollars. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will continue the calling of the roll.

The Chief Clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). Making the same announcement that I made before, I desire to state that if I were at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I am satisfied, however, that if present he would vote as I shall vote on this amendment. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as heretofore and withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement regarding my pair and its transfer that I made to the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair and transfer as on the last roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to make the same announcement as before in regard to my pair and its transfer to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. I will let my vote stand.

Mr. LOGAN. I have learned that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], if he were present, would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative) I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. COOLIDGE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] are detained on official business.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 2, as follows:

YEAS—59

Ashurst	Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Cutting	Kean	Sheppard
Bailey	Dale	Kendrick	Smith
Bankhead	Dickinson	Lewis	Steiwer

and for per diems in lieu of subsistence; and for payment of the actual expenses of witnesses, as provided by section 850, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 604), including the expenses, mileage, and per diems of witnesses on behalf of the Government before the United States Customs Court, such payments to be made on the certification of the attorney for the United States and to be conclusive as provided by section 846, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 577), $3,750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 7, to reduce the appropriation for rent of rooms for the United States courts and judicial officers from $100,000 to $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 22, after the word "court," to strike out "$470,000" and insert "$400,000," so as to read:

For bailiffs, not exceeding three bailiffs in each court, except in the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois; expenses of circuit and district judges of the United States and the judges of the district courts of the United States in Alaska, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, as provided by section 259 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911 (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 9 and 596); meals and lodging for jurors in United States cases, and of bailiffs in attendance upon the same, when ordered by the court, and meals and lodging for jurors in Alaska, as provided by section 193, Title II, of the act of June 6, 1900 (31 Stat. 639); and compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court, $400,000: Provided, That no per diem shall be paid to any bailiff unless the court is actually in session and the judge present and presiding or present in chambers.

For such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized or approved by the Attorney General, for the United States courts and their officers, including experts at such rates of compensation as may be authorized or approved by the Attorney General, including also so much as may be necessary in the discretion of the Attorney General for such expenses in the District of Alaska and in courts other than Federal courts, and including traveling expenses pursuant to the subsistence expense act of 1926 (U. S. C., title 5, ch. 16), $900,000: Provided, That the maximum salary paid to any law clerk to any circuit judge shall not exceed $2,400 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 17, to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to read:

For supplies, including the exchange of typewriting and adding machines, for the United States courts and judicial officers, including firearms and ammunition therefor, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 24, after the designation "Attorney General," to strike out "$90,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to read:

For the purchase of law books, including the exchange thereof, for United States judges, district attorneys, and other judicial officers, including the libraries of the 10 United States circuit courts of appeals, for the purchase of the Federal Reporter and continuations thereto as issued, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Medical and hospital service," on page 48, line 16, after the word "patients," to strike out "$330,471" and insert "$312,000," so as to read:

For medical relief for, and incident to the care and maintenance of, inmates of penal and correctional institutions, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and not to exceed $60,568 for pay and allowances of regular commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, and including medical, surgical, and hospital supplies, materials, equipment, and appliances, together with appliances necessary for patients, $312,000, which amount, in the discretion of the Attorney General, may be transferred to the Public Health Service for direct expenditure under the laws, appropriations, and regulations governing the Public Health Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 21, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$191,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That of this appropriation not to exceed $191,000 may be expended for personal services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 25, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$707,608" and insert "$657,608," and in line 26, after the word "employees," to strike out "$1,777,960" and insert "$1,645,000," so as to read:

United States penitentiary, Leavenworth, Kans.: For the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., including not to exceed $657,608 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees, $1,645,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 5, after the word "institution," to strike out "$9,520" and insert "$8,000," so as to read:

For construction and repair of buildings, including the purchase and installation of machinery and equipment, and all expenses incident thereto, to be expended so as to give the maximum amount of employment to inmates of the institution, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 5, to insert:

No part of the appropriations made in this act for the Leavenworth Penitentiary shall be used in connection with the manufacture of machine-made brushes.

Mr. COSTIGAN rose.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. COPELAND rose.

Mr. JONES. I want to say to the Senator from New York that the amendment is subject to a point of order; but if the amendment were kept in the bill, the bill would go back to the committee. So, on behalf of the committee, I am withdrawing the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Would it go back to the committee automatically, in case nobody raised the point of order?

Mr. JONES. The point of order was about to be raised.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, it was my intention to raise the point of order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his point of order for just a moment?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. It is the practice in Leavenworth Penitentiary to have the prisoners make paint brushes and other brushes, brooms, and so on. Of course, the purpose of having that work done by the inmates of the prison is a very worthy one. It is humane that they should have work of some sort to occupy them. But the fact is that at Leavenworth Prison machinery has been installed—labor-saving machinery, if you will—and in consequence the amount of hand labor—of occupational labor—has been reduced. The filling in of time by the inmates of the prison is reduced by the fact that many of these brushes are made by machinery. It would seem to me that since we are not striving to make money out of the prisoners, that we are not seeking to compete with the industrial world, but simply to do the humane thing of occupying the time of the prisoners, we ought not to have labor-saving devices and machinery turn out these products en masse.

There is another thing. Of course, we do not want the prisoners in these institutions to compete with free men, with brush factories where men who have not committed crime are occupied and employed. Certainly in this time of financial depression we do not want the work of free men to be wiped out in order that the inmates of penitentiaries may be given work at labor-saving devices, in order to supply large quantities of brushes which replace those which would be made in private institutions by men who have not committed crime.

My friend from Colorado, I think, is the last man in the world who would interfere with the activity of free men. Of course, he is within his rights, I recognize—and I did recognize that fact in the committee—if he finds it necessary to raise the point that this is legislation; and I must submit that perhaps while it is a border-line case, undoubtedly the Chair would be obliged to hold that it is legislation. But I hope the Senator from Colorado will withhold his objection and let this amendment remain in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chairman of the committee, acting within his right, has withdrawn the amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the able Senator from New York, I desire to submit a few remarks dealing with the suggestions made by him.

It is understood, of course, that I insist on the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. COSTIGAN. According to doubtless reliable information, the amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, if adopted, would not be in the interest of economy.

It would cost the Government a substantial sum of money annually. Last year the brush shop at the Leavenworth Penitentiary is said to have paid into the Treasury of the United States profits to the amount of about $40,000 to be applied toward the expense of maintaining the prisoners. If this amendment were to prevail, the shop would be unable to make brushes satisfactory to other Government departments and this profit instead of going to the benefit of taxpayers would be diverted to a few private brush manufacturers.

In answer to the Senator from New York, it would also appear that the committee amendment is not in the interest of unemployment relief. I am advised that the prohibition of the use of machinery in this little brush industry will not put any free men to work. The brush manufacturers apparently are willing to allow the prisoners to do all handwork and protest only against the small part of the prison brush work which is done by machinery. The testimony indicates that only by using a bristle-mixing machine can certain brushes be satisfactorily produced, and that without the machine the prison would be forced out of production.

This amendment is inconsistent with the spirit of existing law. The committee amendment would, it is said, cause serious dislocations in the prisons of the country. The Federal Government is proceeding in harmony with the Hawes-Cooper Act. None of the affected products are sold in the open market but only to Government departments, thus saving the taxpayers money and eliminating unfair competition.

It is now supposed that the attempt to exempt a few commercial brush manufacturers repudiates the reported arrangement between the Federation of Labor and interested employers, which led to the adoption of the Hawes-Cooper bill and the Federal prison labor bill, approved by the American Federation of Labor.

The point of order is that the committee amendment, in effect, repeals in part the act of May 27, 1930. It seeks to incorporate legislation in an appropriation act.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 11, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$419,612" and insert "$390,000," and at the end of line 12 to strike out "$1,126,040" and insert "$1,045,000," so as to read:

United States penitentiary, Atlanta, Ga.: For the United States penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., including not to exceed $390,000 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees, $1,045,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, at the end of line 17, to strike out "$13,000" and insert "$8,500," so as to read:

For construction and repair of buildings, including the purchase and installation of machinery and equipment, and all expenses incident thereto, to be expended so as to give the maximum amount of employment to inmates of the institution, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 20, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$209,672" and insert "$200,000," and in line 22 to strike out "$447,520" and insert "$428,500," so as to read:

United States penitentiary, McNeil Island, Wash.: For the United States penitentiary at McNeil Island, Wash., including not to exceed $200,000 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees, $428,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 2, after the word "institution," to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$32,000," so as to read:

For construction and repair of buildings, including the purchase and installation of machinery and equipment, and all expenses incident thereto, to be expended so as to give the maximum amount of employment to inmates of the institution, $32,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 5, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$259,500" and insert "$244,000," and at the end of line 6 to strike out "$469,000" and insert "$440,000," so as to read:

United States Northeastern Penitentiary: for the United States penitentiary in the Northeast, including not to exceed $244,000 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees, $440,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 10, before the word "for," to strike out "$146,326" and insert "$137,000," and at the end of line 11, strike out "$320,860" and insert "$300,000," so as to read:

Federal Industrial Institution for Women, Alderson, W. Va.: For the Federal Industrial Institution for Women at Alderson, W. Va., including not to exceed $137,000 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 14, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$279,900" and insert "$260,000" and, at the end of line 16, to strike out "$683,900" and insert "$634,000," so as to read:

United States Industrial Reformatory, Chillicothe, Ohio: For the United States Industrial Reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio, including not to exceed $260,000 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees, $634,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 3, after the word "direct," to strike out "$700,000" and insert "$521,000," so as to read:

Construction: For the remodeling and construction of the necessary buildings and appurtenances, purchase of mechanical equipment, and other expenses incident to the construction of buildings in accordance with the provisions of "An act for the establishment of a United States Industrial Reformatory," approved January 7, 1925 (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 832), to be expended under the direction and upon the written order of the Attorney General, or his authorized representative, by contract or purchase of material and hire of labor and services and utilization of labor of United States prisoners, as the Attorney General may direct, $521,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 18, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$139,857" and insert "$130,000" and at the end of line 21, to strike out "$305,000" and insert "$284,000," so as to read:

United States Southwestern Reformatory, maintenance: For the United States Southwestern Reformatory, including not to exceed $130,000 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees and not to exceed $2,000 for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $284,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 12, after the word "direct," to strike out "$727,000" and insert "$520,000," so as to read:

United States Southwestern Reformatory, construction: For the United States Southwestern Reformatory, including any cost incident to the acquisition and occupation of the site selected on the Reno Quartermaster Depot Military Reservation, Okla., and for remodeling, constructing, and equipping the necessary buildings thereon, purchase of mechanical equipment, and other expenses incident thereto, as authorized by the act entitled "An act establishing two institutions for the confinement of United States prisoners," approved May 27, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 18, secs. 901, 911, 912), to be expended under the direction and upon the written order of the Attorney General, by contract or purchase of material and hire of labor and services and utilization of labor of United States prisoners, as the Attorney General may direct, $520,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 19, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$34,767" and insert "$31,000"; and in line 22, to strike out "$299,000" and insert "$270,000," so as to read:

United States Hospital for Defective Delinquents: For the United States Hospital for Defective Delinquents, including not to exceed $31,000 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees and not to exceed $2,500 for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $270,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 23, after the words "For the," to strike out "completion of the," and on page 53, line 9, after the word "direct," to strike out "$775,000" and insert "$468,000," so as to read:

For the United States Hospital for Defective Delinquents, including the cost of purchasing a site, remodeling, constructing and equipping the necessary buildings thereon, purchase of mechanical equipment and all other expenses incident thereto, as authorized by the act entitled "An act to establish a hospital for defective delinquents," approved May 13, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 18, secs. 871, 872, 880), to be expended under the direction and upon the written order of the Attorney General, by contract or purchase of material and hire of labor and services and utilization of labor of United States prisoners, as the Attorney General may direct, $468,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 53, line 9, after the word "direct," the Senator from Missouri moves to strike out the figures "$468,000" and to insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,250,000."

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, this item carries the appropriation for the erection of the United States Hospital for Defective Delinquents provided for by the act of May 13, 1930. It is wholly insufficient to complete the hospital. It is not even sufficient to take care of the obligation of the Government on outstanding contracts. The reduction of this appropriation is not an economy. It simply defers the day of payment. It constitutes an abandonment of a part of the building program inaugurated to relieve the unemployment situation. This is a very necessary institution.

There are between 400 and 500 patients who are either insane or are bordering on insanity in the Federal penal institutions of this country. There are approximately 150 prisoners who are afflicted with tuberculosis and about the same number suffering from other degenerative diseases.

These prisoners are in need of hospitalization and medical attention rather than punishment. At the present time there is no Federal institution where these unfortunates can receive the proper treatment. Those who have given thought and study to our penal problems have long urged the establishment of a separate institution where proper care and treatment could be administered delinquents suffering from mental and physical diseases.

When the question came before the Seventy-first Congress it was developed in the House hearings that at that time there were approximately 150 mental patients confined at St. Elizabeths and that the others were confined in various Federal penal institutions in the country. The same deplorable conditions were shown to exist with reference to those afflicted with physical diseases. For instance, at the Atlanta Penitentiary there were approximately 40 tubercular patients who lived in tents in the prison yard. During the winter they kept warm by means of oil stoves within their tents. These same conditions exist to-day.

It was to meet this condition that the Seventy-first Congress passed an act to establish a hospital for the proper care and treatment of defective delinquents suffering from mental or physical disease. The second deficiency bill of the Seventy-first Congress carried an appropriation of $1,250,000 for this purpose and limited the total cost to $2,500,000.

In accordance with this authority, the plans for the necessary buildings for such an institution were drawn by the architects. The contract for the erection of the main unit has already been awarded at a cost of $1,710,000, and the work is now under way. This unit when completed will take care of the mental patients and possibly other inmates, but it will not take care of the tubercular patients. The plans as drawn call for a separate tubercular unit. It should not require any argument that the tubercular patients should be kept in a separate building and not confined in the same building with the insane patients; and yet, if this amendment is not agreed to, that is exactly what will happen.

Unless this amendment is agreed to, it will disarrange the entire plan for this institution. The Department of Justice requested, and the Budget Bureau recommended, an appropriation of $1,250,000 for the completion of this hospital. The subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, after a full hearing, recommended an appropriation of $1,050,000, but the full Appropriations Committee of the House, without any further hearings, arbitrarily cut the appropriation to $775,000 for the completion of the hospital, and in that form the bill passed the House.

When the bill came to the Senate the Appropriations Committee after a hearing raised the appropriation to $1,050,000, and in that form it was first reported to the Senate. When the bill was recommitted to the Appropriations Committee the amount was reduced to $468,000, a sum which is insufficient to even pay the outstanding obligations of the Government on contracts that have already been let.

The total ascertainable outstanding obligation of the Government at this time amounts to $1,860,435.59. This does not include the obligation on a contract for rock excavation, as information relative to quantities to be excavated is not available.

If only the $468,000 carried in this bill is added to the amount already appropriated the total appropriation will amount to only $1,718,000, which will leave a deficit of more than $142,435 on outstanding obligations of the Government on contracts already awarded and under which work is being carried on at this time.

Instead of a hospital costing $2,500,000, as originally intended by Congress and for which the plans have already been drawn and a part of the building contracts already let and construction under way, we will have one that will cost only $1,718,000, and one that will be incapable of rendering the service originally intended by Congress.

The act establishing this hospital provided that the Attorney General should select the site and empowered him to accept a donation of a site for that purpose. After a careful inspection of many sites in various States, one was selected near Springfield, Mo., on a tract of 435 acres. The people of Springfield were requested to donate the site to the Government. It was represented to the citizens that the Government would build a hospital unit at a cost of approximately $2,500,000. Indeed, the act of Congress so provided. The people of Springfield by popular subscription raised the sum of $135,000 for the purchase of the site and donated it to the Government on this assumption.

It appears to me that it would be a breach of faith on the part of the Government not to build at this time the character of hospital that it was held out to the citizens was in contemplation when the site was donated. The work should not be deferred but should go forward at once.

In addition to its being a very necessary institution in properly handling our penal problems, it is also a part of the building program to relieve the unemployed. Springfield is a city of approximately 60,000 inhabitants and has suffered rather severely as a result of the depression. One of its chief industries, the general shops of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Co., has been closed down a large part of the time.

One of the representations made to the citizens when subscriptions were asked for the purchase of the site was that the construction would relieve to some extent the unemployment situation in the community. The Government should keep faith with its citizens. As a matter of economy the construction of this hospital should go forward now, as it can be built at a less cost than it could be at some future time.

From a humane standpoint the institution should be built at the earliest possible time, for we have no other institution for the proper care and treatment of these unfortunates suffering from tubercular and mental afflictions.

It seems to me, Mr. President, in view of the action of the Senate this afternoon in relation to the building program, that there ought not to be any question about the adoption of the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have very much sympathy with what the Senator from Missouri has said. There is truth in the situation as he has stated it. The committee, when it first reported the bill, recommended this item, but when the bill was recommitted by the Senate with instructions to make a cut of 10 per cent, we followed the advice of the Attorney General with reference to this particular item. We would like to have all that the Senator from Missouri has mentioned and desires, but under all the circumstances I hope the amendment proposed by him will not be accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 53, line 15, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$488,810" and insert "$453,000," and at the end of line 16, to strike out "$877,200" and insert "$815,000," so as to read:

. Federal jails: For maintenance and operation of Federal jails established under authority of the act of May 14, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 18, sec. 753b), and the house of detention for Federal prisoners in New York City, including not to exceed $453,000 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees, $815,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 7, before the word "to," to strike out "$500" and insert "$10,000," so as to read:

Federal jails: For the purchase of sites, constructing, remodeling, and equipping necessary buildings, purchase and installation of machinery and equipment, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, for establishing new Federal jails and altering and adapting other Government property for jail purposes, as authorized by the act entitled "An act to reorganize the administration of Federal prisons; to authorize the Attorney General to contract for the care of United States prisoners; to establish Federal jails, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 18, secs. 753c, 753d), to be expended under the direction and upon the written order of the Attorney General, by contract or purchase of material and hire of labor and services and utilization of labor of United States prisoners, as the Attorney General may direct, $10,000, to remain available until expended; and the Attorney General may contract with such suitable person or firm as he may select for the work of preparing plans, drawings, designs, specifications, and estimates for remodeling and construction of the necessary buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 19, after the word "prisoners," to strike out "$878,000" and insert "$800,000," so as to read:

Prison camps: For the construction and repair of buildings at prison camps, the purchase and installation of machinery and equipment, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, and for the maintenance of United States prisoners at prison camps, including the maintenance, alteration, repair, and operation of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying bus, to be expended so as to give the maximum amount of employment to prisoners, $800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 2, before the word "for," to strike out "$128,080" and insert "$120,000," and at the end of line 3, to strike out "$265,260" and insert "$248,000," so as to read:

National Training School for Boys, Washington, D. C.: For the National Training School for Boys, Washington, D. C., including not to exceed $120,000 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees, $248,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, at the end of line 8, to strike out "$124,000" and insert "$76,000," so as to read:

For construction, repairs, and alterations of buildings, including the purchase and installation of machinery and equipment, and all expenses incident thereto, to be expended so as to give the maximum amount of employment to inmates of the institution, $76,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 14, before the word "Provided," to strike out "$440,000" and insert "$415,000," so as to read:

Probation system, United States courts: For salaries and expenses of probation officers, as authorized by the act entitled "An act to amend the act of March 4, 1925, chapter 521, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 18, sec. 726), $415,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for probation system, United States courts, on page 55, line 14, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$80,000" and insert "$70,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not to exceed $70,000 of this appropriation may be expended for travel and subsistence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 16, after the word "subsistence," to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no part of the appropriation herein made shall be used to pay any probation officer a salary in excess of $2,600 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, at the end of line 18, to strike out "$2,942,281" and insert "$2,870,000," so as to read:

Support of prisoners: For support of United States prisoners, in non-Federal institutions and in the Territory of Alaska, including necessary clothing and medical aid, discharge gratuities provided by law and transportation to place of conviction or place of bona fide residence in the United States, or such other place within the United States as may be authorized by the Attorney General; and including rent, repair, alteration, and maintenance of buildings and the maintenance of prisoners therein, occupied under authority of sections 4 and 5 of the act of May 14, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 18, sec. 696); support of prisoners becoming insane during imprisonment, and who continue insane after expiration of sentence, who have no friends to whom they can be sent; shipping remains of deceased prisoners to their friends or relatives in the United States, and interment of deceased prisoners whose remains are unclaimed; expenses incurred in identifying and pursuing escaped prisoners and for rewards for their recapture; and for repairs, betterments, and improvements of United States jails, including sidewalks, $2,870,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 56, line 18, I offer an amendment to carry out what the Senate has previously done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56, line 18, in the committee amendment strike out "$2,870,000" and insert "$2,855,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title III.—Department of Commerce, office of the Secretary," on page 57, line 3, after the word "department," to strike out "$331,-142; in all, $346,142" and insert "$300,000; in all, $315,000," so as to read:

Salaries: Secretary of Commerce, $15,000; Assistant Secretary and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including the chief clerk and superintendent, who shall be chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary of Commerce to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary of the department, $300,000; in all, $315,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, Department of Commerce," on page 58, line 4, after the word "foregoing," to strike out "$303,200" and insert "$238,200," so as to read:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the offices and bureaus of the department, except the Patent Office, including those for which appropriations for contingent and miscellaneous expenses are specifically made, including professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, blank books, pamphlets, maps, newspapers (not exceeding $2,500); purchase of atlases or maps; stationery; furniture and repairs to same; carpets, matting, oilcloth, file cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges; fuel, lighting, and heating; not to exceed $3,500 for the purchase and exchange of one passenger-carrying automobile for the Secretary of Commerce; purchase and exchange of motor trucks and bicycles; maintenance, repair, and operation of three motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles (one for the Secretary of Commerce and two for the general use of the department), and motor trucks and bicycles, to be used only for official purposes; freight and express charges; postage to foreign countries; telegraph and telephone service; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; first-aid outfits for use in the buildings occupied by employees of this department; street-car fares, not exceeding $500; and all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, $238,200, which sum shall constitute the appropriation for contingent expenses of the department, except the Patent Office, and shall also be available for the purchase of necessary supplies and equipment for field services of bureaus and offices of the department for which contingent and miscellaneous appropriations are specifically made in order to facilitate the purchase through the central purchasing office (division of purchases and sales), as provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 22, after the name "Patent Office," to strike out "$708,750" and insert "$600,000," so as to read:

For all printing and binding for the Department of Commerce, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere except the Patent Office, $600,000: Provided, That an amount not to exceed $2,000 of this appropriation may be expended for salaries of persons detailed from the Government Printing Office for service as copy editors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Federal Employment Stabilization Board," on page 59, line 13, before the word "of," to strike out "$90,000" and insert "$75,000," and in line 14, before the word "may," to strike out "$70,000" and insert "$58,000," so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: To enable the Secretary of Commerce to carry out the provisions of the "employment stabilization act of 1931," approved February 10, 1931 (46 Stat. 1084–1087), including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, traveling expenses, purchase of equipment, furniture, stationery and office supplies, printing and binding, repairs to equipment, law books, books of reference, and other necessary publications, and to procure by contract or otherwise any information or data concerning construction which may be considered pertinent, and all other incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, $75,000, of which amount not to exceed $58,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Radio Division," on page 60, line 6, after the word "foregoing," to strike out "$590,000" and insert "$490,000," and in line 7, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$78,315" and insert "$65,315," so as to read:

Wireless communication laws: To enable the Secretary of Commerce to enforce the acts of Congress "to require apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean steamers" and "to regulate radio communication" and carry out the provisions of the international radiotelegraphic convention, examine and settle international radio accounts, including personal services in the District of Columbia, and to employ such persons and means as may be necessary, traveling and subsistence expenses, purchase and exchange of instruments, technical books, tabulating, duplicating, and other office machinery and devices, rent, improvement and care of grounds and repairs to buildings not to exceed $1,500, and all other miscellaneous items, including rubber gloves, aprons, rubber boots, and necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, $490,000, of which amount not to exceed $65,315 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Aircraft in commerce," on page 60, line 18, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$325,520" and insert "$270,520," and on page 61, line 11, after the words "in all," to strike out "$1,301,160" and insert "$1,000,000," so as to read:

Aircraft in commerce: To carry out the provisions of the act approved May 20, 1926, entitled "An act to encourage and regulate the use of aircraft in commerce, and for other purposes" (U. S. C., title 49, secs. 171–184), as amended by the act approved February 28, 1929 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 49, sec. 173d), including salary of Assistant Secretary of Commerce (provided for in the act cited above) and other personal services in the District of Columbia (not to exceed $270,520) and elsewhere; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses; contract stenographic reporting services; fees and mileage of witnesses; purchase of furniture and equipment; stationery and supplies, including medical supplies, typewriting, adding and computing machines, accessories and repairs; purchase, including exchange, not to exceed $3,000; maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in field work; purchase and replacement, including exchange, of airplanes (not to exceed $65,000); purchase of airplane motors, airplane and motor accessories and spare parts; maintenance, operation, and repair of airplanes and airplane motors; purchase of special clothing, wearing apparel and similar equipment for aviation purposes; purchase of books of reference and periodicals; newspapers, reports, documents, plans, specifications, maps, manuscripts, and all other publications; and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing; in all, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 20, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$160,310" and insert "$155,310," and on page 62, line 3, after the word "grant," to strike out "$7,553,500" and insert "$7,350,000: Provided, That $200,000 of said sum shall be expended toward establishing a line between Puget Sound and the Twin Cities," so as to make the paragraph read:

Air-navigation facilities: For the establishment and maintenance of aids to air navigation, including the equipment of additional air mail routes for day and night flying; the construction of necessary lighting, radio, and other signalling and communicating structures and apparatus; repairs, alterations, and all expenses of maintenance and operation; investigation, research, and experimentation to develop and improve aids to air navigation; for personal services in the District of Columbia (not to exceed $155,310) and elsewhere; purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in field work, including their exchange; replacement, including exchange, of not to exceed four airplanes, maintenance, operation, and repair of airplanes, including accessories and spare parts and special clothing, wearing apparel, and suitable equipment for aviation purposes; and for the acquisition of the necessary sites by lease or grant, $7,350,000: Provided, That $200,000 of said sum shall be expended toward establishing a line between Puget Sound and the Twin Cities: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for any purpose not authorized by the air commerce act of 1926.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 18, after the name "District of Columbia," to strike out "$273,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to read:

BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 17, after the word "foregoing," to strike out "$664,000" and insert "$462,000," so as to read:

District and cooperative office service: For all expenses necessary to operate and maintain district and cooperative offices, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, rent outside of the District of Columbia, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, purchase of furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, and computing machines, accessories and repairs, purchase of maps, books of reference and periodicals, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscripts, not exceeding $1,200 for newspapers, both foreign and domestic, and all other publications necessary for the promotion of the commercial interests of the United States, and all other incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, $462,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 19, after the word "office," to insert "except in cases where space is available in Federal buildings or plans for the construction of such buildings are under way," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce shall require as a condition for the opening of a new office or the continuation of an existing office, except in cases where space is available in Federal buildings or plans for the construction of such buildings are under way, that commercial organizations in the district affected provide suitable quarters without cost to the Government on and after September 1, 1932.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 13, after the word "foregoing," to strike out "$22,000" and insert "$17,000," so as to read:

Enforcement of China trade act: To carry out the provisions of the act entitled "China trade act, 1922" (U. S. C., title 15, secs. 141–162), including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, purchase of furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding and computing machines, accessories and repairs, purchase of books of reference and periodicals, reports, documents, plans, specifications, maps, manuscripts and all other publications; rent outside the District of Columbia; ice and drinking water for office purposes, and all necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, $17,000: Provided, That payment in advance for telephone and other similar services under this appropriation is hereby authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, at the end of line 5, to strike out "$915,000" and insert "$750,000," so as to read:

Export industries: To enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to investigate and report on domestic as well as foreign problems relating to the production, distribution, and marketing, in so far as they relate to the important export industries of the United States, including personal services in the District of Columbia, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, purchase of furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, and computing machines, accessories and repairs, books of reference and periodicals, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscripts, and all other publications, rent outside of the District of Columbia, ice and drinking water for office purposes, and all other incidental expenses connected therewith, $750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, at the end of line 21, to strike out "$446,531" and insert "$300,000," so as to read:

Domestic commerce and raw materials investigations: For all expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference and periodicals, furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, and computing machines, accessories and repairs, medical supplies and first-aid outfits, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscripts, maps, and all other publications, rent outside of the District of Columbia, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, and all other incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, to enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to collect and compile information regarding the disposition and handling of raw materials and manufactures within the United States; and to investigate the conditions of production and marketing of foreign raw materials essential for American industries, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, at the end of line 15, to strike out "$360,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to read:

Customs statistics: For all expenses necessary for the operation of the section of customs statistics transferred to the Department of Commerce from the Treasury Department by the act approved January 5, 1923 (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 194), including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; rent of or purchase of tabulating, punching, sorting, and other mechanical labor-saving machinery or devices, including adding, typewriting, billing, computing, mimeographing, multigraphing, photostat, and other duplicating machines and devices, including their exchange and repair; telegraph and telephone service; subsistence and traveling expenses of officers and employees while traveling on official business; freight, express, drayage; tabulating cards, stationery, and miscellaneous office supplies; books of reference and periodicals; furniture and equipment; ice, water, heat, light, and power; street-car fare; and all other necessary and incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 1, after the word "buyers," to strike out "$70,000" and insert "$60,000," so as to read:

Lists of foreign buyers: For all necessary expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, and computing machines, accessories and repairs, lists of foreign buyers, books of reference, periodicals, reports, documents, plans, specifications, rent outside of the District of Columbia, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, and all other incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, to enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to collect and compile lists of foreign buyers, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, at the end of line 20, to strike out "$62,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to read:

Investigation of foreign trade restrictions: For all necessary expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, and computing machines, accessories and repairs, books of reference and periodicals, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscripts, and all other publications, rent outside of the District of Columbia, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, and all other incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, to enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to collect and compile information regarding the restrictions and regulations of trade imposed by foreign countries, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, at the end of line 10, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$45,000," so as to read:

Transportation of families and effects of officers and employees: To pay the itemized and verified statements of the actual and necessary expenses of transportation and subsistence, under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce may prescribe, of families and effects of officers and employees of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in going to and returning from their posts, or when traveling under the order of the Secretary of Commerce, and also for defraying the expenses of preparing and transporting the remains of officers and employees of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce who may die abroad or in transit, while in the discharge of their official duties, to their former homes in this country, or to a place not more distant for interment, and for the ordinary expenses of such interment, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 69, beginning in line 11, strike out the remainder of the paragraph, including lines 1 and 2, on page 70, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Commerce, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to establish in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, a Foreign Commerce Service of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1927," approved April 12, 1930 (46 Stat., p. 163), to furnish the officers in the Foreign Commerce Service of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce stationed in a foreign country, without cost to them and within the limits of this appropriation, allowances for living quarters, heat, and light, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 70), $175,000: Provided, That the maximum allowance to any officer shall not exceed $1,700.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not in order at the present time. We are proceeding to the consideration of committee amendments only at this time.

However, the Senator from Texas may be recognized though the amendment may not be considered at the moment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then I offer an amendment to the committee amendment to strike out "$175,000" and insert "$100,000." I ask that the amendment offered a moment ago may lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the committee amendment as now stated by the Senator from Texas is in order. The amendment previously offered by him will lie on the table.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it will be observed that this paragraph provides a fund out of which the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce makes allowances to its employees in foreign countries to pay house rent, heat, light, and expenses of that kind, in addition to their regular salaries. I want to invite the attention of the Senate to the generous manner in which these employees are treated by the department.

On page 62 of the bill it will be noted that each commercial attaché is provided with a clerk at a salary of not to exceed $3,000 per annum. That is more than is paid to the clerks of Senators, with the exception of secretaries to Senators. That is much more than is received by most of the clerks in the departments here in Washington.

On pages 68 and 69 is a paragraph which makes appropriation of $45,000 to pay the transportation of these employees from the United States to their foreign posts and return. No limitation is made as to whether they return of their own will on leave or whether they are traveling on official business.

In addition to their salaries, in addition to the payment of their transportation to and from their posts, in the paragraph now before us the Government is proposing to appropriate $175,000 per year to hand to these employees in the form of allowances for house rent or quarters, for light, and for heat. Those are privileges and advantages which no one at home enjoys except possibly in the Army and Navy under the old laws which have been in operation for many, many years.

Under the present condition of affairs in the world, living expenses abroad are cheaper than they are in the United States as compared to what they were some years ago. Because of the depreciation of foreign currency, because of the depreciation of commodity prices in other countries, these clerks in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and other employees of that bureau, have the softest snaps of anybody in the Government service. No cuts are made in their salaries. If the Senate really wants to economize, if the President really wants to economize, if anybody really wants to economize, here is a place where economy can be practiced without any hardship to anyone on earth.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Texas, if he deigns to remember anything that I say, will recall that I have inveighed from time to time against the flat 10 per cent cut. Not over two weeks ago when asked by the able senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] where I would cut if we should not make a 10 per cent flat cut, I referred to this particular item.

I think the Senator from Texas is rising to the heights of statesmanship by courageously singling out items that ought to be cut. Instead of being subjected to a 10 per cent cut, there are in every bill many items that ought to be cut 50 per cent or even 70 per cent; and there are also items that should be increased 10 per cent instead of being reduced 10 per cent. I am very pleased that the able Senator from Texas has spoken on this subject. I hope he will have more success than I have had, and I shall take pleasure in voting with him. What he has said about the partiality to the particular employees mentioned is true. Those at home doing faithful work during many hours a day receive a cut while those gallivanting—if the Senator knows what that word means—abroad have their expenses paid whether on pleasure or business or what not.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I understand that, because I was abroad with the Senator on one occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senator is making a splendid plea, and we had opportunity for ocular observation to ascertain whether or not such employees and appointees of the Government should have their salaries reduced.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Arizona for his suggestion.

Many are going about Washington now, like old Diogenes with a lantern, looking for men whom we can remove from the Government service. We hear much about duplications and overlapping and economy. The White House has a multigraphing department that turns out bales of that kind of material every day. We have here on the Senate floor and in the House of Representatives oratory by the ton, if it could be cornered and dehydrated and condensed. There is much talk about economy and cutting off useless bureaus and useless expenditures; but when some of us undertake to put our hand on an item and eliminate it, others rise up and vote us down.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say that it strikes me that this item ought to be cut out.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly, it ought to be cut out.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to that being done.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to have the Senator from Tennessee agree that this item ought to be cut. We talk about bureaucracy. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in its organization abroad is the very essence of bureaucracy.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall yield in just a moment. That bureau has its representatives scattered all over the earth and, in addition to having them, we have commercial attachés and consuls all over the world; and most of the work that the attachés of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce are performing could be performed by the United States consuls, and ought to be performed by them. I now yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Take for example, Mr. President, on page 45, lines 10 to 11, there is a proviso that the maximum salary paid to any law clerk to a circuit judge shall not exceed $2,400 per annum. If in this Government there be men who are underpaid, it is the law clerks of circuit judges. I happen to know that the law clerk to a circuit judge works with as much diligence as and performs more onerous duties than sometimes the most successful lawyer in this country. Quite frequently the law clerk to a circuit judge does more work than does the judge himself. Yet we propose to pay such law clerks $200 a month; and then not only refuse to cut the pay of employees abroad, who possibly work one hour a day, but we propose to give them their traveling expenses without any limitation as to whether they are traveling on business or pleasure. So, I say again it is now becoming obvious how ridiculous it was to make a cut of 10 per cent when there are some items which should have been cut 100 per cent, some that should have been cut 50 per cent, and some that should have been raised 10 per cent.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask to what page of the bill the Senator from Arizona refers?

Mr. ASHURST. I refer to page 45.

I read from the bill reported by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with amendments on April 11 the following proviso:

That the maximum salary paid to any law clerk to any circuit judge shall not exceed $2,400 per annum.

That provision is found in lines 10, 11, and 12.

Mr. JONES. That is correct; that is the House language; the Senate made no provision of that kind but merely accepted the House language.

Mr. ASHURST. I am saying that here is an item that ought to be increased. I have never been on the circuit bench or on the Federal district bench, but I am sure that every lawyer here will bear me out that it is—I was going to say the height of folly, but I will say it is the depth of folly, to pay the law clerk of a circuit judge only $200 per month, and then furnish a traveling-expense account, heat, light, and fuel, to other employees who are sent abroad by the Government and who do not work one-tenth of the time the law clerks to the circuit judges work.

So the Senator from Texas, with that splendid ability of his, is directing his fire to an abuse that ought to be corrected and is now demonstrating what I tried to demonstrate, namely, the folly of a 10 per cent reduction. How was the 10 per cent arrived at? By what process of subtraction was it concluded that it would be well to cut all items 10 per cent? Why was it not made 12 per cent? The very arbitrariness of the figure 10 per cent discloses an absolute bankruptcy of ideas on the subject.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am glad to have the remarks which I undertook to deliver so forcefully reinforced by the Senator from Arizona. I submit, in all fairness, to the Senator that when a man in this country is given a job abroad and the Government pays his traveling expenses to and from his foreign assignment and then, in addition, pays his house rent, it is giving that man, even if the salary were the same, a higher rate of pay than is given the employees of the Government here at home. Then, when it is recollected that clothing is cheaper abroad, that food is cheaper abroad, and when, on top of that fact, it is realized that by reason of the inflated currencies of foreign countries the value of their money has depreciated, there results a situation whereby we are paying these employees in foreign countries perhaps twice the rate that we are paying employees in the Government service at home.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall yield in a moment.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a second. And in addition to that, it is provided in this bill that clerks—ordinary clerks—who serve abroad may draw as high as $3,000 a year.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to say to the Senator that I would be very glad to support any move to cut out the whole paragraph.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am going to move to do so; I have a motion to that effect to make, but it is not in order just now. I shall move to cut it all out when we get to it, but I want to make a cut of a hundred thousand dollars now.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Have we not done exactly this thing this afternoon in the case of the Department of State?

Mr. CONNALLY. I can not answer the Senator as to that, because I was out of the Chamber for a while, serving on the Finance Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me say to the Senator that my understanding is that in the portions of the bill applying to the Department of State through which we have gone we have done exactly the same thing as to which in the case of employees of the Department of Commerce the Senator complains. I have but this to say: I think we ought to play the game alike.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am in favor of playing the game fairly.

Mr. JOHNSON. And if we are going to provide these allowances for the representatives abroad of the Department of State, we ought to let the provision for the representatives abroad of the Department of Commerce remain in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the Senator is partially correct about that. Some years ago, I shall say to the Senator, when Congress passed the authorization act providing for what are called post allowances in the Foreign Service, the Senator from Texas opposed it and voted against it. The reason which was advanced at that time was just the opposite of the reason that exists to-day. It was argued then that, by reason of conditions immediately following the war, living costs abroad were much higher than they were in the United States, and that employees of the United States, living in foreign countries, were entitled to post allowances for entertainment, and for tea, and Congress gave them a large amount of money with which to supplement their salaries.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. JONES. The item in the bill to which the Senator is referring is not covered by post allowances. In the case of the State Department rent, light, fuel, and so forth, are provided in another item, but these allowances are the result, I may say to the Senator, of the passage of a law about two years ago which this appropriation is intended to carry out. It was felt that there was the same reason for employees of the Department of Commerce serving abroad to have these allowances as there was for the employees of the State Department who were serving abroad. These are distinct from the post allowances in the State Department, however.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand they are distinct, but the Senator from California was calling attention to the fact that the principle was the same; and, so far as that is concerned, I shall say to the Senator from California I shall vote to strike out or reduce the post-allowance item from the State Department provision just as I shall here, although I might in fairness admit that there is some little obligation perhaps on the part of State Department officers abroad to do some little entertaining. There is none, however, with reference to the attachés of the Commerce Department; and when it comes to furnishing them house rent and paying them for their heat and their light, those items do not enter into entertainment at all but are living expenses.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I have not investigated the matter at all and have been interested in what the Senator has said and am considerably in sympathy with what he has in mind. I wondered, however, whether this is not the explanation: The Senator will recall that when the World War opened we found that, in connection with our Foreign Service abroad, large numbers of foreign citizens were employed, both in the diplomatic and consular, as well as in the commercial service. I was amazed to ascertain the number of Germans employed at rather low salaries in our service, who, as the Senator knows, are usually very well educated. When the inevitable time came to displace the aliens thus employed in our Foreign Service, because of our entrance into the war against Germany, we had to supply their places with Americans. Up to that time we had paid little attention to that situation. So I am wondering whether that element does not enter into the situation? I myself know nothing about it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall say to the Senator that I was on the committee in the House of Representatives that handled this matter at that time, and the allowances then authorized were not due to the inadequacy of salaries, but it was claimed that, by reason of the disparity of exchange and the differing values of foreign money, there were certain posts in foreign countries where living costs were so out of balance with those of a normal period that employees of the United States in such service ought to have a post allowance in order to equalize such costs. That was the case immediately after the war.

All of this, together with what the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has said, as well as what the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has said, illustrates that whenever we establish a little precedent, and give one class of employees or one special group or one special interest an advantage, it is then utilized by every other group to obtain the same sort of treatment. The Senator from Washington admits that this provision was adopted only two or three years ago because many years before that employees of the State Department had been given these privileges and these bounties.

The Senator from Washington does not contend that two or three years ago foreign currencies were out of balance; he does not even contend that normal conditions were not operating; but, because there was that sort of a precedent, there were given to these Foreign Service employees these special advantages which amount, in effect, to a substantial increase in their salaries.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, my committee did not handle this legislation, I will say to the Senator, but I think he is correct, that it was largely done because it was felt that employees of the Commerce Department in foreign countries ought to be treated substantially the same as employees of the State Department serving abroad, and that was largely the reason why that legislation was passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. That was the reason; yes. Somebody else was getting a handout, and they wanted a handout.

Mr. JONES. We are simply complying with the law.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not criticising the Senator's committee.

Mr. JONES. I know it.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is an authorization for it, and the Senator takes the department's recommendations and those of the Budget, and what was done last year is done this year. I want to say, however, that we are talking about economy, and now is the time and this is the place to economize.

These Foreign Service officers are not suffering by reason of these conditions. They are profiting by these conditions. There is not a capital in Europe where, on the same basic rate of pay, a man may not live as cheaply as he lives in Washington; perhaps more cheaply. We are not only giving them handsome salaries, but we are paying their expenses to and from Europe, and then we are paying their house-rent and their heat and their light to as much as $1,700 each. It is not right. It is not just. It is not fair to other employees, who, no doubt, are going to have their salaries reduced.

Talk about bureaucracy and overlapping! Go abroad. You will find there representatives of the State Department, diplomats; you will find scattered all over the earth United States consuls; and then, in the same capital, you will find these Department of Commerce men rushing around, trying to imitate the Department of State, and suspending operations about 3 o'clock and going to tea for the rest of the day. You will find that the Department of Agriculture has its agents scattered all over the world. What are they doing? Mostly spending Government money, and they are on allowances of this kind. They are better paid, with more allowances, less work, and easier times than the Government employees here at home.

I am going to make a point on this amendment. I am going to make a motion later on to strike it out entirely; and I shall say to the Senator from California that I propose to offer a similar amendment on the State Department allowance. These expenditures are out of line. They are too high, and they are unjust to the other departments of the Government. More than that, however, they are unjust and unfair to the Treasury of the United States. They are unjust and unfair to the taxpayers, when we are loading them over in the Finance Committee, in which I have been sitting all day, with new taxes, burdensome taxes, taxes on the soap that they use for the purpose of cleanliness, taxes on necessaries of life, taxes on their income, and reducing below the present rates the minimum exemption.

In the face of that sort of a situation I want to appeal to Senators, are you going to perpetrate this sort of an inequality and this sort of an outrage upon all the other Federal employees of this Government, and upon the Treasury, and upon the taxpayers?

As far as I am concerned, I would strike out all of this foreign service of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. I think it is of very negligible value. The real sales of American goods abroad are made by representatives of commercial houses who travel all over the earth and sell these goods. These men are semidiplomatic functionaries. They stay in the cities. They do not get out over the country very much; and if I had my way, I would cut off half of the appropriation for the maintenance of these foreign emissaries who cover the globe, and have so greatly increased the expenses of the Department of Commerce.

In 1921, when Mr. Hoover became Secretary of Commerce, the Department of Commerce was spending $25,000,000 a year. To-day, it is spending $62,000,000 a year. There has been an increase of almost 250 per cent under the administration of Mr. Hoover. If the President wants to economize, if the Congress wants to economize, if we here in the Senate want to economize, the place and time are here and now.

PROPOSED TAX ON BEER

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the tax bill which is now being considered by the Committee on Finance; and I hope it may be important enough to command the attention of the Senate prior to the time when it is taken up for consideration.

The bill is called "the emergency construction act" by title, and has for its purpose taking care of unemployment in this country. It authorizes a bond issue of $1,500,000,000. It provides for the repayment of that bond issue through an amortization fund of one-tenth each year, or $150,000,000 per year, plus, of course, the interest, or an average of $200,000,000 per year. It provides that all the projects, buildings, roads, and the like which have been authorized by Congress, but for which no appropriations have been made, shall be built out of the fund derived from the sale of these bonds. It furthermore provides for the repayment of these bonds through a stamp tax placed on 2.75 per cent beer. It amends the Volstead Act in that respect so as to make these sales legal, and it sets forth in some detail the allocation of the money derived from the sale of bonds to carry out the building program under construction.

Heretofore I have made many speeches on prohibition, and I hope those who may read my remarks will not think this is a "wet" or a "dry" speech. It is one offered in the most sincere way, in the utmost of good faith, as a means of taking care of unemployment in this country.

We are beginning to look forward to next winter. Every man knows that the community funds next winter are not going to be sufficient to feed and house and clothe those who are out of employment. Every man here knows that if food is not available a situation may arise which will make it very difficult for the Government to function at all.

What are the conditions in America? We know that the State of Mississippi has already acquired 25 per cent of its total area through the sale of land in default of taxes. We know that the school-teachers of that State have not been paid for a period exceeding a year, I believe. We know that in Chicago the municipal employees were not paid for long periods of time and that the school-teachers have been getting scrip, which now is not bankable. We know that in the city of Philadelphia several thousand families a week are being evicted. We know all of this; and we know that the country has a deficit of $2,500,000,000, which it is sought to eliminate by way of new taxation and by a reduction of governmental expenditures. We know that it is very difficult to sell bonds at this time without taking from the banks money that is badly needed in credit, which may bring on a collapse of banks which are having great difficulty in holding together.

But what are we going to do about it? We can not raise $1,250,000,000 at this time except with the greatest amount of ingenuity; and it is said that we must have that sum, together with a curtailment of appropriations, if we are to balance the Budget. Certainly if we can not raise $1,250,000,000 with which to balance our Budget, we have a very poor chance of raising taxation so as to create a fund to take care of unemployment.

There are, we are told, between nine and ten million people in this country without work. That would not be so bad if the problem were a temporary one; but these people have been without work for over a year. From present indications it looks as if the suffering will increase, the army of unemployed will grow, and the results next winter will be disastrous, unless we can do something to turn the wheels of industry and furnish the people of this country with a chance to earn a respectable living.

What is simpler, therefore, than not to transgress upon the eighteenth amendment, not to change its philosophy, but simply to raise the alcoholic content of beer from one-half of 1 per cent to 2.75 per cent, which medical authorities say is not intoxicating, and from that beer to get enough revenue to finance this bond issue and start this billion and a half reconstruction program under way? If we do not do it, will it be better to let these people starve, to storm the streets in search of jobs, to be evicted from their homes, to have their lands sold for nonpayment of taxes? And how long can we go on before those who find themselves in this plight will not tolerate our delay longer?

The last year that beer was sold in this country, according to the figures furnished me by the Department of the Census, 1,930,000,000 gallons were consumed in the United States. Assuming the consumption to-day to equal that of 1914, a tax of 25 cents a gallon would produce $500,000,000 revenue, which the Government needs, which we could use to start public construction all over this country, which we could use to build roads, and to improve our rivers and harbors, and for flood control, and put into circulation a tremendous sum of money now withheld from the marts and channels of trade.

Who is getting the money now, however? Is the Government getting it? No; the Government is not getting it. Men like Al Capone are getting it. Bootleggers are getting it; and when they get it, they bury it in the ground, hoard it in safe-deposit boxes, pay no income taxes, and the mass of the people are deprived of this revenue. Instead of its finding its way into the Federal Treasury, it goes into the pockets of the criminals, and furnishes a huge slush fund with which all crime is financed throughout our land.

We might be able to tolerate that condition in prosperous times. It might be that we could turn a deaf ear to it when people have enough to eat, enough to wear, and warm homes; but can we tolerate it when 10,000,000 people are out of work, and when the tax on this one article would produce enough revenue to raise $2,000,000,000 in four years?

If this amendment should be adopted—and we are sure to have a vote on it, because it will be offered as an amendment to the revenue bill when it comes before the Senate—$1,500,000,000 would be turned loose in all sorts of building activities, a sum equivalent to $100 for every man, woman, and child in this country, or $400 worth of work per family, without taxing anybody's automobile, without taxing anybody's food, without taxing anybody's clothing, without taxing anyone's income, without taking anyone's inheritance, without taxing anyone's soap or radio or all of the other things in the tax bill; simply by taxing an article which anybody now can buy, which quite often is deleterious at present, which has enriched millions of criminals in the United States, while 10,000,000 people knock at the gates and ask only for a chance to earn a respectable living.

Mark you, Senators, next winter is coming, and it is plain that nothing is to be done to provide some measure to alleviate the suffering and other effects of unemployment in this country. Nine million men have been carried through the past winter because citizens went down into their pockets, quite often beyond the point which they could afford, to provide—meagerly, of course, but to provide, nevertheless—the necessities of life for those who were without employment. But next winter that situation will not be present. Every man knows that next year the community funds in our large industrial centers are apt to be too little to begin to cope with this problem. Already throughout our large industrial centers the exhaustion of the funds raised to carry over the community until the following year is at hand, and no new funds are in sight.

If prohibition were being enforced, if there were no beer being consumed, if there were no crime, if there were temperance and total abstinence in this country, we might hesitate. But can we hesitate when here at hand is the means of providing some relief for the unemployed, when we know that prohibition is not enforced, that crime flourishes upon its ill-gotten revenues, that liquor can be obtained anywhere? Why, then, should we refuse to raise the alcoholic content—not to conflict with the eighteenth amendment, but only up to 2.75 per cent of alcoholic volume, which medical authority says is not intoxicating—and thereby line the pockets of the Government with sufficient money to take care of these people, who will not be much longer put off?

Mr. President, what is one-half of 1 per cent? It is an arbitrary rule, an arbitrary measurement, an arbitrary figure, not put in because anything more than one-half of 1 per cent was intoxicating, but placed in the Volstead law for the simple, sole reason that it was thought that if it were put too near the limit of intoxication it would be hard to say when beer as a beverage was and when it was not intoxicating. But shall we be bound by the magic of that figure? Shall we refuse to use our common sense and write the law honestly? Shall we make nonintoxicating beverages prohibited when the clear intent of the eighteenth amendment was only to limit those beverages which were in fact intoxicating?

Mr. President, I now yield, with the understanding that an announcement is to be made which I regret to hear. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate reconvenes to-morrow I may have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair will undertake to recognize the Senator from Maryland at that time.

DEATH OF SENATOR HARRIS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am profoundly grieved to announce the death of my colleague the senior Senator from the State of Georgia, the Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, who passed away at 4 o'clock, eastern standard time, to-day in this city.

I send to the desk the following resolutions and ask for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 201) were read, considered, by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of 15 Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, at a later date I shall ask the Senate to properly notice the passing of my distinguished colleague, but as a further mark of respect at this time I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 19, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 18, 1932

The House was called to order by the Speaker at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

From day to day, our Father, we pray that we may live in the trust of God and in that peace which was the benediction of the Master. Grant that this connection between Thee and us may be deeply realized; to this end do Thou purify our hearts and justify our lives. Crown us with unfaltering fidelity and patience in the place to which our country has assigned us. May we rise to a fine conception of the public service in the discussion of all problems. Allow nothing to disturb or supersede us in the discharge of our obligation to the Republic. Almighty God, in the very soul of the Nation do Thou establish righteous stability and confidence in our institutions that make for happiness and prosperity. Defeat the evils that make us mourn. Do Thou bless all of us with the light, with the sweetness, and with the atmosphere of the upper world. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 15, 1932, was read and approved.

STOCK TRANSFER TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, before we start consideration of the Consent Calendar, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the membership of the House has been following with a great deal of interest statements that have been made by prominent stockbrokers in paid advertisements and circular letters and officials of the stock exchange, particularly in reference to the stock transfer tax, and their attack on any legislation regulating stock exchanges. One of the prominent firms that have joined in this chorus of attack on the tax bill and any regulatory legislation is a firm which was responsible for having floated in this country the Kreuger bonds. One billion dollars of Kreuger bonds were issued, of which $250,000,000 were sold in the United States. I say to all holders of Kreuger bonds in this country, that they could not have been swindled out of their money had it not been either for the carelessness, indifference, or connivance of the New York Stock Exchange. This is what happened. Under the rules of the stock exchange a statement must be filed before they list any bonds. These Kreuger bonds were secured not by real property or other tangible property, but by other bonds and the list of bonds was attached to the statement. That statement and the original list of bonds securing American investors appeared to be satisfactory. But there was a joker there which provided that the bonds held by the Kreuger Co. securing the bonds purchased in this country could be substituted by other bonds of "equal par value"—not of equal market value, of equal intrinsic value, but of equal par value. So that after the Kreuger bonds had been sold to American investors in the United States, the Kreuger gang in Europe, taking advantage of this crooked provision in the agreement, and unknown to American investors, sold the good bonds, and no-good worthless bonds of Austria and other countries that were selling at about 5 cents on the dollar were substituted. So that the American investor, on the representation made by the New York Exchange, thinking he was investing in something that was sound, now finds himself entirely wiped out with bonds, the security and collateral for which have been entirely removed. Let the stockbrokers and the New York Stock Exchange explain that, if they can.

Why do they not insert paid advertisements and tell the public about this perfidious, crooked piece of work which cost the American investors $250,000,000? [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what his duty in the premises is. It was the custom of Speaker Gillett and the late Speaker Longworth to protect this day, Consent Day and Suspension Day. The Chair does not like to take the responsibility of keeping any gentleman from addressing the House, but he thinks gentlemen should try to arrange matters so as not to take up too much time on Consent Day in general discussion.

Mr. DOWELL. I have not asked for time usually. I shall take only the time that I have asked for. The matter I wish to call to the attention of the House is the matter of the economy program.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, is it contemplated to have any suspensions to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was just about to state that there will be three suspensions to-day. The first will be by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], who will move to suspend the rules and agree to the Senate amendments to the Interior appropriation bill. The second will be by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] on the bill H. R. 9071, the Pueblo Indian bill, which was considered on last Wednesday. The third will be by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] on what is known as the actors' bill, which was unanimously reported from the Committee on Immigration.

SUITS BEFORE THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to call the attention of the House to a provision in what purports to be the tentative program respecting the Veterans' Administration. While I have not been able to examine all of these tentative changes, I ask the attention of the House to just one provision as it appears in the Washington Star of April 17. This relates to the provisions on testimony in suits where a veteran has brought suit to collect his claim after his claim has been denied by the Veterans' Bureau. May I have your attention while I read this proposed amendment as it appears in the Washington Star?

SEC. 207. The first paragraph of section 19 of the World War veterans' act of 1924 * * * is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof two new provisions to read as follows:

"Provided, That in any suit tried under the provisions of this section the court shall not receive, admit, or entertain the testimony of any person whose statement has not previously been submitted to the United States Veterans' Bureau of the Veterans' Administration prior to the denial of the claim sued upon, and the date of issuance of the letter of disagreement required by this section shall be the date of the denial of the claim."

Should this amendment be adopted the veteran may be deprived of the right to present all of his case in a court of law. He finds the hands of the court tied so that the court can not consider any facts which the veteran did not submit to the Veterans' Bureau prior to the termination of his case in that bureau. In other words, under the law, if his claim is refused by the bureau, he is permitted to try his case in a court of law, but by this amendment the court is prevented from hearing all of his case if he has not submitted it before the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I can not. I do not have time.

In every court in which I have had any experience whatever, newly discovered material evidence, even when it is found after the rendition of a verdict, when presented to the court, will be cause for a new trial, whereby that testimony can be used in determining the rights of the parties. In this instance if this amendment is adopted, the veteran, when he gets into court, finds the hands of the court tied so that the court can not consider the facts in the case and render impartial justice.

Mr. PARSONS. Whose ruling is that?

Mr. DOWELL. This is a tentative amendment suggested to the veterans' act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, whose plan is it?

Mr. DOWELL. This was submitted by the Veterans' Administration, as I understand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is that indorsed in the President's program?

Mr. DOWELL. It is in the proposals submitted in the program.

Now, it seems to me there should not be a specific prohibition against a veteran, who has lost his health in the service, and who presented his case to the Veterans' Bureau, and whose claim was denied by the bureau, afterward presenting his case in full to the court.

He should not come to the courts of the land to present his case and find the courts may not consider all of the evidence he may be able to present, which would determine the facts in the case.

Whatever the Veterans' Bureau may do or require, the courts should be left free to pass upon the claims of every veteran after all of the facts have been submitted to the court.

I am submitting this matter at this time, with the hope that the courts may be left with full power to determine each case on its merits after the parties have submitted all of the facts obtainable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

OIL PORTRAIT OF FORMER PRESIDENT CALVIN COOLIDGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk called the first business on the Consent Calendar, S. J. Res. 75, authorizing the Joint Committee on the Library to procure an oil portrait of former President Calvin Coolidge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] is present to-day. We have constantly objected to these bills unless a proviso is written in that the portrait be the work of an American artist. I have prepared an amendment, and if the gentleman from Kentucky accepts the amendment I shall not object. If the gentleman does not accept the amendment, I am constrained to object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I also reserve the right to object.

Mr. GILBERT. I would like to answer the gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have taken this matter up, and I have here the report of the National Academy of Design, and there are several hundred artists in this country, artists of high repute and high artistic standing, who believe that when Government work of this nature is to be given out American artists should be given preference.

Mr. GILBERT. It is true that this matter has been considered time and time again. It would be a reflection upon American artists to provide in any law that only American artists could be employed. The amendment, instead of benefiting American artists, would cast a slur upon them and be an admission that they need legislative protection.

For instance, this portrait has already been painted. It is acceptable to everybody. It was painted by an American artist. I understand that the artist is from the gentleman's own State of New York. It would deprive him of the honor he has won when we provide by law that it must be given to an American artist.

Let me say further to the House, the committee has several times considered this matter, as the gentleman has suggested, and has uniformly held, and has been sustained by the House, that that is an unwise provision to put into this kind of a bill. We have American artists who do not require legislative favors; they do not ask any; they are fully able to meet the artists of other countries in fair competition and win the prizes without our paternalism.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, unless the amendment is acceptable I shall be constrained to object. I asked the gentleman from Kentucky if he would accept the amendment.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman not let the House consider it without having an agreement in advance? I will be willing to discuss the amendment on its merits when it is offered.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS INLET WATERWAY FROM NORFOLK, VA., TO BEAUFORT INLET, N. C.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6184, for the improvement of the inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how is it that we have a Federal bridge at this point? Is this some new policy—the construction of Federal bridges to connect Federal-aid roads?

Mr. WARREN. I am very glad to explain that to the gentleman. When the great Alligator-Pungo River land cut of the inland waterway in North Carolina was constructed, the land cut being 28 miles in length, the legislation passed by the Congress provided that whenever a public road was cut it would be the duty of the Government to build a bridge and to maintain it. This was a public road for a hundred years. A condemnation proceeding was necessary, and the county was given notice in a newspaper published 75 miles away. The county did not appear at that condemnation proceeding.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It had no notice?

Mr. WARREN. Only general notice in the newspaper. This has been unanimously approved by the engineers, in a well-considered report, and unanimously approved by the Rivers and Harbors Committee. It can only happen in this one case.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what the expense involved in this bill will be?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. It calls for the construction of a bridge to cost $90,000, which I remind the gentleman will come out of the lump-sum appropriation on this particular project in the War Department bill.

It also requires the State of North Carolina to put the roads in good condition, which they are now doing.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman think this could be put off until the Treasury is in better shape? We are doing that as to many public buildings.

Mr. WARREN. It can never be constructed until the Secretary of War says it is necessary, and until the State of North Carolina has met all the requirements in this document. The Government, realizing the equity of it, has been maintaining a ferry there ever since.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following works of improvement are hereby adopted and authorized, to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of Chief of Engineers, in accordance with the plans recommended in the report hereinafter designated: Inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 5, Seventy-second Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WARREN: Strike out the word "House" in line 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Rivers and Harbors Committee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech made by my colleague, Mr. LUDLOW, at Anderson, Ind., at the Jefferson Day banquet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Representative LOUIS LUDLOW to Madison County Jefferson Club, April 14, 1932, at Anderson, Ind.:

There are times when the tongue can not speak the language of the heart, and that is the fix I am in to-night. My faltering tongue gropes in vain for words to express the gratitude that pours from my heart for this generous reception. This is to me a very happy evening. The only fly in the ointment is a realization of my own shortcomings. The multitude assembled here and the aura of expectancy fill my soul with an ominous feeling that I shall not be able to measure up to this occasion. I have wanted for a very long time to do two things:

1. To make a straight-out political speech.
2. To make that speech at Anderson, Ind.

To-night, on this occasion arranged to celebrate the anniversary of the birth of our patron saint, the author of the Declaration of Independence and the founder of the Democratic Party, both of these ambitions are to be realized. Never did I make a public speech of any kind until four years ago; and, while I have spoken occasionally on various phases of public problems since then, this is my first attempt at a real political speech, in which I hope to discuss the fundamental philosophy of government.

I have wanted to make my speech in Anderson because, while others have been a little squeamish about running the risk of inviting me, you long ago took me on faith. During several consecutive years you have invited me to come and share your hospitality and I was unable to do so. Those invitations made me feel immensely grateful to you and this year I made up my mind that if you still wanted me to come and punish you with what I call one of my ham orations I would do so, even if I knew that the pillars of government at Washington, D. C., would crumble and fall during my absence. So, paraphrasing one of our great generals, "Lafayette, I am here!" and I only hope that when I have departed you will not think that you have been gluttons for punishment.

I wanted to make my speech at Anderson, too, because of old friendships and old associations. There is a quaint saying handed down from preprohibition days that "old wine is the best." While friendship is a holy word and friends both new and old are God's priceless gift to man, the friendship that grips our hearts and binds us as with hoops of steel is the friendship which, beginning in the days of our youth, has continued undiminished and unimpaired throughout the years.

It was this longing to be among old friends who know and understand the impulses of my heart that brought me here to mingle elbow to elbow with Dale Crittenberger; Willis Ellis; J. J. Netterville; Harry Neff; Walter Hays; Mr. Campbell, the honored chairman of this meeting; and others whose faces radiate friendship and hospitality. My joy in meeting these friends of the yesteryear does not obscure the saddening recollection of another distinguished Anderson Democrat, notwithstanding the friendship we had for each other has long since touched a grave, and I would feel remiss if I let this occasion go by without paying my humble tribute of love to that great orator and man of the people, William R. Myers. As I stand here my memory dwells not only among the living citizens of Madison County who have been faithful in the service of their fellow men but reaches out into the silent city of the dead and lingers reverentially at the grave of a genial and kind friend who recently left us to join the choir invisible, Albert H. Vestal, and also at the grave of another friend who was not of my political faith but who was close to me and true as the magnet to the pole, Winfield T. Durbin.

The chances are that in my speech to-night I shall inflict upon you a great deal of what I call "shop talk." As a member of the Appropriations Committee of the United States Congress and of one of its important subcommittees my mind has been on appropriations for many weeks. I have thought of appropriations by day and dreamed of appropriations by night. If there were such a thing as eating an appropriation, I think I would be masticating them all of the time. I have had borne upon me by the most direct visual evidence a sickening sense of the awful waste of the taxpayers' money that has been going on for many years, but especially during the last one and a half decades. I have been appalled by the evidence that has come to me through my own eyes and ears that the government of the people, for the people, and by the people founded by Jefferson and his compatriots has ceased to be a government of simplicity and economy, dedicated to the protection of equal rights among men, and has become a government of bureaucratic domination that is squandering the taxpayers' money in the most lavish way to maintain a thousand forms of special privilege. I am so full of what I have seen and heard that my speech is likely to flare forth in outbursts of indignation as I proceed.

When Speaker GARNER, Mr. RAINEY, the majority leader, and my Democratic colleagues placed me on the great Appropriations Committee at the beginning of the present Congress, my gratitude was beyond expression, but I want to confess that I could not escape the conclusion that my appointment was a bit incongruous. I will state confidentially that I had not been used to dealing with finances in such big units as is customary in that committee. It seemed to me there was something wrong with the picture.

I recalled that often during my career of struggle and of poverty I had been hard pressed to display the financial acumen necessary to the acquisition of a hot-dog sandwich and a plate of beans, and the more I thought about it the more it seemed to me I was in about the same fix as the benevolent old colored man who when asked if he could change a 10-dollar bill replied, with gratitude exuding at every pore:

"I cain't change de bill for you, boss—no; I cain't do that—but I'se suttingly very much 'bleeged for de compliment."

At first blush I was inclined to think that if I were to do the right and appropriate thing I would say to our subcommittee of six:

"Gentlemen, I am much obliged for being invited into your splendid circle, but it seems to me I am out of place here, and I shall now retire."

OLD-FASHIONED IDEAS OF ECONOMY

And then it occurred to me that there might be a real opportunity on that committee, especially at this time when the country is groaning with the cost of government, for an old-fashioned Hoosier, with old-fashioned ideas of economy. I recalled that over half a century ago another Indiana Democrat, whose shoe laces I do not pretend to be worthy to tie, served on that committee in that very room and did his work so well that he earned the everlasting gratitude of the common people of America from whose loins he sprang.

I thought of William S. Holman, who was the Representative of the district where I was born and raised, and I remembered how the common people worshiped him. I could visualize him as he appeared when he moved among them, unspoiled, unaffected by the honor of office, a charming conversationalist with a diction as pure as Macaulay's, distinctly human, capable of taking a chew of tobacco, and with a sympathy that encircled all of the human race. I recalled that he was very poor, but he possessed what was infinitely greater and more important than all of the wealth of the Indies. He had character. I recalled that he regarded office as a sacred trust; that by zeal in protecting the public interest he become known throughout the world as "the watchdog of the Treasury" and that when he died he left no worldly goods, but he did leave a legacy of inestimable value to the American Nation in "the Holman rule" which remains engrafted to this day in our parliamentary procedure and which makes legislation in order on appropriation bills if its effect is to reduce appropriations. It seemed to me that if in these modern times when bureaucracy is tightening its tentacles, and extravagance is running away with reason, I could in any degree, whatsoever, translate Holman's idealism into action, my efforts to serve the Nation would not be in vain.

Around the big table in the Appropriations Committee six of us composing the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments prepared the supply bill for those two activities, which appropriated more than a billion dollars—more than a thousand million dollars. Think of it! Nothing could more vividly illustrate how the cost of Government has grown. The exact amount carried in the Treasury and Post Office bill for the next fiscal year 1933 is $1,059,898,563. That is more than the entire cost of Government 24 years ago. The United States did not become a "billion-dollar country," speaking in fiscal language, until 1909, when the appropriations crossed the billion-dollar mark and totaled $1,006,431,726.90. Thirty years ago, for the fiscal year 1902, the total cost of running the Government was $730,241,862.51, or less than one-seventh of the 1932 expenditures. The sum total of appropriations for the current fiscal year 1932 is $5,178,524,967.95. This is the equivalent of $7,343 for every day that has elapsed during the 1932 years since the birth of Christ. There are 10 subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee, each of which brings in its own supply bill.

Sitting at the head of our subcommittee table was JOSEPH W. BYRNS, a courtly southern gentleman who represents the Tennessee district where Andrew Jackson lived, and who is as distinctly a man of the people as was that patron saint of Democracy. Mr. BYRNS is chairman of the entire Committee on Appropriations as well as of its largest subcommittee, and as chairman of the Democratic national congressional committee he commands high respect in party councils. It was a privilege, indeed, to sit by the side of one so learned, so conservative, so safe and sane, so wise in counsel, and yet so very human and so sympathetic in his responsiveness to the needs of the country in these distressing times. We met forenoons and afternoons, day after day, week after week. Streams of witnesses came before us, from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General down the line of assistants and bureau and division chiefs. We used our pruning knives and cut $22,677,342 off of the estimates sent to us by the President. When the bill came out of the committee it was $44,688,327 below the appropriations for the current fiscal year, and while Chairman BYRNS was handy with the pruning knife, he gives me credit for cutting in some instances even deeper than he did. On that one bill we reduced appropriations the equivalent of more than six times the price the United States paid for Alaska below the appropriations for the same activities last year.

PICTURE OF GOVERNMENTAL BUREAUCRACY

Service on the Appropriations Committee affords one a vantage point from which he can see the whole picture of governmental bureaucracy. He soon learns how the cost of government is causing the deficit we all abhor. He sees the most shocking evidences of unbusinesslike methods and unbelievable extravagances. He sees a thousand rat holes through which the taxpayers' money flows out of the Treasury to support activities that were wrong in their inception and that fasten varied forms of blighting paternalism on the country. He learns of as much as $5,000 of the money raised by taxation being spent to transplant and reset a single tree to conform to somebody's idea of landscape beauty. He learns of orchid plants being purchased at the cost of hundreds of dollars per plant to make a botanical display in Washington that will be attractive for tourists to look at, although times are so bad and people are so hard up that tourists have almost ceased to go to the Capital City.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I had the pleasure of helping to knock out a proposal to spend $25,000 for orchids and other beautiful and attractive plants during the next fiscal year. When I thought of 8,000,000 Americans out of work, tramping the streets with their hearts filled with despair, and 25,000,000 of our fellow citizens—men, women, and children—without means of support, it really was not hard for me to decide against orchids. That decision did not wrench my soul one bit. Nor was it a bit painful to me to vote to abolish the abuse that has grown up of officials being furnished Government automobiles for the personal and social activities of themselves and their families.

When we learned of an assistant to the head of one of the departments rolling down to his office every day in a high-powered automobile, with a Government chauffeur at the wheel, and passing Justices of the United States Supreme Court going to work on foot, we decided there was something wrong with that picture, also; and we wrote into every appropriation bill a provision which restricts the furnishing of automobiles to a comparatively few heads of essential activities and limits them strictly to official use.

The fathers erected a government on the principle of dual sovereignty, a government in which the people were to manage their home affairs as local welfare might dictate—a society of self-governing States in which the people were to be left to rule themselves to as great an extent as possible. Under this well-devised order of things the Federal Government would touch the citizens lightly and would hardly be felt except in situations and crises that require unified national action.

From this idealistic concept which the wisdom of the ages has accepted as best adapted to promote the happiness and contentment of a free people we have departed as far as one pole is from the other. The once-treasured doctrine, "The least governed the best governed" has given away to its antithesis, "The most governed the best governed." We no longer have a Government with local autonomy as the major factor, but a Government by an overshadowing and compelling Federal bureaucracy.

We have in Washington the great departments of government through which all of the executive functions would be transacted under the scheme of Jefferson and the other founding fathers, but while these are 10 in number, we also have more than 40 commissions, boards, and independent establishments that have reached out in all directions and usurped governmental functions, and which now spend a billion dollars annually of the people's money. The growth of paternalism in America is vividly indicated by the preponderance of bureaus, commissions, and boards. As the spirit of paternalism waxed strong these commissions and other extra-constitutional forms began to spring up like mushrooms, the difference being that while a mushroom dies, a bureau or commission once created goes on forever. The State governments patterned after the national example, and they, too, created commissions and boards and bureaus and what not, and the people have found themselves oppressed by supervising and directing authorities and their taxes pyramided at a horrid rate. Federal commissions have literally wasted billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, which is bad enough; but when it is considered that they have been a potential medium in enforcing an enslaving paternalism upon the country, every patriot must rue their creation.

There is a story going the rounds which well illustrates the predominance of the commission idea in government. A man afflicted with amnesia was found by a policeman wandering in the streets of Washington. Cases of amnesia are not so rare as to be considered phenomenal, but this man was in extraordinary specimen because when he was interrogated he could not for the life of him remember his name, his address, or the commission he belonged to! Think of an officeholder not being able to remember the commission he belonged to—especially on pay day!

LONG LIFE TO THE SCREW THREADERS!

Commissions once created never die. Once I thought I had found a Government commission that was not gifted with everlasting life, but I was mistaken. It was the National Screw Thread Commission. I doted on that commission because, of all the commissions I knew, it apparently was one that was mortal. And then it was such a romantic commission. After Congress seemingly had exhausted the whole gamut of possibilities in devising commissions to exercise paternalistic dominion over the people it scratched its collective head, thought long and hard, and then brought forth a commission to standardize screw threads. There is your beau ideal of a commission—one to standardize screw threads! I was in the press gallery when the bill passed and I gave three inward cheers because tucked on at the end of the act was a clause limiting the life of the commission to six months.

That was back in 1918. Fourteen long, eventful years have elapsed and the commission is still going strong. It has attained a robust existence and an honored and permanent place in the Congressional Directory, where it may be seen on page 343. Three times its life was extended, and finally Congress got tired of this piecemeal business and made it a "continuing commission," so I suppose we shall have the screw threaders with us forever. And in this land of opportunity what an incentive it is to every honest and ambitious statesman to so live and serve his party that in the mellow evening of life he may approach the lengthening shadows with calm and peaceful dignity as a member of the Screw Thread Commission.

Paternalism has fastened upon our people an amazing multiplicity of laws. Bureaucracy, reaching for more and more power, never satiated but always looking for new fields to invade, goes to the fountainhead of authority, and asks for laws which legislators too often grant for the asking. The American citizen is hedged about with a bewildering maze of "thou shalts" and "thou shalt nots."

After working many years a committee of Congress has completed a codification of the United States statutes. The result is a volume of 2,465 pages. There are 5,212,416 words in the volume and 14,808,000 ems in the composition. To put it in another way, there are written in statutes for the regulation of the American people by this single body of lawmakers 5,212,416 words, and the whole of the law and the gospel was put in the Ten Commandments of Moses and those commandments could be printed on a single page! I sincerely believe that if the usual order could be reversed and an entire Congress could be devoted, not to enacting laws but to repealing archaic, harmful, bureaucratic statutes, that Congress would go down in history with a halo that will never attach to any other Congress.

Let me cite to you a few more of the almost unbelievable examples of illogical and wasteful departures from the standards of Jeffersonian simplicity in government. No one would imagine that any great corporation conducted on business principles would establish competing agencies to purchase supplies, each agency with its separate offices, personnel, and overhead. Now listen to what the United States Government does in that respect. I quote from page 92 of the printed hearings before our subcommittee and from the stenographic report of the cross-examination of Capt. Robert Le Fevre, superintendent of the General Supply Committee:

"Mr. LUDLOW. How many, or approximately how many, different agencies are making purchases of supplies for the Government?

"Mr. LE FEVRE. I do not know. They are so numerous I do not know that anybody ever counted them.

"Mr. LUDLOW. What would be your estimate?

"Mr. LE FEVRE. I suppose there are probably four or five hundred.

"Mr. LUDLOW. Is not there a tremendous lot of duplication and extra cost that could be eliminated if there was a consolidation and they were centralized under one central purchasing agency, such as yours?

"Mr. LE FEVRE. Provided it is done with care; yes, sir."

Here we have direct testimony from the most competent authority that the Government's purchasing agencies number 400 or 500 and that there is a possibility of great savings by consolidation. Why, during the World War, the War Department and the Navy Department, notwithstanding both were arms of the United States Government and supported by the taxpayers, went into the market and competed in the most cut-throat and despicable fashion for supplies to win the war.

GONE TO JOIN THE DINOSAURS

We carried in the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill a clause abolishing 22 useless offices, 15 appraisers of customs, and 7 surveyors of customs, with salaries ranging from $3,800 to $9,000 a year and totaling $111,000 per annum. I feel a bit chesty about that because it was my questioning of Capt. F. X. A. Eble, Commissioner of Customs, before our subcommittee that developed the opening for this economy move. Captain Eble was one of the frankest and fairest witnesses who came before us, and when I asked him if surveyors of customs could not be dispensed with I drew from him the candid admission that they are "excess baggage." Later, in a letter to me, Secretary of Treasury Ogden L. Mills confirmed the uselessness of appraisers and surveyors of customs, and they will now go to join the dinosaurs and other relics of a bygone age. They were excess a long time ago and, as the Irishman says, "they should have died a-bornin."

There is another place in our public service that is loaded down with excess officials whom I hope to see shuffled into the discard. All along our far-flung borders are duplicate forces of immigration inspectors and customs inspectors. When a traveler returning from Mexico or Canada crosses the border at a port of entry an immigration inspector intercepts him and asks him where he lives, and when he replies "Indianapolis" or "Anderson," a customs inspector steps up and asks him about his baggage.

Now, why in the name of common sense can not the same inspector ask him both questions? I have here a long list of officeholders who could be dispensed with if one man were to perform both of these trifling services and Captain Eble, Commissioner of Customs, estimates that $1,000,000 a year could be saved by the elimination of this overlapping.

I was brought up in the hard life of a pioneer farmer boy, when every dollar gained was thrice earned in the sweat and toil of long hours of labor, and for years it has wrenched my economic soul to see money scoop shoveled out of the United States Treasury for any old project and under any old pretext. Can it be that we have discovered the strange alchemy that transforms a debit into a thing to be desired—at least into something not to be avoided? I do not think so. I have an old-fashioned idea that money still represents sweat and toil and that officials occupying positions of public trust are in duty bound to see that public funds are wisely and economically administered and that not a dollar is taken from the pockets of the taxpayers that can be left there. That, I think, is good business and good sense and the only policy on which to found a happy and contented state.

I said a while ago that money has been scoop shoveled out of the United States Treasury to meet the demands of the most varied and fantastic extravagances. I made a mistake. I should have said steam shoveled. You know this is the steam age. Treasury raiding has kept pace with the march of progress and is high geared and high powered. Peace-time appropriations have shot upward from a little over a billion dollars a year 23 years ago to more than five billions in this year of the Lord 1932—in other words, from $11 per capita to $38 per capita.

How is all of this money spent, you ask. A more pertinent inquiry is, How isn't it spent? If there is any fad or nostrum that Congress has not subsidized in some form or way or other during the last 20 years its promoters must be sloths or morons. Otherwise a little energy would have brought them under the blanket, too. I will cite just a few examples which probably will make you laugh, though I would hope they would make you cry. It would be better if you would shed a few tears of resentment and then get busy on some of the Members of Congress who are particeps criminis in such extravagances. The District of Columbia appropriation law of the last Congress (Public Act 721), approved on February 23, 1931, carried this appropriation:

"For the control and prevention of the spread of mosquitoes in the District of Columbia, including personal services, purchase, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, purchase of oil, and other necessary expenses, $45,000."

This act supplements a similar appropriation of $60,000 for the previous fiscal year. Altogether $105,000 has so far been appropriated to chase mosquitoes in the District of Columbia. The valiant band of chasers, known as "mosquito inspectors," have eight easy-riding automobiles with which to do their chasing, and each chaser receives $140 a month for his valuable services. Uncle Sam supplies the gas and pays the garage bills. The superintendent in charge of the work, the generalissimo of the attacking forces, gets $2,100 a year and an automobile is assigned to his special use. The mosquito fighters comprise a happy little family, and so far no mosquito has been heard to complain.

MANEUVERS OF THE MOSQUITO FLEET

There is no more reason that I can conceive of why the Federal Treasury should be drained to fight mosquitoes in Washington than in Indianapolis or Anderson. If the campaign spreads out and becomes general, there will be a lot of soft jobs for meritorious Republicans or deserving Democrats, according to which party is in power, but if a Federal offensive is ever undertaken against the fierce, man-eating mosquitoes of New Jersey and along the Atlantic seaboard, it may be necessary to substitute armored cars for light-running automobiles, and in engagements of extreme violence battleships may be brought up as reserves. Possibly our nautical experts were inspired by prophetic vision when they coined the phrase "mosquito fleet" and the time may come when the great ships of the American Navy will be drawn up annually for maneuvers against the winged and scissor-beaked enemy.

It may be there is some excuse for part of the building program that is going on at the National Capital, where not only whole blocks but acres of buildings are being torn down to jazz up the appearance of the old city; but when we consider the fact that the taxpayers of the United States already are bled white, there certainly is no justification for part of the program, especially that which involves the tearing down of certain monumental buildings simply because they grate on somebody's æsthetic sense. I now have particularly in mind the Post Office Department Building, one of the landmarks on historic Pennsylvania Avenue, which is soon to make a fadeaway before the so-called march of progress.

This 8-story building, adorned with a tower, Big Ben clock and all, is as solid, substantial, and convenient a public building as there is in America. If it were located in London or Paris or any of the Old World capitals, it would be regarded 100 years from now as just beginning to be properly weather-stained; but it is to be nipped in the bud and torn away at the early age of 43 years because its style of architecture is Romanesque and out of harmony with the modernistic style exemplified in the other public buildings now being constructed around it. Styles in architecture change like styles in skirts, and who knows that 20 years hence Romanesque will not be all the rage?

The critics whose keen sensibilities are offended by this Romanesque building are Pollyannesque in the easy way they have of conjuring up the millions that will be required to tear down this landmark and to erect a building in its place to suit their hypercritical fancy. As for myself, I prefer the Romanesque to the Pollyannesque style of architecture; but a few years ago Congress not only provided for the demolition of the present building, which was erected in 1889 at a cost of $3,241,326, but went further, and in pursuance of the fanciful ideals of the art connoisseurs a new Post Office Department Building is to be erected at a cost of more than $10,000,000, with a façade that will tickle the high-brow critics.

Congress in recent years has generously appropriated $190,000,000 to construct Government buildings in a limited area in Washington. This is 26 times the price the United States paid for the great empire of Alaska. Secretary of State Seward was nearly run out of the country when he bargained for Alaska at a cost of $7,200,000. He would consider himself a piker if he could return to the flesh and see what is going on in Washington now. George Washington had a reputation as a thrower, being accredited with having once tossed a dollar across the Potomac River; and if he were alive and his powess remained undiminished, he could toss a dollar over half a dozen buildings, each the equivalent in cost of Alaska; but in this critical period with business flat and incomes cut off he would have a hard time scraping together enough dollars to pay for all of this lavishness. One building just completed—the palace de luxe of the Department of Commerce—is costing $17,500,000, or more than twice the price paid for Alaska, and $1,500,000 more than Jefferson paid to Napoleon for the vast Louisiana Purchase, out of which were carved many great States. That building is bedecked, wainscoted, decorated, and beautified so that it looks like an enlarged Buckingham Palace.

Everybody is trying to horn into the money-spending orgy. The Court of Claims, which now occupies a substantial and well-located building diagonally across Pennsylvania Avenue from the White House, decided that its home is not dressy enough and went to Congress for a mere bagatelle of $1,250,000 for a new building, citing the powerful argument that the Customs Court had been provided handsome quarters in the new Internal Revenue Building and the Customs Court was no higher in dignity and no more deserving than it was—about the same sort of plea as that of the small boy who demands a new red toy because he sees that another youngster has one. It was only recently when the Court of Claims nosed in and it hasn't got its new building yet, but if the beauty fans have their way it will! Meanwhile plans are on foot to tear down the District Government Building at Pennsylvania Avenue and Fourteenth Street, a splendid $5,000,000 structure, because it does not quite measure up to the artistic notions of the planners, who believe that for a bagatelle of ten millions or fifteen millions they could put up a nicer looking building there.

The new Navy Building and its twin, the Munitions Building, erected during the World War, are slated to go the way of the others. These enormous structures, if allowed to stand, would be as solid and serviceable 100 years from now as they are to-day, but they are marked to take the count because the members of the Fine Arts Commission say they are unbecoming. Cæsar wanted men around him who were fat. Members of the Fine Arts Commission want buildings around them that are easy on the eye.

MAKING RESPECTABLE AGE LOOK LIKE A FLAPPER

One of the money-spending dreams of this commission is that $3,000,000 be spent in changing the exterior appearance of the War, State, and Navy Building. That structure may not be exactly a flapper among Government buildings, though it was warmly praised for its beauty by architects and artists of bygone generations. The plan to remodel it was going strong and was about to succeed when our Committee on Appropriations stepped in and decided that the building is perfectly good and serviceable as it stands, and that this is no time to have its face lifted.

The Seventy-first Congress appropriated a trifle over $1,500,000 to buy some incunabula, or old books. It didn't do so with my vote, but my chirp wasn't even heard in the storm of whoops accompanying passage of the measure. When the bill was first proposed not more than half a dozen Members had ever heard of the word "incunabula" and the others rushed to their dictionaries to see what it was about. They found that incunabula are books that were printed in the fifteenth century. Here was something out of the ordinary to spend money on.

After a brief and vigorous campaign Doctor Vollbehr, owner of the books, was in possession of a Treasury warrant for a million and a half and the Library of Congress was in possession of the books. I realize the importance of cultural advantages and I hope I am not lacking in comprehension of the things of the spirit, but I could not bring myself to indorse the spending of $1,500,000 for a collection of books which are printed in old Latin and which only about one expert scholar in fifty can read. When my mails day by day were filled with pleas from unemployed and poverty-stricken people who were extending a thousand hands for help and when unknown numbers of sick and disabled soldiers were languishing for lack of hospital facilities, I could not reconcile myself to spend $1,500,000 for old books to be kept in Washington, and I have no apologies to offer for opposing the appropriation.

That sum would build three hospitals of the size of the Indiana Veterans' Hospital at Indianapolis, and as long as so many of our sick and disabled veterans remain unhospitalized I hope no scholar will think harshly of me if I prefer hospitals to incunabula. As an alternative between leaving $1,500,000 in the pockets of the taxpayers and spending that amount for some old books printed in Latin to be kept in Washington, I would favor leaving it in the pockets of the taxpayers, which are drained enough, Heaven knows, for other governmental expenses.

Our paternalistic Government, at the expense of the taxpayers and at a cost of thousands of dollars, has issued an interesting document entitled "The Love Adventures of an American Bullfrog." A Cornell University professor was paid $1,740 of the taxpayers' money to write the pamphlet. It gives the important information that the gentleman frog croaks or sings only when he is in love. The Clerk of the House of Representatives has been required by law to publish a statistical report on the operations of his office, which nobody on earth was ever known to read. The issue consists of 1,300 copies, and the cost is over $7,000. Our committee has nipped this publication in the bud, and it will not be issued again.

Sheer waste in printing costs the taxpayers $200,000 a year, and there are now a million books and printed documents stacked in mountainous heaps in the basement of the Capitol and House Office Building in their original wrappers ready to be junked because they are useless. During the last 36 years $7,200,000 has been wasted on printing, and that, again, happens to be exactly the price the United States paid for Alaska. I have introduced a bill to abolish this tremendous waste.

MONEY FOR DIRIGIBLES WASTED

Money for dirigibles is another glaring example of money unwisely expended. Do you realize it costs $1,500,000 every year simply to maintain the Lakehurst, N. J., dirigible station? A little 1-horse airplane could tear a hole the size of an elephant in a $6,000,000 dirigible without half trying any time it chose to do so. In a modern war a dirigible would be about as effective a fighting unit as a barnyard rooster, and it would really be worth less, for after the battle the rooster would be good eating, while there would not be anything left of the dirigible worth saving. Yet we have already spent, or contracted to spend, on dirigibles twice what we spent for the Territory of Alaska.

The disregard of economy that has been so much in evidence in our national life is the natural concomitant of bureaucracy, and it measures the vast distance we have gotten away from the simple faith and principles of the fathers who founded here on American soil the greatest government ever devised by the ingenuity of man for the protection of equal rights and the promotion of human happiness. If we had stuck to the principles of Jefferson we would not to-day be beset by evils on every hand, many of which are so insidious that it requires a seer's vision to tie them in with their real source of origin, but which are really due to the surrender, step by step, of our heritage of liberty to a ruthless bureaucracy. The citadel of freedom which the founding fathers established on this continent is being undermined by this bureaucratic growth, and some time it will topple and fall unless there is a return to original ideals.

If I were to undertake to cover the entire gamut of extravagances and paternalism of our national bureaucracy, I would wear out your patience and would keep you here all night. I would like to tell you about the new Memorial Bridge connecting the North and South at Arlington, which is perfectly fine from a sentimental standpoint and is appropriately recognized as the most beautiful and artistic bridge in the world, but which is as unnecessary as the fifth wheel of a wagon from a utilitarian standpoint, as the Potomac is spanned with other bridges, and the $14,750,000 which it cost might well have been left in the pockets of the taxpayers at a time when the specter of want stalks throughout the land and little children go to bed hungry.

With Government headed out as it is to-day in the form of a bureaucracy, the most wasteful and costly form of government on earth; with businesses everywhere crashing to ruin under the weight of taxes; with thousands of honest men penniless and begging on the streets our people may well exclaim as they raise their face to heaven, "What relief is there, O God?"

Relief is possible, but it needs must be slow and painful. The perversions of government that are the growth of decades can not be corrected in a day. We must get out of this situation by reversing the processes by which we entered it. We have centralized our Government to the very last degree; now we must decentralize it. We have made lavish appropriations for nonessential purposes; now we must exercise the most rigid economy in appropriating only for the most essential purposes. We have listened to the lure of every group and bloc bent on securing costly special privileges; now we must hear and heed the voice of the American people calling in anguish for relief from taxation and asking only for a return to the simplicity of Thomas Jefferson and for a practical application of the Jeffersonian doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none.

The movement that will ultimately bring relief must originate among the people themselves, and it will only originate when the people arise and in the voice of Jehovah demand that Congress shall put the ax to the root of bureaucracy. The system, with its various groups and blocs, has such a hold on Washington that Members of Congress can not stem it and can not reform it without the help that comes from the people themselves, in whom sovereignty abides. Congress does not have the power of regeneration within itself. The people must take these matters in hand.

PROPOSED CATECHISM FOR CANDIDATES

I would like to propose a catechism to be addressed by the people of every congressional district in America to the candidates who are asking their support for Congress this year. There would be four questions in my catechism, as follows:

1. If elected, will you hew to the line of strict economy and oppose every appropriation except for the bare necessities of government?

2. Will you help to decentralize the Federal Government by abolishing useless departments, bureaus, and commissions and consolidating others that overlap?

3. Will you vote to take the special privilege out of government?

4. Will you help to remove the paternalistic restrictions and meddling supervision that fetter every man and every business in the country?

If I could have my way, no candidate for Representative and Senator in Congress, regardless of the ticket on which he may run, should escape these questions, and those who do not give satisfying answers would be left at home.

A few campaigns pitched by the people on the economy issue and backed by a spirit of determination that will tolerate no evasion will accomplish wonders in redirecting the course of government into safer channels.

Bureaucracy has advanced until its enormous personnel is sucking the public like leeches, and it is estimated that every 11 persons in America are supporting 1 person on a public pay roll. To strike down this bureaucracy and restore the Government that was designed by the foundling fathers is not a partisan task but it is a citizens' task, and it is the biggest citizens' task of our day and generation. What we have accomplished by using the pruning knife on appropriations in this Congress is a good start, but it is a mere bagatelle compared with what must be done if the country is to get real relief. Our reforms must go deeper into the fundamentals of government. Many bureaus and commissions and tax-eating agencies must be stricken from the structure of government and there is no reason why some of the departments should not be abolished. The Department of the Interior could be wiped out entirely and its essential functions transferred to the Department of Commerce. Other departments could be combined at a saving of hundreds of millions of dollars a year. Similar reorganizations carried along sensible and constructive lines into all bureaus and branches of the public service would eliminate many bureaus and agencies that have no excuse for existing and would bring a large reduction of taxes.

The people of America are praying for that reduction and no other blessing that could come from heaven would be quite so welcome. Men and women who have toiled and slaved all their lives to secure a little accumulation that would be their comfort and security in their old age are threatened with having that accumulation taken away from them. City residents are surrendering their homes by wholesale and farmers are forfeiting their farms in job lots. We hear time after time of good people losing their homes, their most precious possessions, where they spent their happy honeymoons, where the children were born, and where, perchance, death came to bind with tighter ties the solemn covenant they assumed at the marriage altar, and the phrase, "God bless our home," once so sacred to father and mother and little tots, has been changed to "God bless the home that once was ours."

People are becoming tired of seeing an army of unemployed walking the streets; also they are tired of being implored for a few cents to buy a sandwich and a cup of coffee; also they are tired of sending coal to some friend, and also they are tired of helping to pay rent; also they are tired of being continually importuned to donate to charity; also the millions who compose the army of unemployed are feeling humiliated in asking for a hand-out and are becoming very restless. These things ought not to be, and they would not be if special privilege had not entered our national life to warp the minds and control the acts of men. The time will come when they will not be if we who occupy positions of responsibility will have the vision and the courage to strike off the shackles of bureaucracy and to redirect the course of government along constitutional lines charted by Jefferson and those who shared with him the marvelous vision that inspired the Declaration of Independence.

When that time comes the United States of America will once again be a "government of the people, for the people, and by the people." The money that is now wasted on taxes will be used to give employment, to reestablish happy and contented homes, and to clothe and educate children, and we will not have any trouble about finding work for honest men.

GREATEST HUMANITARIAN SINCE JESUS

One hundred and eighty-nine years ago yesterday a Virginia mother gave birth to the greatest humanitarian who has trod this planet since Jesus of Nazareth. We are assembled to-night to honor his memory and to gain from his example some inspiration and some glimmer of hope for a nation in travail.

It is well for us to turn backward in solemn contemplation to the basic philosophy on which this Nation was founded. That credo is expressed in the briefest possible compass in Jefferson's own words in the preamble of the Declaration of Independence:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

This is the very essence of the franchise of freedom. It is the corner stone upon which was builded the magnificent temple of government called the United States of America. It came as a voice from heaven to the beleaguered, the downtrodden, and oppressed of every land. Freedom! Freedom of political action! Freedom of conscience!

Freedom from the whip of masters! Freedom to order one's life as one pleases provided he does no injustice to others! Equality of rights and opportunities! Oh, Jefferson had indeed spoken as if from the throne of God.

THE VISION OF JEFFERSON

To get a full appreciation of the beauty of his conception let us try to grasp the vision that was before him when he wrote the immortal declaration.

It is a vision of God the Architect, the loving Father of us all, creating a cosmic commonwealth of infinite beauty and making it ready for His children. Vast, fertile plains to yield the things that sustain life, great rivers that flow in majesty to the seas, cascades that dance and sparkle in the sunlight, mountain slopes that rise in towering grandeur to the very feet of the Creator. Vineyards and orange groves, and the sunshine and the shadow chasing each other over waving fields of wheat and corn. In the depths of the earth God deposited untold billions of tons of coal to warm the human family, in the waterfalls he placed power without limit to drive the wheels of commerce. All things that make for prosperity, welfare, and happiness of the human race are embraced in God's gift to man on the morning of creation.

It would be presumptuous to try to fathom the purposes of the Infinite, but right-thinking minds always have agreed, and always will agree, that God intended this gift as a great universal commonwealth to be shared by all of His children; and, arguing from that premise, who can doubt that Jefferson spoke with divine authority when he declared that "all men are created equal" and when he enunciated his immortal doctrine of "equal rights to all; special privileges to none"? His was the voice of the seer who lives close to the eternal verities and draws his inspiration from the fountain of life.

He saw things as the Creator intended them to be. When I think of America I like to think of it as a great big family of 120,000,000 souls, a circle of equality, at whose table is always spread a feast of love and whosoever will may come. The beauty of this philosophy is that it fosters comradeship. It makes brothers of you and me and all of us. That was the ideal of Jefferson. That is the vision of government that was caught and put on canvas in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

Government of to-day is a monstrous libel on the plan of government that was conceived by Jefferson. Government of to-day is characterized by a million departures from the Jeffersonian philosophy of equal rights and no special privileges. Every time a judge listens to a politician's plea that "Bill Jones is my friend; let him off easily," he murders Jeffersonianism, for the courts above all things else should be immune from special privilege. Nine-tenths of the bureaus and commissions of the Federal Government do violence to the Jeffersonian theory of equality, for they are created for the express purpose, and none other, of promoting the selfish interest of this, that, or the other group or class. The money of the taxpayers that should be used for the commonweal is drained to maintain this, that, and the other bureau and agency created for the benefit of this, that, and the other bloc.

The seekers of special favors have all but shot to death the Jeffersonian idea of equal rights, while they have fastened unbelievable charges on the taxpayers and have brought the country almost to the brink of ruin. They have written upon the statute books a tariff law that is not a tariff for protection and can not be defended as such, but is a tariff for grab, which goes far beyond the limits necessary for protection, with rates so high that they offend every nation on earth, putting us in the anomalous position of slapping the rest of the world in the face with one hand while we hold out the other hand and ask for its trade. Under the circumstances how much of that trade do you think we will get? On this point I can cite no more impressive testimony than the export statistics.

Since this law went into effect our foreign trade has fallen off $2,290,027,000, thus adding to the staggering unemployment at home, besides giving rise to a swarm of embargoes and retaliatory tariffs in other countries, and adding to hatred of America all around the world. A tariff that looks after the interests of American industry by equalizing the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad is not undemocratic; but a tariff that cuts off our foreign markets and enables monopolies to prey on the people at home is not only undemocratic, but it is un-American and unconscionable.

What is the answer? Let no one doubt the meaningful portent of that question or the solemnity of the issue. On our ability to see clearly through this crisis rests the decision as to whether or not free government shall endure. We know, if we stop to think and reason, that our present misfortunes are directly traceable in large measure to departure from the teachings of Jefferson. We can only trust that by retracing our steps and placing our Government in harmony with his precepts we may yet be able to salvage and make secure the future of America. To no holier task could we consecrate ourselves. We owe this duty no less to posterity than to our day and generation, for we are trustees of the future and hold in our protecting arms the children of countless generations yet unborn.

FROM OUT OF THE BACKGROUND OF HISTORY

Few of us there are who would not gladly die for our children. We want our sons to have every chance to acquire useful knowledge, to develop high ideals, and to grow up to be clean, manly men. We want our daughters to have respectable clothes to wear at school and to have some of the advantages of culture, music, and art as they grow up, so that they will be altogether good and lovely when they reach womanhood's radiant bloom. And we want all of the children of all of the centuries to come to enjoy these unalloyed blessings.

With the love that fills our hearts for the children no less of the future than of to-day we should one and all regard ourselves as trustees under the will of Thomas Jefferson to do all within our power, as God gives us vision and strength, to keep the lanes of opportunity open to our children and our children's children to the most remote generation.

When a wayfarer wanders far out of the beaten road into the stony paths that lead to the jungles where death and destruction lurk, there is only one thing for him to do, and that is to retrace his steps to safety. That is what this Nation must do if it would live. From out of the background of history comes Thomas Jefferson to point the way. In him the image of God shines most brightly. Just as he held true to human rights in the beginning, he will not fail us now. Let us then reconsecrate ourselves at the feet of Jefferson and learn once more from him that we should esteem our fellow citizens not for what we can squeeze out of them by the rack and thumbscrew of special privilege, but for what we can do for them to give them a larger part in life and to make them happy and contented. May this ideal of service grow until it fills all of America with its presence and takes possession of all of our hearts. In the language of Webster at Bunker Hill: "Let it arise until it meets the sun in his coming; until the first streaks of morning gild it and parting day lingers and plays upon its summit!"

NEW CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE FOR THE CANAL ZONE AND NEW CIVIL CODE FOR THE CANAL ZONE

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that consideration of the next two bills (H. R. 7521) to provide a new Code of Civil Procedure for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Code of Civil Procedure, and (H. R. 7522) to provide a new Civil Code for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Civil Code, be temporarily deferred until later in the afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bills H. R. 7521 and H. R. 7522 be temporarily laid aside for later consideration this afternoon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNALLOTTED TRIBAL INDIAN LAND IN THE RED LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION, MINN.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 472, to authorize the leasing of unallotted tribal Indian land in the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION AND IMPROVEMENT OF ROADS AND TRAILS IN THE NATIONAL PARKS AND MONUMENTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6059, to continue the authorization for the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges in, and approach roads to, the national parks and monuments under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be stricken from the Consent Calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent that this bill may be stricken from the Consent Calendar without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MAINTENANCE OF GOVERNMENT WHARF AT JUNEAU, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6713, for estimates necessary for the proper maintenance of the Government wharf at Juneau, Alaska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have been unable to ascertain the necessity of a bill of this kind. I would like to have some explanation of this bill made by some member of the Committee on Territories. I want to point out that if it is necessary to submit an estimate for maintenance what is really necessary is legislation for maintenance.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RATES OF POSTAGE ON CERTAIN PERIODICALS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6688, to fix the rates of postage on certain periodicals exceeding 8 ounces in weight.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over temporarily without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over temporarily without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CRATER LAKE NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9970, to add certain land to the Crater Lake National Park, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of unsurveyed sections 2 and 11, north half and north half south half section 14, and those parts of unsurveyed sections 1, 12, and 13, lying west of Anna Creek, in township 32 south, range 6 east, Willamette meridian, in—

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, and insert the following:

"That all of that certain tract described as follows: Beginning on the south boundary line of Crater Lake National Park at 4-mile post No. 112; thence west along the south boundary line of said park 4.26 chains, which is the northwest corner of this tract; thence south 114.42 chains; thence south 40° 59' east, 84.39 chains; thence east 15.13 chains to highway stake No. 130; thence north 89° 30' east, 18.06 chains; thence north 20.83 chains; thence north 19° and 40' west, 126.04 chains; thence north 27° 52' west, 43.50 chains to the south boundary of Crater Lake National Park; thence west 24 chains following the south boundary of said park to the place of beginning in the State of Oregon be, and the same are hereby, excluded from the Crater National Forest and made a part of the Crater Lake National Park subject to all laws and regulations applicable to and governing said park."

In line 15, page 2, strike out the word "are" and insert the word "is."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 9877, to repeal obsolete sections of the Revised Statutes, omitted from the United States Code.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think it is a very dangerous practice, by unanimous consent, to repeal statutes where we have no opportunity to compare them or know what statutes they are or their connection with existing law. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may go over and will state that I shall object, eventually, unless the matter can be brought before the House in some way so that we may have full opportunity to consider it.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. DYER. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HARLAN. I may say there has been a complete report on every one of these sections with the comment of the department on each section. This bill was passed over without prejudice at the last call of the calendar with the express purpose of allowing the Members to have an opportunity to examine the report. I have here a copy of all the sections that are to be repealed with the comment of the different departments on the sections.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. Certainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to say to the gentleman that since last Consent Day I have looked over this report; and while, of course, I do not pretend that I have examined every statute, yet it is the most complete and the most satisfying report I have ever read on an omnibus repeal bill. I may say to my colleague from Missouri that I can not imagine any way this House would ever be able to take up a bill of this kind and analyze every statute. The report is most informative, is very carefully prepared, and in a case of this kind we must absolutely rely on the committee.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman expect his committee to have the call on Calendar Wednesday some time during the session?

Mr. HARLAN. I have never heard of our committee having the call. We have only had two bills.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will bear with me and let the bill go over, I shall examine it myself and try to cooperate with the gentleman.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. May I say for the benefit of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] that every one of these paragraphs has been read by some member of the committee. I read the entire report with respect to the sections that were assigned to me, and every section was checked and those about which there was the slightest question—not reason but question—were deleted, and every statute included here has been the subject of at least two reports.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over temporarily.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

EXEMPTION FROM QUOTA OF HUSBANDS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS

The Clerk called the next business on the Consent Calendar, the bill (H. R. 10600), to exempt from the quota husbands of American citizens.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire as to the consistency of the gentleman's committee in allowing picture husbands or husbands who are not picture husbands of American citizens to be admitted to this country if their wives are American citizens and barring other classes of immigrants who come here temporarily.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not quite get the gentleman's point. This bill simply provides that we shall put the American woman citizen upon a par with the American male citizen. The bill simply exempts from the quota husbands of American citizens legally married and affects probably 112 or 115 members of one organization which appeared before our committee, whose husbands are unable to come here by reason of quota conditions, although they already have children born in the United States. The children have not even seen their father.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that a woman who has gained lawful entry into this country and then taken out her citizenship papers and then goes abroad on a temporary visit and is married, would have such a status as to extend the privilege of citizenship to the husband.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; citizenship is not extended by reason of any such marriage.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman's position is well taken. I referred to admission into this country.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this do anything more than give the same privilege to women that is now given to husbands?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is all.

Mr. STAFFORD. It gives to husbands the same privilege that is now given to wives of American citizens.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Under present law, a citizen of the United States may bring in his wife and minor children, outside of the quota, whereas a female citizen, who is an American girl and happens to be married to a foreigner, does not have the same equality of privilege, and yet we are always talking about extending them equal rights.

Mr. STAFFORD. How does the gentleman reconcile that position with the position the gentleman takes in barring from this country, temporarily, actors who come here on a visitor's passport?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is a different situation entirely, because the actors' bill, which we will be pleased to discuss when it comes up, simply deals with the fact that we want men of distinction to come here and not a horde of people who claim to be actors but who seek the exemption just because they are actors. The law has been very loose for years so that persons who come before the consul by stating they are actors are exempt from the contract labor law, and we only want actors to come here who are actors of distinction and actors of merit.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The distinction is this. In the case of the actor he comes here seeking employment. In this case they must show conclusively that they are not likely to become a public charge.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman says there are 112 alien husbands of citizen wives in a position to come to the United States. Have they been examined as to insanity, poverty, previous records, and so forth?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If they do not qualify under every requirement of the law as to mentality, ability, and so forth, we do not want them. We are taking the case of an able-bodied man marrying an American girl, married over three years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I did not object to consideration, inasmuch as a minority report was not filed, but I predict—and I want the House to know—I am sorry I have not the list here, but there were 175 of these particular recognized husbands, and the State Department now has the list down to 112; some are bigamists, 2 or 3 fled from justice, others whose wives do not now want them. You will have an endless chain of these aliens who have married American girls. They married them just to get into the United States.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 2656, an identical bill, be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to substitute the bill S. 2656 for the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. TARVER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the House bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 4 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) An immigrant who is the unmarried child under 21 years of age, or the wife, or the husband, of a citizen of the United States; ".

SEC. 2. Clause (A) of paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of section 6 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(A) Quota immigrants who are the fathers or the mothers of citizens of the United States who are 21 years of age or over; ".

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to call attention to the fact that this bill, in my opinion, is the wrong way to cure the alien-husband situation. It means a pretended relief to 112 alien husbands who have been married the last year or two to women citizens of the United States, but it opens the way to an endless chain of men, who as husbands of American citizen wives will be given nonquota status. The bill is a mistake. More than half of the 112 husbands will never get here.

A far better plan is in the bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], which gives a preference within the quota, and does not set up an endless chain which so many are afraid of. The Jenkins bill also takes care of the only three countries where the quota is so small that it otherwise might not take care of all of those who seek admission as preference within quotas.

Nobody wants to keep these husbands out if they can be legally admitted, but no one should want an opportunity to be opened for a new racket—racketeering in the admissions of aliens who have become husbands abroad and who can not get into the United States any other way.

There has been no examination of these husbands except that made by the State Department. As I said, the list has been cut down from 175 to 112. This act will not help the remaining 112 at all, for they must be examined abroad and again at Ellis Island. Extreme poverty and other causes will keep them out.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This only gives them a status and does not admit them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But many seem to think that this is a bill to admit them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It gives them a status only. It does not admit them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is correct, and the State Department has gone to the limit in reducing the number from about 175 to 112. A lot of the wives who are here—American citizens—are going to be fooled. Congress relieved all these husbands up to a date certain, some time in 1928. We could again amend the date—to say—May 15 for all husbands who are abroad and who are eligible to admission under existing laws. But a better plan would be the Jenkins plan. That bill was to have been offered here today as a substitute. Now, we know from experience that quite a number of men from Europe came to Cuba, married American women citizens and then came right into the United States, later to procure divorces. So the department had to begin a careful scrutiny of such marriages. It is not so easy to prove that a marriage is not bona fide. Only last year quite a number of girls, mostly from New York, went abroad, mostly to Poland, and were married on very short acquaintance to men trying to get to the United States, or to find a mode of livelihood. A few of them married old acquaintances.

This bill is not so for the 112 husbands who are on the outside—half of them will never be able to qualify—as it is to make an opening for the future. It will lead to many an American girl being imposed upon, made a tool of, and it will lead to distress, deception, and divorce, all in the United States. In fact, it will open a new racket.

Mr. DYER. Under the present existing law wives of American citizens can now come in?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Under the regular law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; except certain Orientals, and the next sniping appeal will be for them.

Mr. DYER. And this is for the purpose of giving to husbands of American citizens the same privilege?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; if those husbands are qualified to enter. And in my opinion it is a dangerous and unnecessary way to cure the situation. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], himself, will come to the day when he will regret the endless chain likely to be brought about through the bringing of men to this country in this method. The women will be the sufferers unless they are of the "don't care" kind.

Mr. DYER. We are endeavoring now to give an equal status to men and women in our country, and I think this is only fair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If you want to start an endless chain, well and good. The Filipinos here want their wives. So do the Japanese. I look for the time under this provision when steamship companies, mostly foreign-owned, will advertise marriage excursions so that one girl can go abroad alone, but with a round-trip ticket good for husband and wife on the return trip. The steamships want business badly, and a few extra meals for the new husband will amount to very little. Cuba is likely to become a veritable Gretna Green for the convenience of European men trying to get to the United States through the marriage route. We have given men the right to bring their wives nonquota, in recognition of the natural desire of man to support his wife. This turns it around, and the wives must agree to support their non-English speaking husbands until they learn the language and customs here, and secure jobs.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I want the House to understand this bill. We talk about equal rights to women in this country, yet in the immigration law we now discriminate against American women. If the husband or prospective husband, whatever the case may be, is physically or mentally unfit, he can not pass any barrier at all. He must qualify under the immigration law, just like every other alien. This does not make him a citizen of the United States, it does not give him any standing at all. This bill simply gives rights to women equal to those we have given to men who seek to bring in their wives.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If this bill were to become a law, would it permit women or men who are American citizens to go abroad, marry a foreigner, live with that spouse for two or three years, and have them come in without being charged to the quota?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. Understand the situation. Marriages have been contracted three and four years ago in certain countries, whose quota is behind about 40 years. These have been contracted in good faith, not merely for the purpose of marriage, but for the honest purpose of living together as God intended. Children have been born. These children have not seen the father in four years. Now, must they wait for that quota for 40 or 50 years? For God's sake, what objection could there be if they meet with every requirement of the law, to let these husbands of American citizens come in on equal footing we now give the wives of American citizens?

Mr. BURTNESS. In order to be consistent with reference to rights of men and women, is it not either necessary to pass this bill or repeal the present provision which permit the wives of American citizens to come in outside of the quota?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman. Do one thing or the other. This does not bring in any aliens, it does not open the door in the slightest degree. It simply removes a discriminatory provision which has been in the law for some time, and puts a man and a wife on an equal footing. I ask you gentlemen to pass the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Line 13, at the end of the bill, add the following: "Provided, That the marriage shall have occurred prior to issuance of visa."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, all that is intended by this amendment is to make sure that we do not open the way for a marriage of the kind not recognized in the United States. The consular officer of the State Department issues the visa. I am not sure as to what the process will be as to husbands, but it will be affirmed that these couples are married. Not the present 112, but all of those in the future. We had a lot of trouble on the oriental side of the world with the "picture-bride" system. This, in my opinion, is a protective amendment to make sure that we do not get into trouble through other odd marriage customs. For instance, in Portugal, perhaps Spain and other countries, a marriage by proxy is legal and proper.

Mr. DYER. In other words, they must show that they have been married before the visa is issued, by a marriage license.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That does not enter into this. All this law does is to say that an American woman is on a par with an American man.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But do I understand the purpose and intent of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] to be that before a visa is issued, they must establish a legal marriage?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER) there were—ayes 60, nays 3.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 209, nays 112, not voting 111, as follows:

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. GRANFIELD, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CONNERY, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The doors were opened.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I proposed and which was adopted by the House be inserted at the end of line 7 instead of at the end of line 13.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

LEASING UNALLOTTED TRIBAL INDIAN LAND IN RED LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION, MINN.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 156, H. R. 472, a bill to authorize the leasing of unallotted tribal Indian land in the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn.

When that bill was reached on the calendar I looked around the Chamber under reservation of objection to see whether the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. SELVIG, the author of the bill, was present. The gentleman was not present. I have been informed since by his colleagues that the gentleman is ill in the hospital. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 156, H. R. 472.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]?

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is a lengthy bill and will require some time.

Mr. KVALE. No. It is a very short bill, and amendments will be offered which will make it acceptable to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and others who have heretofore objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when this bill was originally brought up tentatively for consideration I expressed to the author of the bill that I had grave objection to the length of term for which this land, bordering on an interior Minnesota lake on an Indian reservation, should be leased. Since then I have had representatives of an Indian tribe call upon me, presented by a Representative from Minnesota, who also objected to that length of term. I have no objection to the bill if the length of tenure is reduced from 25 years to 10 years. I believe that is acceptable to the gentleman from Minnesota, who reflects the opinion of the author of the bill.

Mr. KVALE. My colleague [Mr. SELVIG] has instructed me to say that, while he prefers the 25-year provision, he will accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin if the gentleman insists upon its addition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I had the same observation to make and I am glad he has suggested such an amendment to the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, with the consent of the council or other authorized body representing the Indians of the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, not to exceed 200 acres of unallotted tribal land in township 153 north, range 34 west, within said Indian reservation, for summer resort or other commercial purposes for a term not to exceed 25 years.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "or other authorized body representing the Indians."

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Minnesota" insert the words "recognized by."

Page 1, line 6, after the word "Interior," insert the words "said Secretary."

Page 1, line 10, after the word "resort," strike out the words "or other commercial."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "years," insert:

"Provided, That nothing herein shall authorize the leasing of any lands save such as have been previously leased for more than five years, nor unless substantial improvements have been erected under said prior leases."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

REPEAL OF OBSOLETE SECTIONS OF THE REVISED STATUTES OMITTED FROM THE UNITED STATES CODE

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 207, H. R. 9877, to repeal obsolete sections of the Revised Statutes omitted from the United States Code, which bill was temporarily passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 207, H. R. 9877. Is there objection?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio how long he expects to spend on this bill?

Mr. HARLAN. I think all the objections have been covered. It all depends on whether any Member wants to make additional objections. I am not going to say anything.

Mr. PATTERSON. I understand there is no objection to the consideration of the bill but it will take some time to consider the bill.

Mr. HARLAN. No; I do not think so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sections of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed:

SEC. 2. The question as to whether any other provisions of law now omitted from the United States Code and supplements, have present force or effect as general and permanent law, shall be determined without regard to this act.

SEC. 3. No inference shall be raised by the enactment of this act that the sections of the Revised Statutes repealed by this act were in force or effect at the time of such enactment: Provided, however, That any rights or liabilities existing under such repealed sections shall not be affected by their repeal.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain in a few words the purport of section 2?

Mr. HARLAN. The fact of the matter is that most of these sections have not been the law for a great many years past. The repealing of them was just overlooked. It was feared there might be an inference that inasmuch as we were repealing them now they might be considered as having been in force and effect during the time that they have not been in force and effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman acquainted with any other dead-letter laws that are on the statute books other than those laws referred to here?

Mr. HARLAN. I will say that this bill, when enacted, will repeal every section of the Revised Statutes that is not now included in the code. For the information of the gentlemen who may be interested and not informed, in 1873 we adopted the Revised Statutes of the United States, which were passed and were the law then. After that we got out the Statutes at Large, and then we adopted the code, which was not the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. The code is not a revision of the statutes but is a mere codification.

Mr. HARLAN. Exactly. It is merely the codification of the Statutes at Large and the Revised Statutes. Now, when the code was passed all these sections were left out of the code because it was not deemed by the publishers that they were still existing law, yet there has been no act passed at any time expressly repealing these sections.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire as to one further matter? Is there any movement being undertaken to have a later revision of the statutes of the United States?

Mr. HARLAN. The committee is working on that at the present time. I may say that our present plan is to take the code up by sections. It is utterly impossible, under present conditions, to codify all the laws and get them adopted as a statute, but we are hoping, as soon as the present revenue bill is passed, to take up all the sections pertaining to revenue laws and have them passed and adopted as the law, and by taking up one section at a time we will, in the course of a few years, get another codification.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ISSUANCE OF PATENTS FOR CERTAIN LANDS IN COLORADO

The Clerk called the next business on the Consent Calendar, the bill (H. R. 10744) to authorize the issuance of patents for certain lands in the State of Colorado to certain persons.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, since this bill was last on the Consent Calendar the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON], the author of the bill, has favored me with considerable information concerning the lands included in this bill.

I would like to inquire whether the lands which were included in a land grant to certain railroads back in the sixties were ever contested by the United States as to whether the railroad had completed its part of the contract?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The answer is no; and, on the contrary, an officer of the United States, the register of the land office at the Denver land office, issued a certificate under date of March 20, 1908, stating that these lands were in fact a part of the land grant.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Since that time, when the settlement was made with the Union Pacific Railroad Co. and the order was issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the 20th day of May, 1931, to put these lands out for homestead entry, it was recognized that they were a part of the land grant for which patent had not yet been issued.

This is a bill to furnish a means to quiet title to 19,910.69 acres of land in the counties of Jefferson, Boulder, and Weld in the State of Colorado. Some of the lands are in the mountain park system of the city and county of Denver and were purchased by the city from the owner who had had his title for many years, but no patent from the Government. A part of the lands are in a townsite named Crags. The balance is all farm lands, and all have been on the tax rolls for from 40 to 60 years. A photostat of one of the county tax rolls of 1871 shows a large portion of the lands in private ownership at that time. The titles to all these lands were obtained by purchase from those who sold the lands under this land grant from the United States to the Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Co.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has there ever been any lawsuit wherein the United States was represented, with respect to whether the original conditions of the land grant had been met? It is rather strange that in 75 years the Government of the United States has never issued a patent to this 19,000 acres of land.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Perhaps I ought to make a complete statement, if the gentleman wishes the RECORD to show it.

When the land grant was made it contained a little over 800,000 acres of land. The lands are all in the district of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE], and they run from near Denver to near Cheyenne, and on both sides of what was called the Denver Pacific Railway. The lands were all taken up and settled and sold. Part were settled by homestead entry. The railroad sold all this acreage prior to 1890. About that time there was a lawsuit in regard to this 19,000 acres of land in the United States court.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the United States was not a party to that action?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. No; it was not a party to it. In that suit it was determined that the Union Pacific Railroad Co. should issue a deed in accordance with the decree, and a copy of the decree I submitted to the Department of the Interior, to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and to our committee. It happens that since that time the Union Pacific Railroad Co. did not obtain a patent to the lands covered by this bill. It did not follow out that order of the court; but the land had already been sold and had passed into the ownership of other people at that time, and is so stated in the decree.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This bill typifies the arrogance and the indifference to law and order of the old Union Pacific in the old Union Pacific days. What they did was this: They got the original grant of land and then they started to convey part of this land, and they conveyed and ignored the requirements with respect to obtaining patents or granting patents to their grantees; is not that right?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes; that is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps the Government declined to give a patent because they had not complied with the conditions of the grant.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think that is the case.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I believe I shall object, I would like the author of the bill to indicate any justifiable reason why the payment of the usual $1.25 per acre should be waived in the case of these Government lands?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Because the grantees are not to blame.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will answer that in a few words, and, if the gentleman will permit, I shall put a citation of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court into the RECORD. The answer is quite simple.

When the land grant was made by the United States in the sixties, it was required that all contiguous alternate sections of land owned by the Government within the limits of the grant should be sold for $2.50 an acre, and those who sat in the Congress said at that time that by increasing the price to $2.50 per acre from the $1.25 per acre then being charged for the land, it was not going to cost the Government anything, but the United States would get its full price of $1.25 per acre for all lands within the grant by charging this price of $2.50 per acre for all its reserved lands in the alternate sections in these land grants. And the Government did so sell these lands and get the money.

The following memorandum includes the citation referred to from the United States Supreme Court reports and from the records of the Thirty-third Congress:

In the opinion of U. S. v. Healey (160 U. S. (1895)), Mr. Justice Harlan discusses the difference in price of land in the alternate reserved sections of public lands along the lines of railroads for the construction of which public lands had been or might thereafter be granted by acts of Congress.

On page 142 of the opinion he states:

> Lands reserved to the United States along the lines of railroads are made double minimum in price because of their enhanced value in consequence of the proximity of such roads.

And on page 146 he states:

> The principal, if not the only, object of the requirement that the alternate reserved sections along the lines of land-grant railroads should not be sold for less than double the minimum price fixed for other lands was to compensate the United States for the loss of the sections given away by the Government.

In the Congressional Globe for January 22, 1852, page 350, there are found the remarks of Senator Douglas in regard to the bill requiring the payment of $2.50 per acre for certain reserved sections of public lands along lines of railroad. During the course of the debate he says:

> Would not the half of the lands thus remaining to you be worth more after the road was made than the whole would be before it was constructed? That is the simple question; and, viewing it as such, I am satisfied that there is not a single Senator on this floor who would not gladly make the arrangement if he were the individual landowner. And if this would be a good arrangement for any Senator here, why would it not be a good policy for the country and for the Government of the United States to adopt as landowners? Mr. President, we insist that these grants in aid of the construction of railroads enhance the value of the land fund. Instead of diminishing the revenue that will be derivable from public lands, we contend that it will increase it; instead of diminishing your fund by this course, we increase its value; instead of depriving you of anything which is really valuable to you, we show you a way whereby you can make that valuable which under your present policy is practically valueless. * * * If you make this grant, you will double the value and double the price of the alternate sections; and you will thus obtain for one-half all that you pretend to ask for the whole. * * * If, then, the road doubles the price of your adjacent lands, you lose nothing.

Mr. SCHAFER. And for every acre for which the Government will issue a patent if this bill becomes the law, with a waiver of the $1.25 per acre fee, the Government has already received the usual amount.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his judgment and discretion, is hereby authorized, after due inquiry, to issue patents in the manner hereinafter provided for any of those lands situated in the State of Colorado which were, as a result of the adjustment of the land grant to Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Co. to which the Union Pacific Railroad Co. succeeded, restored to the public domain by the Secretary of the Interior on May 20, 1931, to be disposed of under existing applicable public land laws.

SEC. 2. That any person, association, corporation, or municipality which, in good faith under color of title prior to the date of said restoration, placed valuable improvements upon, occupied, or cultivated, or otherwise exercised dominion over any of the lands so restored, or who on or since said date of restoration became the grantee, transferee, or assignee of such person, association, corporation, or municipality, shall have a preference right to purchase the lands so held by him upon the filing of an application therefor and payment of $1.25 per acre, or fraction thereof within six years from the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That upon any such application filed within three years from the date of the enactment hereof payment of said $1.25 per acre is hereby waived. Every such application must be accompanied with satisfactory proof that the applicant is entitled to such preference right, and that the lands which he applies to purchase are not in the legal possession of an adverse claimant: Provided further, That any such applicant may, if he so elects, perfect his title under any applicable public land law, if qualified thereunder.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue all necessary rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD at this point an order of the General Land Office of May 20, 1931, to which this bill refers, and also a copy of statement of the register of the Denver land office of March 20, 1908, which was recorded in various Colorado counties, as shown by the recordation data thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter above referred to is as follows:

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, May 20, 1931.

Order of restoration from withdrawal of certain land in limits of railroad grant in the State of Colorado.

REGISTER,
Denver, Colo.

SIR: By acts of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. 489), July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 356), and July 3, 1866 (14 Stat. 79), a grant of land was made to the Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Co. in aid of construction of a railroad from the Missouri River, at the mouth of the Kansas River, to a connection with the Union Pacific Railroad, to be made at a point not more than 50 miles west of the meridian of Denver, Colo., whose rights and interest in said grant have been assigned and transferred through its successor to the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

An adjustment of said grant was recently made by this office, which adjustment was approved by the Secretary, and the grant formally closed on October 20, 1930, the grant having been fully satisfied. The adjustment disclosed that there were 19,910.69 acres of vacant unlisted land in odd-numbered sections (granted sections) within the limits of the grant lying between Denver and the north boundary line of the State of Colorado, which are not required in satisfaction of the grant, a list of which lands is herewith inclosed.

On August 20, 1869, the Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Co. filed its map of definite location of its line of road from Denver, Colo., to Cheyenne, Wyo., said company being then the claimant or owner, by assignment under act of March 3, 1869 (15 Stat. 324), of this portion of said grant. Subsequently, by directions of the Secretary given under dates of June 14 and August 27, 1869, in pursuance to the grant, this office, on October 4, 1869, ordered and instructed the Register and Receiver of the district land offices (then Denver City and Central City) to withdraw from preemption, private entry, and sale all land in the odd-numbered sections falling within the 20-mile limits of the grant from Denver to the north boundary line of the State of Colorado, and the lands described in the accompanying list which appear to be vacant and not needed in satisfaction of the grant are embraced in said withdrawal which still remains intact.

The grant, as above stated, was adjusted and closed by the Secretary, the same having been fully satisfied. The withdrawal made October 4, 1869, in pursuance to the grant, would seem theretofore to have served its purpose and is no longer required. Accordingly, to the end that the land described in the accompanying list may be restored to entry, said withdrawal is hereby revoked as to said lands, and the same restored to the public domain.

In view of the foregoing, it is hereby ordered, pursuant to Public Resolution No. 85, approved June 12, 1930 (46 Stat. 580), that the lands described in the accompanying list shall be opened to entry under the homestead and desert-land laws for a period of 91 days beginning with the thirty-fifth day from and after the date of this order by qualified ex-service men for whose service recognition is granted by said resolution, and to entry under any applicable public-land laws by those persons claiming a preference right of entry superior to that of the ex-service man, and thereafter any of said lands remaining unreserved and unappropriated shall be opened to entry by the public generally under any applicable public-land law. Particular attention being invited to section 5 of the act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 556), and instructions in 8 L. D. 351, 352, pursuant to which such persons as may be claiming ownership of any of the land by reason of the sale thereof by the railroad company may be permitted, if otherwise qualified, to present their claims and file application to purchase the land and perfect title thereto under said act.

Upon receipt of this order you will make proper notations thereof on your records. Post a copy of the order in your office and give the restoration as much publicity as possible without expense to the Government. This may be done by forwarding copies of such notice of the restoration as you may prepare to the post offices nearest the lands for posting therein for the information of the public, and to the newspapers published nearest the land as an item of news, being careful not to send such copies to the publishers without calling their particular attention that they are furnished only as an item of news, and that the Government will not be responsible for the cost of publication thereof. Any items or notices furnished concerning this restoration should contain a statement to the effect that all inquiries relative thereto must be addressed to the district land office at Denver, Colo.

Kindly report promptly your compliance with the instructions herein given.

Very respectfully,

THOS. C. HAVELL,
Acting Commissioner.

Approved May 20, 1931, by—

JOHN H. EDWARDS.
Assistant Secretary.

TO CLARIFY THE APPLICATION OF THE CONTRACT PROVISION OF THE IMMIGRATION LAWS TO ACTORS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8877, to clarify the application of the contract-labor provisions of the immigration laws to actors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, this is the bill that the Speaker said he would recognize me under suspension of the rules. It is a 100 per cent restriction bill. It is to restrict actors coming in here and displacing American actors.

Mr. DYER. And it is a very good bill.

Mr. CELLER. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE AT FORT HANCOCK, TEX.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 10555, authorizing the Fort Hancock Porvenir Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at Fort Hancock, Tex.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In view of the adoption of the resolution by the American Association of State Highway Officials, at which representatives of the Mexican Government attended and said they disapproved of any extension because there would be another plan whereby the international bridge would be constructed and operated——

Mr. THOMASON. If the gentleman will yield, I am familiar with the situation, for I have been on the ground. In spite of what the Secretary says, the situation is this: There are two prosperous communities, one at Fort Hancock, Tex., and the other across the Rio Grande at Porvenir, Mexico. They have trade and social relations. They have developed mining interests on the Porvenir side.

There is no way in the world for them to carry on their trade or social relations without this bridge. The river is not fordable but a part of the time. The nearest bridge west is 50 miles, and the nearest bridge east is 200 miles,

The Bankhead Highway runs across Texas and through the town of Fort Hancock, which is about half a mile away. But these communities are prosperous and are entitled to some means of crossing the river. I am opposed to toll bridges as much as any gentleman here, but this is to be an international bridge and there is no other way to get it. No State or Federal highway system is involved.

I am quite willing that the bill should be amended so that if any State, county, or municipality ever wants to take it over, they can do so by paying the cost price.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the building of this bridge result in an additional drain on the Treasury by reason of the necessity to add additional personnel to guard the bridge to prevent the smuggling of aliens and contraband liquor?

Mr. THOMASON. In my judgment, it will not; or, at any rate, the cost would be small. I can not say positively, although the Department of State approves the bill, but the reason in my judgment that it will not add any expense is that already the departments of the United States Government interested in this are now represented at Fort Hancock in this community, because when the river is low they do ford it as best they can either on horseback or in some other way. There is a lot of trade carried on between these two towns, and on account of the great distance to another bridge they are entitled to this relief.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

POSTAGE CHARGE ON NOTICES TO PUBLISHERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10494) to provide a postage charge on notices to publishers regarding undeliverable second-class matter.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the next to the last paragraph of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes," approved May 12, 1910 (36 Stat. 366; U. S. C., title 39, sec. 277), is hereby amended by the addition after the first sentence of the following sentence: "Provided, That there shall be a postage charge of 2 cents for such notice regarding undeliverable copies, which shall be collected from the publisher upon delivery of the notice."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

USE OF MAILS IN PUZZLE CONTESTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10462) to prohibit the use of the United States mails for the transmission of any matter advertising puzzle contests, naming contests, prize offers, or any other form of competition for a prize wherein such offers are made to induce persons to compete in another contest which involves either the purchase or sale of goods as a requisite of winning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill strikes at harmless puzzle contests as fiercely as it does at puzzle contests that are obnoxious, iniquitous, and detrimental to the public welfare. The first section of the bill does a very good job, striking at these progressive puzzle contests that get you in and drag you along as a sucker and educate you as you go along that to get a prize you must put up more money, puzzle contests in which your chances of getting a prize depend upon the amount of money you put up. It would go a long way to outlaw those pernicious puzzle contests in which it is according to how much money you put in what kind of a prize you get. Section 4 provides the penalty. I am in favor of those two sections of the bill and would offer no objection to them whatever, if they stood alone; but section 3 of the bill exempts publishers and periodicals and newspapers from the penalties of the bill and permits them to carry on the worst kind of puzzle contests. There is no reason for such exemption except political influence. They should not be exempt from the law. Section 2 of the bill discriminates against legitimate puzzle contests, and there are some legitimate puzzle contests that are open and aboveboard and that tell you in advance what the conditions are, what the costs are, and what you receive for your money. I am informed that section 2 was put in at the request of and is for the special benefit of house-to-house canvassers and salesmen, front-doorbell-ringing salesmen who are able to overpersuade your wife by plausible conversation to buy something that she does not need and does not want.

The Postmaster General has made an adverse report on the bill. The Federal Trades Commission has refused to recommend the bill. There are many reasons why the bill should be defeated in its present form. Unless the proponents of the bill are willing to strike out sections 2 and 3 and leave the bill with only sections 1 and 4 remaining, I shall be constrained to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this bill is aimed at puzzle contests whereby the public is humbugged by being told one thing and led into another and an altogether different contest. There is nothing in the United States mail that humbugs the American people out of more money, except patent medicines.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, there is no excuse or need for this legislation. It does not have the recommendation of the head of the department, nor has it ever been submitted to nor has it the approval of the Attorney General, who has in charge the enforcement of the law with reference to the violation of the postal laws. I object.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN SCHOOL LANDS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 3570) to amend the act entitled "An act confirming in States and Territories title to land granted by the United States in the aid of common or public schools," approved January 25, 1927.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This is a rather important matter to pass by unanimous consent.

Mr. COLTON. It is important, but I think I can explain the matter, Mr. Speaker. Under the original grants of school-section lands the acts provide that when a reservation or withdrawal was canceled the State would have the right to take the land in fee. When we passed the act of January 25, 1927, we omitted to provide that when the reservation was withdrawn or canceled the State rights would attach. We did not include the word "reservations." This is simply to correct that omission, so that as to lands that were in reservation or withdrawal in 1927 would pass to the State when the reservation was canceled or withdrawn; that is, the rights of the States would then attach.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the act, it has a retroactive effect.

Mr. COLTON. No. Section (b) that we seek to amend will clarify this point. It is possible without this amendment that lands disposed of by the State prior to 1927 would be affected, and this provides where the State has heretofore disposed of this land the provision of section (b) would be amended or modified.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any idea as to the amount of acreage that will be affected by this act?

Mr. COLTON. It would be very difficult to say because it is only on school sections affected. The law granting these lands to States provides that the minerals must be kept by the State for a perpetual school fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no possibility of any conflict in rights developing as a result of this act?

Mr. COLTON. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Take the case cited by the gentleman where the school section lands have been transferred. What rights would the States have under that condition?

Mr. COLTON. The State would sell the land or lease it, but they must reserve to the State for the benefit of the schools all of the minerals.

Mr. STAFFORD. What rights have the States to the school section lands and reservations?

Mr. COLTON. They have the absolute right when the reservation is canceled to all school lands not affected by the act of January 25, 1927. This bill will place all school lands in the same class. That is, the act of January, 1927, was only to lift a cloud that was upon the school lands because of the minerals, and the Federal Government said in effect, "If you will keep the mineral for the benefit of the schools, we will grant them to you." This would place lands affected by the act of January 25, 1927, in the same position as all the rest of the school lands that belong to the States.

Mr. STAFFORD. There can not be any condition developed whereby there will be any conflicting interests if this act is passed?

Mr. COLTON. There can not, so far as I can possibly see.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (c) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act confirming in States and Territories title to land granted by the United States in the aid of common or public schools," approved January 25, 1927, be amended to read as follows:

"(c) That any lands included within the limits of existing reservations of or by the United States, or specifically reserved for water-power purposes, or included in any pending suit or proceeding in the courts of the United States, or subject to or included in any valid application, claim, or right initiated or held under any of the existing laws of the United States, unless or until such reservation, application, claim, or right is extinguished, relinquished, or canceled, and all lands in the Territory of Alaska, are excluded from the provisions of this act."

SEC. 2. This amendatory act shall take effect as of January 25, 1927; and in any case in which a State has selected lieu lands since such date under the act approved February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. 796), and still retains title thereto, such State may, within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this act, relinquish to the United States all right, title, and interest in such lands and shall thereupon be entitled to all the benefits of the act of January 25, 1927, as amended by this act.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 3, strike out "subsection" and insert in lieu thereof "subsections (b) and," and in line 7, after the word "follows," insert the following:

"(b) That the additional grant made by this act is upon the express condition that all sales, grants, deeds, or patents for any of the lands so granted shall hereafter be subject to and contain a reservation to the State of all the coal and other minerals in the lands so sold, granted, deeded, or patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal and other mineral deposits in such lands not heretofore disposed of by the State shall be subject to lease by the State as the State legislature may direct, the proceeds and rentals and royalties therefrom to be utilized for the support or in aid of the common or public schools: Provided, That any lands or minerals hereafter disposed of contrary to the provisions of this act shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property or some part thereof is located."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT PONCA CITY, OKLA.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8075, relating to the construction of a Federal building at Ponca City, Okla.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to obtain a little information. Where are the sessions of the Federal court now held in this city?

Mr. GARBER. As far as my information goes, they are held in the municipal building.

Mr. SCHAFER. But the Federal court is holding sessions in the city?

Mr. GARBER. Oh, yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. And it has been found necessary to have the Federal court hold sessions there in order to clean up the calendar?

Mr. GARBER. That is the requirement of the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections are required. Are there three objections?

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much expense is there attached to this?

Mr. GARBER. None whatever.

Mr. BALDRIGE. There is no additional appropriation?

Mr. GARBER. None whatever.

Mr. SCHAFER. Then how is it that at a time prior to the writing of the letter of March 3, 1932, by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, it was estimated that if this project was carried out and quarters were made available in the Federal building for holding court, the cost of the building would jump from $250,000 to $360,000.

Mr. GARBER. That was on the erroneous assumption that an addition would be made to the building.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman is confident that with the total limit provided in this bill, $250,000, a building can be erected and quarters for holding court located therein, and the gentleman will not come to a subsequent session of Congress asking for $100,000 additional?

Mr. GARBER. I am absolutely certain of that, as shown by the statement of the architects.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the assurances given by the diligent and able gentleman from Oklahoma I shall not object.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that S. 3086, now on the Speaker's table, be substituted for the bill, H. R. 8075, the same being an identical bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the construction of the Federal building at Ponca City, Okla., authorized by an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations (Public, No. 519, 71st Cong.), the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to provide facilities for the holding of terms of the district court for the Western District of Oklahoma, provided that the total cost of said building, including the site, shall not exceed the sum of $250,000 heretofore appropriated and now available for such construction.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

AMENDING ACT RELATING TO STATES OF NORTH DAKOTA, SOUTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, AND WYOMING

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 2396, to amend section 11 of the act approved February 22, 1889 (25 Stat. 676), relating to the admission into the Union of the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Will the gentleman withhold that request for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve the request for a moment.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for an amendment to the enabling act of four States, namely, the two Dakotas, Washington, and Montana. The enabling act provided that considerable grants of land should be made to those several States for school purposes, public buildings, and the like. It provided that none of the land should be sold for less than $10 an acre. Now it transpires that much of the land will not sell for $10 an acre, and it lies there unused because the State can not sell it. The amendment provides that the agricultural land shall not be sold for less than $10 an acre, and that the grazing land may be sold for not less than $5 an acre. Those are the principal changes in the bill.

There are some other changes, providing for the leasing of some of these lands which now do not have that right; and a third provision is that the Government shall issue patents to section 16 and 36, which are commonly called the school sections.

The original act provided that those sections 16 and 36 should go to the State, but it did not provide that they would ever be patented to the States. They can not go to the States until they have been surveyed and determined to be nonmineral. They then sort of clear-list them to the State, without giving patent to them, and it has caused endless confusion about the matter. These are amendments to the enabling acts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am indebted to the gentleman for his explanation, but I wish to consider this bill further. I have gone over it at considerable length but I wish to consider it further, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that it may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TRANSFER OF LINCOLN COUNTY FROM THE COLUMBIA DIVISION TO THE WINCHESTER DIVISION OF THE MIDDLE TENNESSEE JUDICIAL DISTRICT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10277, to transfer Lincoln County from the Columbia division to the Winchester division of the middle Tennessee judicial district.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if this will involve any expense whatever?

Mr. BROWNING. None in the world. Except that it saves the expense of mileage for witnesses. That is about the only difference.

Mr. DYER. It will not have the effect of requiring an additional place in which to hold court in that district?

Mr. BROWNING. Oh, no. Court is already held there. All this bill does is to transfer this county from one division to another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Lincoln County of the Columbia division of the middle district of the State of Tennessee is hereby detached from the Columbia division and attached to and made a part of the Winchester division of the middle district of such State.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

USE OF NET WEIGHTS IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE TRANSACTIONS IN COTTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8559, to provide for the use of net weights in interstate and foreign commerce transactions in cotton, to provide for the standardization of bale covering for cotton, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. DICKSTEIN, Mr. McCORMACK, Mr. HOLMES, and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH objected.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen withhold their objection?

Objection was withheld.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I realize it is almost impossible to pass this very meritorious bill under the rules governing the Consent Calendar. For instance, on Monday the 4th, when this bill was called, the gentlemen—Mr. LANKFORD, Virginia; Mr. GRANFIELD, Massachusetts; and Mr. BLACK, New York—objected to its consideration. To-day we have Mr. DICKSTEIN, Mr. HOLMES, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. MCCORMACK, and Mr. WRIGHT, Georgia, objecting.

I can understand why these gentlemen from Massachusetts, as well as the gentlemen from Norfolk and New York can afford to object to the bill, regardless of its merits, inasmuch as they represent the very hotbed of the Jute Trust. I am at a loss, however, to understand why my good friend Mr. WRIGHT, of Georgia, opposes the bill. Massachusetts is really the seat of the Jute Trust. The Ludlow (jute) Manufacturing Associates have mills there as well as in India. We have the American (jute) Manufacturing Co. in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Jute Mills (Inc.), Norfolk, Va.; Claud H. Hutchison, jute bagging manufacturer, Jonesboro, Ga., located in the new district in which Mr. WRIGHT resides. I expect to quote Mr. Hutchison later on in the extensions of my remarks. He bitterly opposes the bill. I want to quote at this point a telegram from the commissioner of agriculture, Atlanta, Ga.:

Note net weight bill set for a vote to-day. Certainly hope it will pass. It is the lead for us to use cotton bagging instead of jute. I know jute manufacturers are flooding House with telegrams to effect that farmers do not want bill. They are wrong. Cotton is docked 30 pounds for tare. Net weight bill would create a demand for cotton in this country.

I especially want to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GRANFIELD] in his extension of remarks following his objection to the bill known as the net weight bill on April 4, as well as to give to Members real information thereon. Practically every statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts is a misstatement made either through lack of knowledge of the provisions of the bill or for the lack of information on this most important subject.

First. He states:

I object to the bill because it by indirection discriminates against "jute."

There is not a word or line in the bill that prevents the use of jute for covering cotton if jute is manufactured in such weight as to come within the maximum tare allowance, 16 pounds, including patches.

Second. He states:

The bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to establish the materials to be used in bale covering.

The bill authorizes the Secretary to study the materials used in bale covering and from time to time to establish "standards for materials, size, and weight of covering." The bill does not say anything about establishing materials.

Third. He states:

The bill as amended and so forth.

The bill has not been amended, as it has not had a chance to be considered on the floor of the House.

Fourth. He states:

Cotton has been wrapped in jute for years because of its serviceableness.

I quote from a statement made by William T. Free, American consul, Bremen, Germany:

I witnessed the unloading of a steamer carrying 11,000 bales of American cotton. The "jute" wrapping was, in most instances, badly torn and ragged, which gave the cotton a bad appearance and exposed it to damage.

Let us see what Mr. E. H. L. Mummehoff, vice consul general, Hamburg, Germany, says about its service:

A tour of the docks for the purpose of this report, the writer walked into the cotton section, where the floor was strewn with quantities of loose cotton. In a corner of the building a great quantity of loose cotton. In consequence of the "poor baling," the loss from farm to factory must be enormous in the course of a year of American cotton.

After considerable testing on the part of the Agricultural Department here is what the department states:

The lightest-weight "cotton bagging" thus far tested is superior to 2-pound "jute" bagging and to the burlap covering commonly used on the Egyptian bale, which has the reputation of being the most attractive covering now entering the world's markets.

Fifth. He states:

Jute is used because of its "suitableness."

Let's see what the Department of Agriculture says about this:

The physical test, including the breaking-strength test and the shipping test, indicate that from the viewpoint of durability, protection to the cotton, and neatness, "cotton bagging" is a more "suitable" covering for American cotton bale than is "jute."

May I state that no other cotton country in the world uses the type of "jute" that we use in covering cotton, not even India, the second largest cotton-producing country and where "jute" is produced.

Sixth. He states:

If this bill passes it will cost the already overburdened farmers $5,400,000.

I quote from an editorial carried in the Boston Transcript April 2, 1932:

In the substitution of cotton for jute covering it has been estimated that the additional cost would run to $7,500,000.

Naturally the representatives of and the jute interest would be interested in what this would do to the farmers of the South. Let us see what some of the friends of the legislation and those who are in a position to give real facts about what it will do to the farmer say. I quote from a statement coming from the Department of Agriculture:

It is estimated that something like 200,000 bales of low-grade cotton would be required on the average to cover the American cotton crop with a light-weight "cotton bagging." It is thought that the consumption of 200,000 bales would have approximately the same effect upon price level as a reduction of that amount in available supply; that the rise in price might amount to as much as one-half cent per pound or $2.50 per bale. On an average crop of 15,000,000 bales at $2.50 this would amount to $27,500,000.

Listen to Mr. Harvey Jordon, president American Cotton Association, Atlanta, Ga.:

The annual losses incurred by the growers and spinners of American cotton as a result of continued adherence to our "primitive" and "wasteful" system of baling cotton amount to at least $150,000,000 annually.

His estimate includes savings by high-density gin compression which is covered in my bill H. R. 112. I quote from William I. Holt, a representative of the Department of Agriculture in Europe:

I think it is agreed that what is needed now and what would result in greatest benefit to producers and everybody in the trade is "net-weight" contracts which discourage putting more covering on than is actually necessary to protect the bale. Anything in excess of that is an unnecessary charge upon the industry and an economic loss, and for the past 20 years tables have been compiled about it to show a loss ranging all the way from $6,000,000 to $15,000,000.

Mr. Henry T. Crosby, editor of the Texas Weekly, states:

About one-third of the American cotton is produced in Texas; consequently about one-third of the loss that results from the "obsolete" and "wasteful" marketing practice is borne by Texas. This loss, according to the Government figures, amounts to millions annually.

Mr. Pat Daniel, Austin, Tex., states:

The present arbitrary trade rule of deducting 5 or 6 per cent (30 pounds per bale) from the gross weight of cotton for bagging and ties is costing "producers" approximately $30,000,000 annually, a sum equal to the amount set aside by the Federal Farm Board to finance the entire cotton crop.

ACTUAL SAVINGS BASED ON FIGURES LARGELY SECURED FROM A PRELIMINARY REPORT ISSUED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FEBRUARY, 1928

(a) Taring cotton in Europe (say 80 per cent cotton tared) at 15 cents per bale, 7,500,000 bales exported	$1,125,000
(b) Ocean freights difference between 16 pounds and 30 pounds, 7,500,000 bales at 65 cents per hundred pounds	682,500
(c) Domestic freights difference between 16 pounds and 24 pounds, mill rule, 7,500,000 bales at $1.10 per hundred pounds	660,000

(d) Insurance, commission, discount, etc., say, 2 per cent on difference between 16 and 30 pounds on 7,500,000 bales of cotton selling at 10 cents per pound	210,000
(e) Insurance, commission, discounts, exchange, etc., say, 1 per cent on difference between 16 and 24 pounds on 7,500,000 bales of cotton selling at 10 cents per pound	60,000
(f) Usual increase in price-consuming 200,000 bales at one-fourth cent per pound crop of 15,000,000 bales	18,750,000
(g) Extra price because of neat package in comparison to old ragged jute bale, 15,000,000 bales, at 25 cents per bale	3,750,000
(h) Garnetted cotton bagging waste value over garnetted jute, 7,500,000 bales	1,500,000

STATEMENT OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The cotton shipped to Germany and back to the United States to test "cotton" and "jute" bagging was stripped on its return to get the value of both types of bagging for reuse value. The garnetted cotton bagging waste was stapled and found to have a staple length of from one-half to seven-eighths inch. This bagging was originally manufactured out of good ordinary cotton having a length of seven-eighths inch. It was found to have a value of from 10 to 12 cents per pound against 15½ cents, price of good ordinary cotton at that time.

GARNETTED JUTE BAGGING

Jute bagging is similarly torn apart after use and respun, but the value of garnetted jute is appreciably less than that of garnetted cotton. Its reuse value depends largely upon a demand for rewoven bagging, wadding, packing, and paper stock.

1. Loss in cotton sticking to jute bagging and jute fiber sticking to cotton when stripped for manufacturing, estimated from one-half to 3 pounds, on 15,000,000 bales, at 10 cents per bale, $1,500,000.

Listen to the statement of Mr. S. Odenheimer, president Lane Cotton Mills Co., New Orleans, La., given in the hearings:

Cotton covered with jute bagging entails a loss of from 1 to 3 pounds per bale by sticking to the bagging and the open weave not protecting the cotton.

INTERNATIONAL COTTON COMMITTEE, TEXTILE-PRODUCING COUNTRIES OF EUROPE

Among the advantages for cotton bagging is the elimination of the difficulty frequently encountered of spinning American cotton when there are intermixed with it fibers of jute material now commonly used for bale covering of American cotton.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

From 10 bales of jute-covered bales of cotton shipped to Germany stripped we recovered 12 pounds of lint cotton.

In the preliminary report of the Department of Agriculture we find the following:

From this study it seems evident that—

(1) Cotton bagging may be manufactured from the lowest grade and staple length of cotton.

(2) Decided economies in transportation and insurance cost would result from the use of a lighter-weight bagging.

(3) Cotton lint does not adhere to cotton bagging so tenaciously as it does to jute bagging.

(4) The lighter-weight "cotton" bagging thus far tested is superior to 2-pound "jute" bagging and to the burlap covering commonly used on the Egyptian bale.'

(5) Cotton bagging makes a respectable looking package in comparison to the disgraceful jute-covered bale.

(6) Fire hazard is practically eliminated.

(7) Country damage will be reduced by half.

(8) It withstands cotton hooks better.

(9) It protects cotton better.

TAKEN FROM HEARINGS ON NET WEIGHT BILL

Mr. Bartee, cotton merchant, testifying:

Mr. SWANK. If the bill was enacted into law, 250,000 bales would be required to make cotton bagging and this cotton would have to be manufactured in the mills in this country?

Mr. BARTEE. Yes, sir. They do not consider the crop contains a certain amount of low-grade and a certain amount of high-grade cotton. The low grades are what pull down the price, the overproduction of low grades.

Mr. FULMER. In other words, the low grades usually fix the price of the high grades?

Mr. BARTEE. The low grades pull down the price of the high grades.

Mr. Cheatham, Department of Agriculture, testifying:

Mr. FULMER. The lowest grades of cotton or maybe the best type of linters could be used for manufacturing cotton bagging?

Mr. CHEATHAM. Yes, sir; linters and card waste, which would reduce the cost.

Mr. William I. Holt, representing the Department of Agriculture in Europe, testifying:

Mr. HOLT. The amount of tare put on American cotton is twice as much as put on Egyptian, African, and East Indian cotton. The American cotton, the condition of it when it arrives in Europe, is really considered a disgrace. It is far below the condition of any other cotton.

Mr. Odenheimer, Lane Cotton Mills, testifying:

Mr. ANDRESEN. It costs the shipper something, does it not, to put on 9 pounds of patches?

Mr. ODENHEIMER. Oh, yes; it cost some 2 or 3 cents per pound for which, if cotton is selling for 20 cents, he gets 20 cents per pound, or a profit of $1.53 per bale.

Claud H. Hutchison, jute manufacturer, testifying:

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Hutchison, you used to run a good big farm yourself?

Mr. HUTCHISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FULMER. You are not farming now?

Mr. HUTCHISON. No.

Mr. ASWELL. Why?

Mr. HUTCHISON. I can not make any money out of it.

Mr. ADKINS. The motive behind your opposition to this bill is prompted by the profits the importers of jute and the manufacturers of jute bagging get out of that individually, is it not?

Mr. HUTCHISON. Of course, they make some profit.

Mr. ADKINS. What is the motive of opposing this legislation?

Mr. HUTCHISON. Well, I am opposing it because I do not think the farmer would benefit.

Mr. ADKINS. Many come here trying to shed crocodile tears over the farmer. But let us get down to the case. You know and I know that the cost of bagging is charged back to the farmer. The sole motive behind this bill is not what the cotton bagging is going to cost the farmer, but that it will cut out the profits of the importer of jute and the manufacturer of jute bagging; and that is the fly in the ointment, is it not?

I have had a great many Members stating that the farmers get or they believe they get paid for bagging and ties in selling gross weight. I have bought and sold thousands of bales of cotton and I know that this is not true. Listen to the following statements given before our committee.

Mr. E. A. BEVERIDGE (cotton specialist). We have been so long selling cotton on gross weight in this country that we think it is the only way to sell cotton. But it is unscientific, and though it appears that a buyer is paying the farmer on gross weight of bale at the price of cotton, you will find on analyzing it that he is doing nothing of the kind as he has simply "lowered his price" to offset the tare on the bale.

Mr. J. M. Bowen, spot cotton merchant, New Orleans, La.:

The tare rules in the Carolinas, in New England, Liverpool, and other points are all different. So far as the American farmer is concerned, I feel that these rules having been made by cotton merchants and mills at the points that receive the cotton naturally favor the receiving points and operate against the farmer.

Mr. C. B. Howard testifying:

Mr. ANDRESEN. Who stands the loss of the tare when it is sold in export?

Mr. HOWARD. This unnecessary tare, naturally, in the last analysis comes out of the price of cotton.

Mr. Harvey Jordon, Atlanta, Ga.:

American cotton baling is so primitive and wasteful, causing unnecessary losses of millions of dollars annually in handling, which must come out of the pockets of the growers.

Mr. John F. Jinkens, New Orleans cotton merchant:

Mr. FULMER. Do you think it is bad practice to allow 30 pounds tare when we do not need that much?

Mr. JINKENS. The buyer pays less for it and the mill that buys that bale with 30 pounds tare on it is buying the cotton just a little cheaper.

Mr. S. B. Locke, cotton merchant, Oklahoma:

Mr. LOCKE. Answering the point you bring out, I quite agree that in the final analysis when the mill buys a bale of cotton they know that they are not going to consume tare and they "figure" accordingly.

Mr. FULMER. And when the farmer gets gross-weight price, naturally he is getting a price less the amount "figured off" by the mill for tare?

Mr. LOCKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. Locke also represents the American Cotton Shippers Association and very strongly opposes the bill:

Mr. J. M. Levy, cotton commission merchant, New Orleans, La.:

A bale of cotton weighing 500 pounds is allowed to carry when delivered in New Orleans market, approximately 26½ pounds (9 pounds ties and 17½ pounds bagging), the only deduction or exception made to this rule is that a buyer will pay a higher price, ranging from 8 to 15 cents, depending on the price of cotton.

If the cotton is offered for sale with 12 pounds of bagging, 21 pounds bagging and ties (as put on by farmer), this enables the buyer to patch on more bagging and consequently makes the cotton heavier and more valuable to the buyer.

Mr. J. M. Bowen, member Spot Cotton Merchants' Association, New Orleans, La.:

There is no question that the disreputable appearance of our cotton bales has given American cotton a "black eye" in Europe. There is not a doubt that legitimate exporters suffer from excess tare claims. Also, there is another thing that gives the American bale of cotton and the American shipper a "black eye" and that is the "fights" an exporter has with his customers over tare claims.

May I state for the information of Members that, in estimating losses to the cotton industry, I have not taken into consideration the facts contained in Mr. Bowen's statement. Thousands of claims come back to the exporter that have to be paid, all of which is another charge on the producer. My friends, I agree with Henry T. Crosby, editor the Texas Weekly, wherein he states:

Farmers, spinners, cotton shippers, and the Department of Agriculture have all agreed for years that a "great saving" would be made in selling cotton on "net weight," yet nothing is being done about it.

Mr. Locke, representing the American Cotton Shippers Association in his report to a convention of the members of the association made the following report:

Your committee does feel that it is our duty to so change existing "tare rules" as will permit the use of lighter forms of covering as they are developed, as, under existing tare rules of both domestic and export markets, lighter forms of covering are practically prohibited. We believe the time has come for us to give this careful consideration.

Yet, Mr. Locke and his jute-patching cohorts have been and are now fighting my bill with money and unsound propaganda. Mr. Locke states:

Leave it to us.

We have been leaving it to "us" for the past 100 years and farmers are still being robbed out of millions annually.

THESE PEOPLE ARE NOT IN THE JUTE BUSINESS

Mr. H. Robinson, secretary, the Manchester Cotton Association, Liverpool:

After all the talk and agitation which has been carried on for years, no headway has been made in the matter of securing a neater bale of cotton from the United States. The present "untidy and partly" covered American bale, without question, results in "heavy losses" not only to the consumer but more especially to the "producer," from this "inefficient covering" of the bales and the South "suffers in the prices" they obtain for their cotton in competition with other countries whose cotton is packed efficiently with no resultant loss. We extend our full support to the movement for having American cotton bales covered with "cotton fabric." This committee has made an appeal to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., to urge the adoption of cotton bagging material. The practice of sale of cotton by gross weight now in vogue is "unsound and inefficient."

Walter D. Hines, ex-president New Orleans Cotton Exchange:

Undoubtedly American cotton should be sold on "net weight" like any other cotton. So much has been written on this subject that it seems unnecessary to repeat the reasons. The most potent one is the "great economic saving" that would be made which naturally would be shared in by "producer and consumer" alike. The people who would lose "most" by it are the manufacturers who sell the "bagging now used," which is much "heavier than required" because of antiquated customs and rules.

E. A. Beveridge, with E. A. Pierce & Co., New York City:

If this bill is adopted, this and future generations of cotton planters will "rise up" and call you blessed.

Talmadge, commissioner of agriculture, Atlanta, Ga.:

Jute manufacturers are flooding the House with telegrams to the effect that farmers do not want the "net weight" bill, are wrong. Cotton now docked with 30-pound tare net weight bill would give opportunity for use of cotton to cover cotton instead of jute, making an "additional demand for cotton" in this country.

San Antonio Express, issued June 28, 1931:

Preparing a bale (with cotton bagging) might cost a few cents more than if the customary "jute" bagging were used, but the transaction surely would "profit the farmer" in the end.

S. Odenheimer, Lane Cotton Mills Co., New Orleans, La.:

The cotton grower and cotton spinner both, are in full accord with this bill, and I see no reason why Congress should not readily pass it.

J. C. Horton, commissioner, Jackson, Miss.:

I am very much in sympathy with this legislation. Will come to Washington in the near future to personally interview Members of Congress and the Senate from this State.

U. Benton Blalock, president American Cotton Cooperative Association, Raleigh, N. C.:

At our meeting of the board of directors of the American Cotton Cooperative Association in New Orleans, December 7 and 8, 1931, we passed a resolution indorsing this movement and pledging our support to it.

J. E. McDonald, commissioner, Austin, Tex.:

I want to assure you as commissioner of agriculture of Texas I will give your measure every bit of support possible.

Howard D. Gore, Acting Secretary Department of Agriculture, December 26, 1924:

In regard to the question of legislation regulating the tare on cotton, our people are wholly in sympathy with the idea of providing adequate legislation that will take care of this "difficult" question.

W. M. McLaurine, secretary American Cotton Manufacturing Association, Charlotte, N. C.:

We are very much interested in your bill and want to do everything in our power to assist you.

Edwin G. Seibels, cotton, fire, and marine insurance, Columbia, S. C.:

The method of "baling" and handling American cotton is the "worst in the world" and causes "untold loss annually" to the American cotton farmer.

B. W. Kilgore, chairman American Cotton Growers' Association, Raleigh, N. C.:

I do not know of any one thing that would be more valuable at this time than "net weight" in the sale of cotton.

T. O. Walton, president Agricultural College, Texas:

Why the farmers of the South have not insisted long ago that the practice of charging "30 pounds" of tare against each bale of cotton should be discontinued has puzzled me through the years. The bill should be pressed vigorously and I hope every southern Congressman and Senator will assist you in the passage of your bill.

D. W. Watkins, director extension service Clemson Agricultural College, South Carolina:

The iniquitous system which permits exporters to attach 30-pound tare per bale for foreign markets but only permits growers to use 21 pounds tare per bale is unworthy of a people claiming to be engaged in honest commercial enterprise.

Louis B. Farley, financing and insurance, Montgomery, Ala.:

I am advised that there are certain bills pending in Congress providing for the better baling and regulating the tare on cotton. These are "important bills" from the South's viewpoint, cotton being the greatest and most valuable of its agricultural products.

E. C. EVANS, COTTON FARMER, ELLOREE, S. C.

I sold three bales of cotton to-day in Orangeburg, S. C., and 5 pounds were knocked off for tare on each bale. All cotton sold here to-day was dealt with the same way; therefore, the farmers lost $100 in one day. Please investigate this matter.

I hope that the information given you at this time will not only convince you that this is a very worthy piece of legislation but will create within you, especially Members from the cotton South, a real fighting spirit for justice for millions of unorganized cotton farmers and that you will give me your hearty cooperation to the final passage of H. R. 8559.

In closing I want to insert the following:

A COTTON FARMER'S CREED

I believe in cotton, my money crop, the provider of my family, and the payer of my taxes; its by-product, cottonseed—planted by me, born of the soil, suffered under weather, pests, and low prices, often replanted to grow and bear King Cotton, who is crucified on the cross of neglect, dead and buried under depression. He descended into the hell of surplus, but will arise and ascend to the throne of crops, from thence to rule over our banks, schools, public institutions, and people.

I believe in the wearing of cotton, the use of cotton and cottonseed products, thereby resurrecting my dead prosperity and bringing welfare to me in the years to come.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. DICKSTEIN, Mr. McCORMACK, Mr. HOLMES, and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH objected.

WAR-TIME COMMISSIONED RANK TO RETIRED WARRANT OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 460, to give war-time commissioned rank to retired warrant officers and enlisted men.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman withhold his objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will.

Mr. KVALE. What is the gentleman's objection to this measure? Will he state it?
